ANTICHRIST.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

Is the Man of sin the Antichrist of which John in his epistles makes mention? How shall we decide? Shall we appeal to Webster, or to John? Webster defines anti, "Against, opposite, contrary, or in place of." If we are to take Webster as our guide, we can find antichrist anywhere, where Christ is opposed, in the Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish church; but if we follow John we are definitely informed who antichrist is. Says John, "Many deceivers are entered into the world who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist."—2 John 7. This definition should be our guide, if we want to arrive at the truth, and not to apply the word anti in a general sense.

Again: John says, "Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists, whereby we know it is the last time." Again: "Every spirit which confesseth not that Jesus the Messiah hath come in the flesh is not of God; but he is the false Messiah of whom ye have heard that he cometh, and now is he already in the world."—(Syriac).

We might as well doubt the truth of all John has written as to doubt his testimony on this point. Then to apply "the antichrist" to any other character than is here defined is not warranted by Scripture; and if we depart from this, it leads to confusion and vain speculation. The definition given by John of antichrist cannot be made to fit the Pope, the great opposer of Christ and his church; for he confesses that Christ has come in the flesh, and it is one of the prominent doctrines of the Catholic church.

Again: John says, He, the antichrist, is already in the world; which proves, conclusively, that the antichrist is not the Man of sin, spoken of by Paul, as that Man of sin was not yet developed. That he refers to antichrist when he says, "The mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who letteth, or hindreth, will let, or hinder, until he be taken out of the way, and then shall that wicked be revealed," etc.

I shall endeavor to show that "the antichrist" has had its day, and that, too, before the Man of sin could have his place in history as a matter of prophecy. I am well aware that to introduce anything so entirely different from those opinions which have been introduced to the church heretofore, will be looked upon by many as the Babylonians looked upon Cyrus when he turned the channel of the Euphrates to get his army into Babylon. My object is not to get into Babylon, but, if possible, to get out of it, where we have been long enough, for there has been nothing but confusion of tongues on this subject.

Taking it for granted that John's definition of antichrist is correct, the next thing to settle is, was he manifested in his day, or did he speak prophetically? Says history, "Many among the Gentile proselytes refused to believe that a celestial spirit, an undivided portion of the first essence had been personally united with a mass of impure and contaminated flesh; and in their zeal for his divinity they piously abjured the humanity of Christ. While his blood was still recent on Mount Calvary, the Docetes, a numerous and learned sect of Asiatics, invented the phantastic system, which was afterward propogated by Marcionites, the Manichæans, and the various names of the Gnostic heresy. They denied the truth and authenticity of the gospels as far as they related to the conception of Mary, the birth of Christ, and the thirty years that preceded his ministry. He first appeared on the banks of the Jordan in the form of a perfect manhood; but it was a form only, and not a substance, a human figure, created by the hand of Omnipotence, to imitate the faculties and actions of a man, and to impose a perpetual illusion on the senses of his friends and enemies. Articulate sounds vibrated on the ears of his disciples; but the image that was impressed upon their optic nerve, eluded the more stubborn evidence of the touch, and they enjoyed the spiritual, not the corporeal presence of the Son of God. The rage of the Jews was idly wasted against an impassive phantom, and the mystic scenes of the passion and death, the resurrection and ascension of Christ were represented on the theatre of Jerusalem, for the benefit of mankind." —Gibbons, chap. xlvii.

I make this long quotation to show that when John said antichrist was already in the world, he was not speaking prophetically, but of things then being fulfilled before his eyes. Gibbons, in noticing these facts, quotes 1 John to show that this class of teachers were the ones he referred to, and called them antichrist. Mosheim and other historians not only quote John, but refer to Paul, and call them the "mystery of iniquity" that was to work in his (John's) day.

It is evident that John did not intend to teach that antichrist was a person that would arise and claim that he was Christ, as some contend. Neither does he give us the least hint that antichrist should have his beginning in his day, and then in the end of this dispensation make his re-appearance to lead and deceive the whole world, as some believe.

I now purpose to trace the history of antichrist until history records his death blow. These antichrists, serpent-like, crept into the church by their subtlety, and by their learned and sophistic reasoning, "until," says history, "they made the plainest teaching of Christ to be a mystery," that "the church was filled with the mystery of iniquity." Again says history: "These Oriental, or Platonic doctrines became the prominent doctrines of the church, and were the cause of much controversy whether this philosophy was of utility in the Christian church; but the cause of philosophy triumphed. This victory was attributed to Origen, who had been instructed in the Platonic schools. His method of interpreting the Scriptures became universal among Christians. He opened a secure retreat for all sorts of errors, which brought into the church the nobility, bishops and archbishops, until their tyranny became intolerable and overbearing."—Mosheim ivth cent.

If this history does not bring us to the falling away spoken of by Paul, then the church never has fallen. "This victory is attributed to Origen," one of the so-called "fathers," whom Lord King says, "denied the resurrection," and "worshipped demons, and looked upon Christ as a demon of superior order." "About this time," says history, "Arius began to publish his doctrine. He condemned prayers for the dead. His great object was to bring back Christianity to its primitive state." —Mosheim.

We see by these facts that we have come to a point in history where these antichrists are concentrating, and have got the church under their control, and "archbishops" are showing their "tyranny" in an "unbearable" state. We have now come to the time when the strength or authority of these antichrists must be made manifest by the banishment of the Arian heretics, which took place A. D. 390, at a Council called at Milan, when they were banished, and their property confiscated.

This conflict with the Arians, or Trinity controversy, was succeeded by a dispute between Antichrist and the Man of sin. Says history, "I have already observed that the disputes of the TRINITY were succeeded by those of the INCARNATION. Alike scandalous to the church and pernicious to the State, still more durable in their effects."—Gibbons. This dispute was about the "Incarnation." Apollinaris, bishop of Laodicea, was chosen as the champion of those holding the antichrist doctrine, who "proclaimed to the world one incarnate nature of Christ, whose body came from heaven, and was incorruptible, and was absorbed into the essence of the Deity." The other party claimed that Christ had "two natures." "That he was born of the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God, according to humanity, one and the same Jesus Christ, the Son of God the Lord, and only begotten in two natures." (The creed of Catholic, established at Chalcedon in 451). Can it be denied for a moment that the mystery of iniquity, that was to work in Paul's day, was the antichrist that denied that Christ had come in the flesh, and that it was the hindering power which had to be removed to give place for the Man of sin, or Daniel's abomination which was to make desolate? Here are two parties arrayed one against the other.

Let us pursue the history a little farther. We are told by historians that these contentions "shook the empire from centre to circumference;" and finally Theodosius, the emperor, called a Council at Ephesus, in 431, to settle these contentions. The Council continued for three months, and the emperor was obliged to send a "military force" to prevent the disputants from devouring each other; and finally he was obliged to dissolve the Council in these words, "God is my witness that I am not the author of this confusion. His providence will discern and punish the guilty. Return to your provinces; and may your private virtue repair the mischief and scandal of your meeting." They returned to their provinces, but the contention increased with more violence, and finally another Council was called at Ephesus, in 449, at which the antichrist, or "one nature," prevailed, and they said, "May those who divide Christ be divided with the sword; may they be hewn in pieces; may they be burnt alive, were the charitable wishes of this Christian synod."

Thus we see, as far down the history of the church as 449, that John's antichrist is still combating with the Man of sin. Theodosius, the then reigning emperor, suddenly demised, and was succeeded by Marcian, a rigid Catholic, who was persuaded by Pope Leo to call a Council at Chalcedon, in 451. At this Council 630 bishops assembled, and over 500 of them were Catholics. At this Council the "one incarnate nature," or antichrist, was condemned. Says history, "In the name of the fourth general Council, the Christ in one person, but in two natures, was first announced to the Catholic world; an invisible line was drawn between the heresy of Apollinaris and the faith of St. Cyril, and the road to paradise, a bridge as sharp as a razor, was suspended over the abyss by the master hand of the theological artist."

Without entering into details of the doings of this Council, I will give one extract from history to show that antichrist received its mortal wound and expired about 77 years afterwards. "At this Council," says history, "all the heretics were anathematized; especially those that affirmed that the body of Christ came from heaven, not having been truly born of the Virgin Mary; and those that denied the humanity of Christ."—Hewet's History of the World.

The Emperor Marcian was the first Catholic emperor who reigned seven years, and was succeeded by Leo the Great, who also was of the Catholic faith, who enforced the decree of Chalcedon. Says history, "During the Orthodox reign of Marcian and Leo, those pious emperors enforced with arms and edicts the symbol of their faith, and it was declared, by the conscience or honors of five hundred bishops, that the decrees of the Synod of Chalcedon might be lawfully supported with blood."

I cannot but call attention here to what Daniel says: "Arms shall stand on his part, and they shall take away the daily (abomination) and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength; and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." How beautifnlly this fits. That which hindered (the antichrist) was removed, by force of arms, to give place for the "Man of Sin." We shall see this more clearly in what transpired afterwards.

After the death of Leo the Great, Zeno succeded to the throne, who endeavored to steer between the two parties. Says history, "The disorders of thirty years at length produced the famous Henaticon of the empire of Zeno, which was in his reign and in that of Anastasius, signed by all the bishops of the East, under the penalty of degradation and exile if they refused or infringed this salutary and fundamental law." Anastasius was the last emperor that supported the antichrist in their struggle. He was the first emperor that was excommunicated by the Pope, and was finally compelled to indorse the Chalcedonic creed, through the force of arms, in 518. Says history, "Vitalian, who with an army (arms shall stand on his part), of Huns and Bulgarians, fo: the most part idolators, declared himself the champion of the Catholic faith. In this pious rebellion he depopulated Thrace, besieged Constantinople, exterminated 65,000 of his fellow Christians, till he obtained the recall of the bishops, the satisfaction of the Pope, and the establishment of the Council of Chalcedon, an Orthodox treaty, reluctantly signed by the dying Anastasius, and more faithfully performed by the uncle of Justinian. And such was the event of the first religious wars which were waged in the name and by the disciples of the God of peace."—Gibbons chap. xlvii.

I have given only a few quotations from history to show that what many are yet looking for has become history years in the past, and likewise to show that the antichrist and the Man of sin are not the same, but deadly opposed to each other, which history fully confirms. If this be the truth on the subject, we have nothing to look for in the future but the destruction of the Man of sin, by the brightness of Christ's coming. I would say, if any one can show that the views here presented are not true, according to John and Paul, let them show it, for it is truth only that can benefit any man, for it is the truth that sanctifieth.

THE SEED OF ABRAHAM.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

THE gospel pertains to the kingdom which was prepared when the world was made, and which is now in rebellion. Its final purpose is to bless all the nations of the earth, and thus put the kingdom in order. The means by which it is to be done are the seed of Abraham. The nations of the earth are composed of earthy people. The seed of Abraham, when perfected, will be composed of heavenly people, made such by being raised from the dead.

The seed will consist of Christ and those who are Christ's. They will jointly inherit the position, and the work promised to the seed of Abraham. I will now inquire,

1. What will the Seed do?—They will occupy a position of power, and reign over all the nations of the earth, and thus bless them.

Gen. xxii. 17, 18, "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." In this passage the seed will have power over his enemies to subdue them, and bless all nations.

Psa. ii. 6–12, "My Son (Jesus Christ), shall be king upon my holy hill of Zion, and I will give to him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. He shall break them with a rod of iron, and shall dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Therefore kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish." "O ye kings and judges of the earth, be instructed, and serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling, for blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

The sentiment of this Psalm seems to be this, that the seed will have power over his enemies, who do not become reconciled to him. But the assurance is given that those who do become reconciled to him, and who are instructed to serve the Lord, shall not perish, but that all such shall be blessed. The position of the seed is such that he can and will curse those who persist in rebellion, and that he can and will bless those who submit to his reign.

Psa. xxii. 27, 28. In this passage the Lord, the Seed, is governor among the nations. On account of this fact all the ends of the world, and all the kindreds of the nations shall turn and worship before him. In this way the Seed blesses them.

Psa. lxvii., "Thou wilt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth." This is what the Seed will do; and it is because of this work that all nations will prosper, and all the people will praise him, and all the ends of the earth will fear him.

Psa. lxxii., "He shall judge the poor of the people; he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." Here, again, we have the work of the seed. He will judge the people, and of the people whom he judges, he will break in pieces the oppressors, and save the poor of the people, and the children of the needy." This will bless the nations. "All nations will serve him. His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun, and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed, and the whole earth shall be filled with his glory."

Isai. ii. 4, "He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people." This is what the Seed will do; and what will be the result? "They shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and they shall learn war no more." And thus they will be blessed.

Isai. ix, 6, 7. "The Seed shall occupy the throne of David, and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and he will establish judgment and justice in the kingdom forever." Here we have the same position, and the same work affirmed of the Seed, with the same results, blessing.

Isai. xi. 1, 9, "With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity, for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." Again we have the same position, and the same work for the Seed, and the same results. "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

Jer. xxiii. 5, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Here we have the same position and work for the Seed; and the same result follows. "In the days of his reign Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." Zech. xiv. 9, "The Lord shall be king over all the earth." This tells us what the Seed will do; He will reign over all the earth. The results of this reign will be, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts. Luke i. 33, 72, 73, "He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; He will perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham." This promise and oath tell us what the Seed will do. Rom. xv. 12, He shall be raised up to reign over the Gentiles. He will reign over the house of Jacob; and he will also reign over the Gentiles. Matt. xiii. 41, He will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity. This work must be done, in order to bless. 1 Cor. xv. 25, 28, He must reign over his enemies, till they are put under his feet, and until all things shall be subdued unto him. Rev. xv. 4, The king of nations will make manifest his judgments, the result of which will be, that all nations shall come and worship before him.

These testimonies confirm the statement in our text. They also tell us just what the Seed will do to bless the nations, and to fulfil the promise made unto Abraham, and which God confirmed unto him by an oath, saying, In thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

If these testimonies do not tell us what the Seed will do, where shall we go to find an answer to our question? Surely, if these Scriptures do not answer our question, fully and definitely, we shall look in vain for an answer to it in the Bible. What, then, will the Seed do, to bless the nations? He will reign over them, and establish judgment and justice in the earth. He will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity, and subdue all things unto God; and thus bless all the nations of the earth.

2. When will the Seed begin to bless the nations?—Christ, the head of the Seed, was raised from the dead to sit on David's throne. Those that are Christ's are also the seed, the members of his body. They must be raised from the dead as he was, to sit down with him on his throne, that they may have power over the nations. The whole seed must be perfected before this work can begin. Christ has gone into heaven to receive the kingdom and to return. When he returns, having received the kingdom, he will raise from the dead those found worthy of him, and change the righteous living, and give them a position in the kingdom, in which they can bless the nations. Then the Seed will begin to bless the nations. Isai. xxxv. 4, "Say unto them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you." Then the work of blessing will commence.

Isai. xl. 10, "Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him, and his work before him." He will begin to bless the nations at that time.

Isai. lxvi. 15, 23, "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots, like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire, and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many." As the result of the Lord's pleading with all flesh, "It shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." This work of blessing began when the Lord came to plead with all flesh.

Dan. vii. 14, "And there was given to him," that came with the clouds of heaven, "dominion, glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, might serve him." These people will not serve the Lord until he comes. When the Lord comes, dominion will be given unto him over these people, that they may serve him. The work of blessing will commence at his coming.

Matt. xxv. 31, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." When he comes, he comes to reign; the blessings of his reign begin when he comes.

Acts iii. 19, 21. Christ will remain in heaven until the times of the restitution of all things. When he does come, he will commence the work of the restitution. All the blessings comprehended in this work lie beyond the coming of the Lord.

1 Cor. xv. 22, 28, "As all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive; but every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." At which time Christ will begin to reign over his enemies, and to subdue all things unto God. Those, in this passage, who are Christ's, are also the seed of Abraham, and joint heirs with Christ to the same promise. They will inherit jointly his position and his work; but they will not be made alive till he comes. Hence the seed of Abraham cannot begin to bless the nations, or inherit jointly the promise, until they are made alive at his coming.

These testimonies are conclusive, as to the time when the seed will begin to bless the nations. The seed will begin this work when Christ comes and begins to reign.

3. How long will the Seed continue to bless the nations?—Psa. lxxii. 5, 7, 17, "His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun, and men shall be blessed in him. All nations shall call him blessed. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. They shall fear him as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations."

Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4, 29, 36, 37, "I have made a covenant with my chosen. I have sworn unto David my servant. Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. His seed will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven."

Isai. ix. 7, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever."

Dan. vii. 14, 27, "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." It is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.

Luke i. 33, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Rev. xxii. 5. After the new heaven and the new earth appear, and the new Jerusalem is established in the new earth, and the throne of God and the Lamb are in it, and when the nations shall walk in the light of it, and their glory and honor shall be brought into it, and when the river of life shall flow, and the tree of life shall grow upon its banks, and after the nations of the earth shall have been healed by the leaves of the tree of life, so that there shall be no more sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, nor death, nor curse; then, after the former things are passed away, and all things are thus made new, then, it is said with great emphasis, that "they shall reign forever and ever."

How long, then, will the seed of Abraham, Christ and those that are Christ's, being made the heavenly by the resurrection from the dead—I say, how long will they bless all the nations of the earth, which are earthy by ruling over them? The answer is, Through the endless future.

If the language I have quoted from the Bible, does not sustain the points made in this article, how shall language be framed to do it? If these three propositions are true, then everything that denies their truthfulness is not true. If it is true, that the seed of Abraham, when made the heavenly, by being raised from the dead, shall bless all the nations of the earth, which are earthy, by ruling over them; and if it is also true that this reign over them will continue without end, then we have, in the gospel of the kingdom, a complete outline history of the world from its creation through the endless future.

By it, we may understand, definitely, the position, the character, the business, and the present and future condition of its earthy subjects forever. We may also understand with equal definiteness, the present and future position, character, business, and condition of the seed of Abraham, now as heirs, and beyond the resurrection as heavenly rulers in the kingdom forever.

By the gospel of the kingdom, we may also understand and appreciate more fully the immutability of God's arrangements for the kingdom when he made the world, and how undeviatingly the provisions in the gospel are adapted to carry out his original purpose.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov., 1869.

C. N. BUZZELL, Spring Creek, Pa., writes: I should feel lost without the HERALD OF LIFE in this evil time when men turn away their ears from the truth and are turned unto fables. O how thankful I am that God, in his mercy, showed me the truth and snatched me from that whirlpool of destruction, spiritualism. I have agreed, by request, to discuss the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the resurrection of the wicked dead?" with a Presbyterian of this place. I hope the brethren and sisters will pray for me, that God will help; for in Him lieth my strength. May God bless you, in your old age, and preserve you blameless unto His kingdom, which I believe to be very near. Yours, in Christ.

CHARLES HOPE, West Berkshire, Vt., writes: I have had a light shock of palsy three weeks back, but, thanks to our good God, I am able to write, and should like to be remembered by the brethren and sisters that I may recover, with our dear brethren Wolcott and Thorne. I hope brother Thorne will be spared for his heart-felt articles in the HERALD OF LIFE. May the coming of our dear LIFE-GIVER and Deliverer soon take place, that we may be delivered from every evil and be brought to praise our God, who is love itself. From your waiting brother.

PROTESTANT HUSBANDS AT A PREMIUM.—Not only Protestant preachers, but even common Protestants, command a high premium in the matrimonial market of Harpoot; so much so, that one of the bitterest enemies of the truth in the city recently had her daughter taught to read, and gave notice that she would give her in marriage to a Protestant; "for," said she, "they treat their wives well."—Ten Years on the Euphrates.

Christian Experience.

BY LOUISA J. BEACH.

What a comforting thought it is, that in all our afflictions our Saviour is afflicted too—in all our sorrows He bears a part. Not merely to know the fact, but to realize it fully is blessed.

But does He really take cognizance of our little trials, griefs, heart-burdens, cares and temptations? Most assuredly, as well as of our sorer conflicts or heavier afflictions, that crush and weigh down the heart into the very dust. When any member of our body feels only a little twinge of pain, how quick, as the lightning flash, is the knowledge of it conveyed to the brain; so, when the weakest member of Christ's body suffers, He knows it and feels it too. In the words of a favorite writer, "He, the mighty Vine, knows the minutest fibres of sorrow in the branches; when the pruning-knife touches them it touches Him."

"Touched with a sympathy within,
He knows one feeble frame;
He knows what sore temptations mean,
For he has felt the same.

"He in the days of feeble flesh,
Poured out his cries and tears;
And still, in glory feels afresh,
What every member bears."

Some persons entertain the idea that it is wrong ever to feel annoyed or tried about anything; that it is evidence of an unsubmissive and unchristian spirit, and that to be a perfect Christian, one must virtually be devoid of feeling except it be in one direction. This is an error, and yet is often a source of grief and self-condemnation to many an honest heart. I saw something on this subject in the last number of the "Christian," in an excellent article entitled "Conformity to the Will of God," from the writings of C. Laren. He says, "We often make a joyous and gladsome state of mind the only evidence of our acceptance with the Father. This is a very mischievous error. To do this, is to make the faith of our acceptance depend upon our emotions or feelings; whereas the word is the only true basis of faith, on compliance with which all the promises becomes ours. We forget the word which saith, 'if need be ye are in heaviness;' that our Saviour endured this, and yet was just as acceptable to the Father, as when his emotions were the opposite. And now, as we are called 'to endure hardness,' and as it is given us to 'suffer with Christ,' and also to bear some 'afflictions for a moment,' we must certainly not consider any one state of feeling the only acceptable one. For if, when 'need be,' we are in heaviness, then heaviness must be felt. If to endure hardness, then hardness must be felt. And if we are to have afflictions, then we must sometimes feel afflicted."

Perhaps we have sometimes wondered why our path must be so rough and thorny—and we have had to suffer on until we learned why. Says Evans, "It is upon the smooth ice we slip; the rough path is safest for our feet." Again, the writer first quoted says, "The tearless and undimmed eye is not to be coveted here; that is reserved for heaven!—Who can tell what muffled and disguised 'needs be' there may be lurking under these world-tribulations? His true spiritual seeds are often planted deep in the soil; they have to make their way through a load of sorrow before they reach the surface; but their roots are thereby the firmer and deeper struck. Had it not been for these lowly and needed 'depths,' they might have rushed up as feeble saplings, and succumbed to the blast."

I think the Apostle Peter understood this, when, at the close of his first epistle to the church, he says, "But the God of all grace, who called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you."

Confined in my sick room, these words of comfort have been brought to my mind, and I have felt thankful that if our minds are so weak that they are not capable of searching out new ideas of truth, yet, blessed ones (though they may be old), emanating from the minds of others, may be received and appreciated by us—and better than all this, the Comforter can bring to our remembrance the words of Jesus, the great Teacher, so that we, "rejoicing in hope," "may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."

I am aware that many, with their strong intellects, reaching after abstract theories, or seeking, philosophically, to solve difficult problems, may not be interested in these thoughts, in weakness penned, and may cast them aside with only a hasty glance; but to some little, weary one, they may be as "a word spoken in season;" and some lone, disheartened pilgrim, reading them, may be cheered, and encouraged to look up and look ahead, to "hold on and hold out" to the end; and thus hoping, enduring, believing, may, through grace, attain unto eternal life.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 5, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

A New Year's Greeting.

BY AMBROSE RONDTHALER.

Here we stand, pilgrims and sojourners on earth, as were all our fathers before us, on the threshold of another year. 1870 has lifted up its cheerful light upon our world—and 1869—where is it? Gone, forever gone! And gone, forever gone, too, its labors and its business, its joys and its pleasures, its sorrows and its griefs. Nothing remains! Nothing? I am wrong. Something remains, much remains, all remains. And what is that? Life only in Christ! This blessing, this glorious blessing, time, with all its changes, cannot destroy. This gift, this heavenly gift remains, and will remain along all the windings of our way, amid all the vicissitudes of our mortal life. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life."

Thus saith our Lord, our Saviour, our Life-giver. Yes, Life in Christ remains, and will remain, if we continue humbly and fully to trust in Him, who has said, "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." Blessed Saviour!

"Help us to praise Thee for the past,
And trust Thee for the rest."

And while thus erecting an Ebenezer unto that God who hath hitherto helped us, and not promising to do anything in our own strength, but simply to trust Him for coming time and for eternity, let us mutually wish each other a Happy New Year. Will you, my dear friends, permit me, your fellow-believer, to cast in my mite of wishes?

Happy New Year to you, little ones of Jesus, to the lambs of Christ's flock! The Friend of little children bless you and do you much good. May you remember your Creator, your Redeemer, your Life-giver in the days of your youth. Your lot is cast in evil times, but glorious times are coming! Amen!

"Kind Shepherd, take each little lamb
Into Thy faithful arms of love:
Cause them to know Thy saving name,
And Thy redeeming love to prove."

Happy New Year to you, maidens and young men! We commend you to "Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

"Speak to your inmost heart;
The one thing needful be your choice,
Be yours that better part;
Then of your works of faith and love,
Be this memorial writ above,
While others boast their fancied good,
'She hath done what she could.'"

Happy New Year to you, brothers and sisters, who are yet bearing the heat and the burden of the day! Your noon-tide is here; but no sooner has the noon-hour come, when the afternoon sets in. You are like the flower in its fullest bloom; but the hour of a flower's fullest bloom, is the hour of the beginning of its withering. Be up and doing. "The night cometh, when no man can work." And while you work, "Cast your burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain you: He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."

Happy New Year to you, aged pilgrim! Now that you are old and gray-headed, the Lord will not forsake you. May you remain the object of Christ's love and favor until the end of days!

"Each sweet Ebenezer you have in review Confirms His good pleasure to help you quite through."

Happy New Year to you, lone widowed friends! Continue, like Anna, "to give thanks unto the Lord, and to speak of Him to all them that look for redemption."—"Trust ye in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength."

Happy New Year to you, orphaned children. Hear what the Lord saith: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." Walk in union with your God, who is your nearest Friend. Amen!

Happy New Year to you who are persecuted for righteousness' sake. "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for Christ's sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets that were before you."

Happy New Year to you, searchers of the Scriptures! May you live in closest communion with the greatest expounder, even the risen Jesus, who walked with two of them that went that same day to a village called Emmaus. May your heart burn within you, while He talks with you by the way, and while He opens to you the Scriptures." Holy Saviour! "Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent." "Come in, and tarry with us."

But, dear friends, is it toward evening? Then let us pause in the midst of our congratulations. Toward evening! How much, every way, is contained in these two words! Toward evening! How often during this year may it be toward evening for you and for me! Toward evening in many different ways! We know not what 1870 may bring forth. Individual troubles, domestic trials, severe bereavements may be our lot. Ah! could we penetrate into 1870, what sorrowful toward-evening scenes would we perhaps behold! Could we look into the future, we would, perhaps, hear a sister saying, "Call me not Naomi; call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." Could we look into futurity, we would, perhaps, see a Jacob mourning for his lost son, and hear him saying, "I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning"—a David saying, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return unto me"—an aged Ephraim mourning many days on account of his sons—a Rachel weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted, because they are not. We would, perhaps, see devout men carrying a Stephen to burial, and making great lamentation over him. We would, perhaps, "be brought into an upper chamber, where we would see friends and relatives weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them.—Acts ix. 39. And looking into futurity, shall we see a Jonah, and hear him saying, "I do well to be angry even unto death?"

Dear fellow-believers, we hope for better things. Does not the Bible say, "No evil shall happen to the righteous?" Does not Paul say, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose? Does not Jesus say, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous, therefore, and repent." Oh! my friends, let us not forget our New Year's wish to each other—"Trust in Him!" Let toward-evening scenes of sorrow, then, if it is the Lord's will, come; let nights of darkness set in; Jesus "will make crooked things straight, and the rough ways smooth."

Yes, trust in Jesus, our Life-giver, and then we shall hear, if sorrows do come, an Abraham saying, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" We shall see an Aaron holding his peace—we shall hear an Eli saying, "It is the Lord: let him do what seemeth Him good"—hear a Job saying, "Though He slay me, yet will I put my trust in Him." We shall see a Paul regarding "all earthly afflictions as light and momentary, and working out for him a far more exceeding, even an eternal weight of glory." We shall see Christians looking not to those things which are seen, but to those things which are not seen. We shall see believers in Life only in Christ looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God." We shall see Christ's followers taking their harps from the willows—and in the midst of peans pour forth notes of praise and singing—

"He that hath helped me hitherto,
Will help me all my journey through,
And give me daily cause to raise
New Ebenezers to His praise."

A few lines more and I have done. Looking into futurity, we might, perhaps, see a grave—and on that grave a tomb-stone—and on that stone—your name—what day? what month? and the year 1870. What then?

"The grave wherein your Saviour lay,
Will be your resting-place."

Looking into futurity—but no! of that hour and of that day knoweth no man.—However, hallelujah, this we know to be truth—"He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad to rejoice in His salvation."

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, with us all. Amen."

Bethlehem, Pa., 1870.

Note by the Editor.

Br. Rondthaler has our hearty thanks for furnishing the "New Year's Greeting," the sentiments of which we most heartily indorse. We trust it may be encouraging and comforting to all. Let us enter on this year with one controlling desire, viz., To honor and please God and his Son, our Life-giver and Lord; so shall we be free from anxious thought about ourselves and the future. Attend to our Lord's work, and He will take care of us and ours; so that whether we live and remain unto our Saviour's return from heaven, or fall asleep in Him, all will be well.

Our Native Town.

The Editor of this paper was born in Lebanon, N. H., in 1796, and finally left that place in 1825, and went forth to preach the gospel. He frequently visited the place of his nativity till 1844; after which he did not visit it again till 1861, or for seventeen years; at which time there was a centenary celebration of the first settlement of the town, in which he took some part: he also went to see the family residence of his father, where he was born and reared and lived to near the time he finally left the town. Everything was so changed at the old family mansion and farm, that naught but sadness came over his mind in looking upon it and its surroundings; all was in the hands of strangers. In 1865 he made another flying visit to the town, at which time his only surviving brother was sick, and died a few days after he left.

Since that time we have felt a strong desire that the Life views we hold and promulgate might have a hearing in our native place, but our duties as Editor of this paper have prevented our again visiting there.

At the time we left Lebanon (1825) there was no paper published nearer than Concord (50 miles distant); but in 1844 a secular paper was started in the town, now called "Granite State Free Press." We solicited an exchange with that paper because it was published in the place of our nativity. We have felt much interest in it; and from time to time have sent to the Publisher of it, "E. H. Cheney," some of our pamphlets and tracts, which he kindly noticed. We recently sent him Dr. Finley's "Constitution of Man," etc., with some of our own production. These Mr. Cheney has noticed, in his issue of Jan. 1st, as follows:

The "Constitution of Man and His Final Destiny.—By Dr. John K. Finley, author of "Letters to a Clergyman."

"God is Love."—A Sermon by Geo. Storrs, editor of the "Herald of Life."

The Atonement of Jesus Christ; What is It?—By the same.

The Judgment:—Its Judicial and Executive Character. The Time and Manner of It. By the same.

"We have received the above publications from Mr. Storrs, who is a native of this town, and whose peculiar theological views are more or less known to many of our older citizens. The articles which constitute the first named pamphlet first appeared in the Niles (Michigan) Republican, in 1868. They are intended as a reply to an attack by a Presbyterian minister on what are termed by their advocates, "Life Views," meaning the doctrine of no eternal life except through Jesus Christ, of which both Mr. Finley and Mr. Storrs are able advocates. They believe that when wicked men die they perish forever, while the righteous are the only subjects of the resurrection. It is not for us to say whether they establish their belief by competent Scripture evidence, but they certainly argue the point with great zeal and apparent sincerity, in a most excellent spirit, and present many Scripture arguments not to be lightly set aside.

"Mr. Storrs being a native of Lebanon, and his views being peculiar, and perhaps unknown to most of our readers, we present below, a sketch, from his own pen, attached to one of these tracts. Those who wish to know more about his views will find by addressing him that he is not unable to give a reason for the hope that is in him. He has publications to meet every phase of his peculiar doctrines."

Mr. Cheney then inserts the article entire, entitled "Reminescence," found at the close of our tract, "God is Love," filling nearly a column and a half of his paper; for which he has our thanks. If other secular papers, which have solicited ours in exchange, would do us a similar favor, we would feel obliged to them also. From the sectarian papers we look for nothing of the kind. If they will occasionally speak evil of us and our views, we accept that as a favor. But for the most part, they choose that which, for them, is the wiser course, viz., pass us in silence. Yet it is undeniable that the views we promulgate are gradually gaining ground even in their churches; and we are quite willing they should have their own way, assured that God will in due time manifest the truth, that "Life future or eternal is His gift," through a resurrection "at the last day," bestowed only on those who comply with His terms, under whatever dispensation men have lived; and that all others eternally sleep the sleep of death, and shall "not awake, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts."—See Jer. li. 39, 57, also John iii. 36, with a multitude of similar passages; to which, also, should be added the general tenor of the Bible.

The Idolatry of Rome.

Among the prayers offered at Rome by the Pope, in the "Ecumenical Council" now in session, are the following expressions:

"Pray for us, Holy, Immaculate Mother of God."

"O God, our refuge and strength, the author of all pious wishes, hear the pious supplications of thy Church, and grant that with the intercession of the blessed and glorious always virgin Mary, the mother of God, with thy blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and all the saints, we may efficaciously obtain, what we faithfully pray for."

Will Rome tell us which is the greatest, the parent or the offspring? Especially, does not a mother exist before her offspring? And as Mary is the "Mother of God," does it not follow that, but for Mary there would be "No God?" Hence, Mary was before God, or there is "No God." Why should the "Mother of God" be asked to pray to God, seeing the very existence of God depended on her?

Well may Rome be called "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots," etc., (Rev. xvii. 5), seeing she worships one who is (in her theology), "the Mother of God;" a worship which might have been "winked at" in the dark ages of "ignorance" and superstition, but for which sin, God now clearly calls upon all to "repent" and turn from it; and if persisted in will draw down the most terrible judgments on the heads of such as continue in the practice. Rome has more to fear from such a practice than from Protestantism and Infidelity combined. God has said, "My glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images."—Isai. xlii. 8. What is this homage offered to Mary better, or, in principle, different from the rankest idolatry? It is giving glory to a creature which, in fact, exalts that creature above God, by making her His mother, or producer. It is difficult to see how this course is different from blasphemously assuming the existence of God depended on Mary.

Will God tolerate such assumptions in this age, when the Bible is, or may be, in every one's hands? It seems impossible that He can or will much longer bear with such idolatry.

Not only does Rome thus practice in regard to Mary, but, as the above extract shows, she exalts the dead Apostles and saints into intercessors; thus, in effect, setting at naught the testimony of Paul, that there is "One God and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus."

Now comes the grand inquiry—From whence all this corruption of the word of God, and this idolatry? The answer to us is clear, admitting of no doubts: It was and is the product of the first denial of the truth of God's statement, "Thou shalt surely die;" or, "Dying thou shalt die." The denial of this truth is the basis of the doctrine of "inherent immortality," leading directly to the denial of the fact that death is death, and that "the dead know not anything." Teaching, as it does, that the dead "know more than all the living;" thus exalting the dead into Gods, making one of them "the Mother of God," and the others intercessors in heaven, or devils in some other place. So they "wrap it up," and fancy they are doing "God service" by their corruptions of His word.

How much of all this is done "ignorantly in unbelief," we leave for the Searcher of hearts to determine; for He only knows the hearts of all men. He is the Judge of all, and will in due time vindicate His own word, and teach men that it is not a small sin to preach and teach the traditions of human Councils, Synods, Conferences, etc., while they convert His truth into falsehood to establish their own traditions.

Let us cleave unto the words of God; and let His Word be the man of our counsel, and the light to enlighten our pathway to the life to come; which is only through the "one Mediator;" who is, also, "the resurrection and the life;" so that except we have a divine renewal, by virtue of a union with Him, we "shall not see life," hereafter, "but the wrath of God," which is death, will "abide" on us. May God preserve us from idolatry in all its forms.

The Constitution oe Man:

BY DR. JOHN K. FINLEY.

This work has had a rapid circulation. The first thousand were all gone two weeks since, and the second thousand has been printed and is going. The price per copy is 10 cents. Ten copies, hereafter, will be sent by mail on the receipt of $1, free of charge for postage. Single copies by mail will be 12 cents including postage, the postage being just the same on one copy as on two; viz., two cents. Let all the friends, who love the Life views, procure and scatter as many of this work as possible, as it is well calculated to convince candid minds of the truth of Life future and eternal only in and through Christ. It embodies in a small compass the main features of the doctrine of man's inherent mortality and immortality only as a gift of God in Christ through the resurrection from the dead.

Old-Fashioned Calvinism.

We were much interested in a letter from "Rev. R. W. Dale," England, in the "The Advance" of Dec. 16. The writer, among other things, speaks of A Quiet Revolution in Calvinistic Opinion. He says:

"Among the Evangelical Non-conformists of Englad—especially the Congregationalists—a silent but complete revolution of theological thought has taken place during the present century. Forty years ago, and perhaps still more recently, the characteristic phraseology of Calvinism was to be heard in most of our pulpits; it has now almost disappeared. It is not easy to say why. In Scotland whatever modifications Calvinism has undergone can be accounted for. There was a violent controversy on the doctrine of the atonement. The most distinguished theologians of the various Presbyterian churches were on opposite sides; the question was fairly fought out, for in learning and keenness the champions of the hostile doctrines were very fairly matched. The result was that a very large number of Scottish Presbyterians came to believe that in some sense Christ died for all men—a belief which in the long run is certain to ruin the harmony and strength of systematic Calvinism. But in England we have had no such struggle, at least in the present century. Perhaps the explanation of the change may partly be found in the fact that a theological movement was initiated in England nearly a hundred years ago, by men who did not foresee the ultimate results of their teaching. Andrew Fuller among the Baptists, and Dr, Edward Williams, the author of "Equity and Sovereignty," among the Congregationalists, attempted so to modify the Calvinistic theory as to relieve it of some of its more evidently repulsive elements, and they did not know that the new leaven which they were introducing into the thought of the churches would work silently till the whole mass was transformed.

Another cause is to be found in the great evangelistic zeal which glowed in the heart of the church at the beginning of the present century. I do not mean to say or to imply that no consistent Calvinist ever labors earnestly for the salvation of mankind. That would be a slander. But when preachers are incessently entreating all men to be reconciled to God there is a considerable probablity that they will come to the conclusion that God is at least as anxious for the salvation of all men as they are themselves, and that God's love for the human race must be as large as their own. Through incessantly qouting and preaching upon such passages as, "The Lord hath laid upon Him the iniquities of us all;" "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked but that the wicked turn from his way and live"—men come to believe that the words mean just what they seem to say. It is true that many of the men who led our churches in every good work fifty or sixty years ago, continued to repeat familiar phrases about the "divine decrees" and the "electing love of God," and they believed that they believed in Calvinism still, but the living element of their creed, that which fired their passions, inspired their eloquence and sustained their work was something very different—and gradually, just as the dead wood silently drops off the tree when the life of spring returns, the dead articles of the creed dropped away, men hardly knew when or how."

Thus Calvinism has quietly lost its hardest features and found it impossible to retain its peculiarities. The main battle, in England, was fought by Toplady, Rowland Hill, and others for it, and Wesley, Fletcher, and others against, in the closing years of the last century, which fact Mr. Dale has overlooked, and hence seems unable to account fully for the "Revolution" that has taken place, in this century in England. We rejoice to know that the seed sown by such men as Fletcher and Wesley, though it may seem to have lain dormant, has produced the fruit of a better view of the government of God than what existed in the palmy days of the "repulsive elements of Calvinism." Like as "dead wood silently drops off the tree when the life of spring returns, the dead articles of the creed dropped away," says Mr. Dale.

But what comes next? The dead and dying limbs of "Inherent Immortality and Eternal Torments" are rapidly dropping off, in England and America, from the Tree of Life, and cannot long survive "the life of spring" that is now returning, and which will sweep away the last vestige of those "repulsive elements" from the Church of God; and men will wonder how Christendom ever accepted any other view of God's administration than that of "Life future and eternal only through Christ, as the gift of God to those who believe." May God hasten the joyful day.

Contentment consisteth not in riches, but in peace of mind.

THE "TOUCHING CASE."

THE case of the young girl we spoke of, in our issue of Dec. 15, has drawn out several hearty responses, which have touched our own heart. In a few days, a brother, whose name we are not permitted to make public, called and left $2 to help in the case. Next came the following note from THOMAS R. CROCKER, of Brooklyn, N. Y. He says:

My feelings were touched by reading an article in the HERALD OF LIFE, of Dec. 15th, headed "A TOUCHING CASE." I never saw that dear girl, but I love her, and I want her to have our dear paper to read, and I wish her to have a Bible, also; and God has placed it in my power to see that she has both.—Please find enclosed $2 for one year's subscription for the HERALD OF LIFE, and $3 for a Bible. Will you see that the dear child gets them? And may God bless it to her eternal salvation; and I trust that in the glorious morning of the resurrection we shall meet her crowned an heir of glory.

Next followed a letter from ABBY A. PERRY, Scotland, Conn., on the same subject. She speaks as follows:

While reading the HERALD of Dec. 15, my heart was touched to think there was one young person, in these last days, who had a desire to read the HERALD OF LIFE, and had not the means to send for it. I am glad some person took interest enough in her case to let it be known, if they were not able to send the money themselves. I wish we might hear of many such hungry ones; hungry for the Bread of Life. We would try to find a way to feed them, even if we made a great sacrifice to do it. I am glad that none are sent empty away by you. May the "Shepherd of Israel" bless you with wisdom to direct under all circumstances, and with means to do good to all the needy, as you have a heart to perform.

Enclosed please find $2 to pay for the dear girl's paper, or to help buy her a good Bible; and may God give her "understanding, that she may live."

The enclosed $2 is to get the little girl mentioned in the HERALD of Dec. 15 a Bible, and to pre-pay postage or express charges. I would like it to be a reference Bible of good type, but plain binding. If any balance remains, please apply it to the tract fund.

In case the little girl is already supplied, please apply the whole to the tract fund, or to any other object, at your own discretion.

We have procured a plain, but substantial and well-bound octavo Bible, with marginal references, published by the "American Bible Society." We have written her name in it, and under hers have written the names and residences of all the donors above-named; and trust "DORA" (so much of her name we give you), has received it ere this for a "Christmas Present," though she lives hundreds of miles away, and we can imagine her joy.

The remainder of the money is credited to the HERALD OF LIFE, for her, and to the "Tract Fund," as desired. May the Lord abundantly bless all concerned in this work of love.

P. S. Since the above was prepared for the paper, another offering came from East Amherst, Mass., from Mrs. S. F. Hulburd and her mother Anna B. Kingbury, with 75 cents each for the Bible. Mrs. Hulburd writes:

I read the article "A Touching Case," in the HERALD of Dec. 15, to my mother (an old lady in her 82d year); it affected her very much. She wanted to do something toward getting that girl a Bible, and I felt the same; so we enclose 75 cents each. May God bless her in reading and understanding the holy Word.

These sympathetic outgushings of Christian hearts are refreshing, and show that genuine cases of necessity soon reach the heart, when known.

P. S. 2d. Still later comes other offerings—one from Mrs. Mary A. Butman, Lynn, Mass., saying:

"A friend and myself send $2 to pay for a Bible for the girl spoken of in the HERALD of Dec. 15. Will you please buy her one, and send her some tracts, if any money is left."

AN INQUIRY.

BR. STORRS: Will you give your view of 1 Peter iii. 19? A Methodist preacher, here, quotes it as proof of an intermediate conscious state of the dead.

Truly yours,

T. C. CRAIG.

EASTON, Kansas, Dec. 20, 1869.

Response by the Editor.

The text with its connection seems plain. It speaks of Christ's death and resurrection in the previous verse thus: "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit;" then is added the verse spoken of: "by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." What spirits, and when? Answer: "Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing," etc.

Ques. 1.—What was it that preached?

Ans.—The Spirit of God that quickened Christ from the dead.

Ques. 2.—When did that Spirit preach to the spirits in prison?

Ans.—"In the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing." "The LORD said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man; yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years;" i. e., "while the ark was a preparing." During that period, the same Spirit that quickened Christ from the dead, preached to the spirits (the men) who were, in Peter's day, in prison; i. e., as the Syriac reads, "In sepulchro"—the grave. Those persons, of the antediluvians, who are now in the grave, remain eternally dead because they quenched the Spirit which preached to them in the days of Noah; and by which alone any man can be raised from the dead: that Spirit quickened Christ, and will quicken all who yield to its preaching or teaching; and the antediluvians perished utterly by not heeding its teachings.

To put the construction on Peter's language that the popular teachers do, makes the Spirit of God to be teaching spirits, or persons, in the theological hell; and will they please tell us the object of such preaching? Do they not see, such preaching implies probation? Do they believe there is mercy in store for the antediluvian sinners? If for them, why not for all others in that place? If Christ went to the theological hell to preach, we have a right to believe it was a message of "good-will," till such time as it is proved to be something else.

We believe we have given above the true interpretation of the text; and that there is not the slightest ground to believe it relates to any preaching to disembodied spirits by a visit of Christ into the theological hell.

"FREE LOVE."

"THE Advance" of Dec. 16 has an editorial on the above subject, which we most heartily approve. It was drawn out by the "lax" views of "The Independent," of this city, on the subject of marriage and divorce. The last-named paper, though professedly "Christian," announced sentiments that are seriously anti-christian on this subject, and tending to make marriage nothing better than a purpose to live together as long as they please, and to separate when they please, or are displeased, and either party chooses to have a separation; a system little differing from prostitution.

The article of "The Advance" opens as follows:

"The family is the foundation of both church and state, and marriage is the basis of the family. To be such a basis, in its relations to property, children, domestic happiness and the purity of public morals, marriage must be rigidly and inexorably held, in law and practice, to be a life union of those who enter into it—a union which only adultery can dissolve in morals and in the courts. Professed reforms and reformers must be judged by this test. Rotten here, they are condemned throughout. Men cannot consent to mince matters on a point so fundamental to society, whoever may suffer. The tendency is strongly developing itself to make war upon marriage as above defined, and to substitute some sentimental theory, specious but corrupt, which shall allow easy divorce. It shows itself in male and female orators and writers; at conventions, in lectures, in books and in newspapers. It is one of the darkest signs of the times, and calls upon all virtuous citizens and friends of morality—to say nothing of the followers of Christ, as such—to put the brand of their disapprobation upon the forehead of whomsoever shall appear as the advocate of lax theories of marriage and divorce. We of course hold, with all Christian people, that society should sometimes step between a suffering or endangered wife and the persistent violence of her drunken husband—protecting her by a legal and temporary separation, not divorce. But this dictate of humanity and Christianity shall not be permitted to justify or excuse the abominable doctrine of free divorce, prompted by the 'inward protest of individual souls,' and followed by fresh alliances."

To these reflections we give our full and unqualified assent, and the remarks following the extract from "The Independent" are to the point in condemnation of the position of that paper. We would gladly give the whole article and the extract from "The Independent" if our space permitted.

We wish to call the attention of "The Advance" to one of its own remarks, in the above extract, viz.: "It is one of the darkest signs of the times," i. e., these efforts of "male and female orators and writers" to weaken the obligations of the marriage relation.

It is indeed one of the darkest signs of the times; but it is one of those signs which Paul enumerates as indicating the end of this age. He says, "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of daimonion, speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their consciences seared as with a hot iron; forbidding to marry," etc.—1 Tim. iv. 1–3.

The notion that men and women may abolish the marriage relation, existing between them, whenever they have wrought themselves up to think "such a union loathsome" to "either of them," is, in fact, to set at naught the ordinance of God, and annul the authority of Jesus Christ. No such person—man or woman—paper or periodical—has any claim to be called "Christian;" the position is essentially anti-christian. Let Christian men and women beware of setting at naught the unmistakable testimony of Christ our Lord, who says, with emphasis:

"Whosoever shall put away his wife, excepting it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whosoever marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery."

These words are not to be trifled with; and he who does attempt to set them aside, does it at the peril of the loss of life eternal, as Christ himself is to judge and fix the destiny of men; and adulterers have no part in the kingdom of God or of Christ.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.

MATT. XXII. 1–14.

BY WILLIAM H. SPENCER.

THERE is one very interesting feature of this parable that should command our most thoughtful attention. "A certain king made a marriage for his son." Who is this king? Who shall be so highly honored as to become the bride of the king's only son? And when will the royal marriage take place? These are questions that quickly suggest themselves to our mind.

From this parabolic account we may readily comprehend the exalted character of this King. No earthly monarch ever possessed such regal glory, or ever exercised such unlimited power. He is the true sovereign—the King absolutely—the Monarch of the universe. The planets, which bestud the arches of heaven, revolve in sublime harmony to his laws; and the earth speaks to our minds of his unlimited creative power. Its inhabitants are but as grasshoppers before him, and still, under his omnipotent eyes, even the hairs of their heads are numbered. Such a King as this has made, or arranged a wedding for His only begotten Son.

His bride is one that will love Him with the purity and fervency of that divine love which gushes forth from the great fountain head. She does not love him instinctively. She loves Him because He first loved her. To show the magnitude of His love He offered up his life to redeem her from the certain and eternal death that would surely overtake her. And now having received from the Father—the great source of life—power to deliver her from the certain wages of her sinful career, animated by the great power of love, He is preparing his chosen—his elect—to occupy the closest and holiest of relations, that His bride may forever enjoy his fervent, holy and princely love. To animate His bride to separate herself entirely from the world, and to centre her undivided affections upon the one who has purchased her with his own precious blood, we have been presented with glowing visions of the wedding day, and of the glory and joy which fills the immensity of the future world.

John, as a lonely exile upon the Isle of Patmos, was comforted by the presence of a heavenly messenger, who said to him: "Come hither, I will show thee the bride the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God."—Rev. xxi. 9–11.

The Lamb—the King's Son—is to have a bride; we need hardly inquire who the bride is. The angel affirms that he would show the bride to John—of course, prophetically. He shows John the new, the heavenly Jerusalem. It was a great city of saints, and this vast congregation of the redeemed—the chosen inhabitants of the future world—is called "the Lamb's wife." The bride is therefore the immortal and glorified church.

There are two Jerusalems introduced in the Scriptures. There is also the first Adam and the second Adam; this world and a future world; this mortal life, and the future immortal life. The old Jerusalem was of this world—decaying—and destined to exist but a brief period. In our mind we may properly consider it a symbol of mortal life; it ends in death—"weakness" and "dishonor." The New Jerusalem, also, we may consider a fitting symbol of those who are the Lamb's wife; those who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead; those who partake of the immortal or resurrection life, whom in vision John saw arrayed in all the sublime glory of God, only feebly portrayed by reference to the most precious of the material wealth of this world. Thus, in a most sensible manner we may contrast the future life, derived through Christ, with that perishable blood life which we inherit from Adam. Let us see if Paul does not make a similar contrast. He says: "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." What does he mean by this? Let him explain. "The first man Adam was made a living soul," i. e., simply possessed mortal life, and could transmit nothing more to his posterity; but "the last Adam (Christ) was made a quickening (or life-giving) spirit." Hear Paul further: "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. . . . We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, . . . and the dead shall be raised incorruptible."

Now we cannot but see that if we obtained nothing but what we got from Adam, Christ's people—"the bride"—would never have got beyond the grave; but the Bridegroom, as a "life-giving spirit," interposes to rescue his bride by introducing a "spiritual" or immortal life; and therefore, when he comes from heaven, his people who are alive shall be changed, and those who are dead "be raised incorruptible." Then comes the marriage celebration.

The great heavenly Bridegroom is now at the right hand of the Father, sending forth his invitation to the whole world. His love embraces all mankind; but they will not all love him in return—they will not now become spiritually connected (betrothed) to him, that when the marriage feast takes place they may be with him—"ever be with the Lord." The marriage is yet to be consummated, which will take place soon; for already the watching virgins have gone forth to meet Him—have trimmed their lamps, and their cry has rung out in earth's dark night, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." The glad event will soon take place. Angels will be the happy spectators; and the celestial company, with joy, will take part in celebrating the holy nuptials, and the Father himself will pronounce as completed all that has been prophesied throughout the ages.

"And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And I heard as it were (says John) the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her it was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints."—Rev. xix. 5–8. This same multitude, here called the Lamb's "wife," we elsewhere learn, "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."—Rev. vii. 13, 14. Through his atoning blood they had washed their guilt away, and had been given those pure robes of "righteousness."

We read, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."—Rev. xix. 9. Now we must make a distinction between the call and the invitation. The invitation is through the gospel to the whole world; the call comes only to those who have heeded the invitation and put on the wedding garments. Let us examine these two points briefly.

There is a sad history to contemplate when we consider how this invitation has been received. The Jewish people were first "bidden to the wedding," but "they would not come." They made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandize." Do we wonder that the King was "wroth" at their behaviour? They that were bidden proved themselves unworthy by choosing Cæsar and rejecting the heavenly Bridegroom. Then God sent his servants to the Gentiles—into the "highways and hedges." Many were invited but few were chosen. The invitation went forth from Jerusalem into all the world, under the power and direction of the Holy Spirit; and the invitation is still being proclaimed. Now if the invitation and the calling were the same thing, then those Jews who rejected the invitation, and the vast majority of mankind who have rejected it since, could be called "blessed;" for the record says, "Blessed are they that are called." We cannot for a moment believe that this is meant. Let us look at it.

The invitation being given to the whole world, those that accept it—wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb—and put on the wedding garments, are placed in the position of virgins to await the Bridegroom's return. He is like a nobleman who has gone into a far country to receive a kingdom and to return. Many of them have fallen asleep; but when he comes they will be called from their rest, and together with the living waiting ones, be made to rejoice in an eternal union with him, and share in the glory of the coming kingdom. "Blessed are they that are called."

Did space permit we should be pleased to show from abundant testimony that this calling refers particularly to the resurrection of the dead. And we believe the great truth stands forth in the Scriptures, too plainly to be misunderstood, that those who will not accept the gospel invitation will not receive this call from the state of death. How much it becomes all therefore to make their "calling and election sure."

Dear reader, if you have received the sealing power of the holy Spirit into your hearts, then indeed you are one of that honored number who constitute "the bride;" and be assured that the time will soon come when, if you continue faithful, you will receive the call to the marriage supper, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God."—2 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

"I yearn for that morn, when the dead saints shall wear
Their glorified bodies, and long to be there!"

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 1869.

FROM WM. H. SPENCER.

DEAR BR. STORRS: My heart has been greatly comforted, during the present hours of affliction, by the kind words of sympathy which I have received from the dear pilgrims, and also by the generous interest which they have taken to make my condition comfortable. I cannot express my gratitude to those dear brethren whose kindness has delivered me from want, and enabled me to care for my sick companion properly during the past two weeks of her severe illness. I expected no such acts of kindness, for, in simply trying to do my duty, I felt I merited none. I also feel deeply grateful to my ever hind heavenly Father. In letting my requests be known unto the Lord in the divinely appointed way, (Phil. iv., 6, 7), I have felt that the "peace of God which passeth all understanding" has been my great consolation. Bless his holy name forever.

I regret that at the present time of writing (Dec. 26th) I am not able to report improvement in health. The suffering from my lungs to-day is such that I find it difficult to pen this letter. During the past three days the disease has manifested a much severer form. The discharge from my lungs has been considerable; the soreness in my left lung has spread so as to nearly render my left side helpless, and an irritating cough has set in which greatly adds to my uncomfortableness. This sudden and unexpected change in the condition of my health—which was improving—would quite discourage me were it not for the sweet comfort which I experience in trusting in the Lord. My heart is greatly cheered in contemplating the speedy return of the heavenly Bridegroom. It is a delightful thought to me, dear brother, to feel that I may soon meet you and all the dear pilgrims amid the ravishing glories of Paradise, where we shall meet to part no more; and an eternity of happiness—which shall not be marred by pain or death—will enable us to more fully realize the boundless goodness of our heavenly Father.

Pray for me, and may the Lord sustain and bless you.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 26, 1869.

FROM ABBY A. PERRY.

BR. STORRS: I am sorry to hear of the illness of our good Br. Spencer, and hope he will be spared to serve the cause of truth and righteousness these many years yet, if the LIFE-GIVER does not return soon.

We are glad to hear from so many of the dear ones through the HERALD. May the day hasten when we shall see "eye to eye;" and the prophet tells us when that time will be: "When the Lord shall bring again Zion;" "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Psa. cii. 16. Till that day comes let us "love one another," and try to enlighten and comfort each other all we can. I hope all will will try to have a tractable spirit, and endeavor to understand all that God has revealed for our instruction in his word.

God will not destroy this earth until all that the prophets have spoken concerning it has had a literal fulfilment; and a good part of the prophecies yet remain to be fulfilled, if I can understand what I read. "Search the Scriptures" like the noble Bereans, to see if these things are so; and may the same Spirit that inspired the prophets to write, inspire us to read and believe, is the prayer of your

SCOTLAND, Conn., Dec., 1869.

ELD. J. LEWIS is spending the winter in Missouri, in or about Martinsburg; says he has received all the tracts we have sent him, and that the battle goes on bravely there, the preachers fighting against our Life views with all their power, and endeavoring to prove all mankind immortal: says, he went to hear one of them preach, and it would take a large space to tell how many times he used the phrases "immortal soul—immortal spirit—never dying spirit—the death that never dies," and the like, and then told the sinner that his miseries in hell would never come to an end. Yet many are searching after truth, thinking we have brought "strange things to their ears:" for we have told them that man is a mortal being; and shown from the Bible that the soul dies. Some of the opposers have threatened to mob the old one-armed man and ride him out of the place on a rail with a coat of tar and feathers. One man burned the tract "You are immortal," and said, "Geo. Storrs ought to be hung for publishing such awful wicked trash." This man says he knows he has got an immortal soul. Another man—a member of a church—took the tract "God is love," saying "it will do for shaving paper." The old theological hive seems to show signs of life among the bees, lest some of their honey should be lost. They are trying to pen up the sheep: but they will hardly succed in keeping all from getting into a new pasture, of which they have now got a taste. Eld. Lewis concludes by saying: I am visiting families, distributing tracts from house to house; hopeing to reap a good crop in time of harvest. Pray for me that I faint not. This is a growing place: the different sects are vieing with each other to see who shall be greatest, and had rather see "the old boss devil" (as Br. Green calls him) than to see us here. We are happy to say, we find some good, honest souls, who are open to conviction, and wish to hear and receive the truth. The community seem moved to read their Bibles; for we told them, if they could find the phrases "immortal soul, deathless spirit," and the like, in the Bible, we would we would give them a hundred dollars.

NOTICES.

THE CHRISTIAN UNION for Dec. 25 is received. It is a large quarto of sixteen pages, published weekly in this city, at $2 50 per year. It is professionally

"An Unsectarian, Independent Journal, devoted to Religion, Morals, Reform, Foreign and Domestic News of the Church and the World, Literature, Science, Art, Agriculture, Trade, Finance, etc., etc.

Hereafter, HENRY WARD BEECHER is to be "Editor-in-Chief." We shall be glad to find it maintaining its profession of "an unsectarian" character; but we have some fears in the matter. When the paper first came into existence, under the name of "The CHURCH Union," it solicited an exchange with the HERALD OF LIFE, which we were glad to accept. But it soon left off its visits, and we have not seen it since till now. It now assumes the name of "The Christian Union." May it become worthy of its name.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for January is received. As usual, it is filled with interesting matter. We have said before, and now repeat it, we know of no one Monthly as valuable as this. If any of our friends wish such a Magazine, we see not where they can find a more valuable one. While we speak thus, it must not be supposed that we indorse all the sentiments it contains. We are glad to give extracts from it, when our space will allow. Terms, $3 50 per year. Address, Lippencott & Co., 715 & 717 Market street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CONTENTS for this Month.—Episodes in an Obscure Life; King Bramble; Sundays on the Continent; A Royal Family; On the Miracles of our Lord; The Portrait of Charity, as Presented by St. Paul; The Struggle in Ferrara; Light of the World; The Companions of St. Paul; Frederick William Krummacher; Upward Glances; How to Study the Old Testament; Unchangeable.

Also, various Illustrations.

CARTER'S COMBINED WRITING & COPYING INK:

ALSO,

CARTER'S INK PANORAMIC CALENDAR FOR 1870.

J. P. DINSMORE, 36 Dey street, New York, will accept our thanks for his New Year's present, to the HERALD OF LIFE office, of a bottle of the above-named Ink, and one copy of the Calendar; each of which are all but invaluable for the uses intended. We have never seen or used a better ink; it is a pleasure to write with it. As to the Panoramic Calendar, we would not be without one if we could possibly get it. We always keep one standing on our mantle at home, and would feel lost without it.

Christ and the Little Ones.

"The Master has come over Jordan,"
Said Hannah, the mother. one day;
"He is healing the people who throng him
With a touch of his finger, they say.

"And now I shall carry the children,
Little Rachel, and Samuel, and John;
I shall carry the baby Esther,
For the Lord to look upon!"

The father looked at her kindly,
But he shook his head and smiled:
"Now who but a doting mother
Would think of a thing so wild?"

"If the children were tortured by demons
Or dying of fever, 'twere well,
Or had they the taint of a leper,
Like many in Israel."

"Nay, do not hinder me, Nathan;
I feel such a burden of care
If I carry it to the Master,
Perhaps I shall leave it there.

"If he lay his hand on the children,
My heart will be lighter I know,
For a blessing forever and ever
Will follow them as they go."

So over the hills of Judah,
Along the vine-rows green,
With Rachel asleep on her bosom,
And Esther her brothers between,

'Mong the people who hung on his teaching,
Or waited his touch and his word,
Through the row of proud Pharisees listening,
She pressed to the feet of her Lord.

"Now why should'st thou hinder the Master?"
Said Peter, "with children like these?
See'st not how from morning till evening
He toucheth and healeth disease?"

Then Christ said, "Forbid not the children;
Permit them to come unto me;"
And he took in his arms little Esther,
And Rachel he set on his knee.

And the heavy heart of the mother
Was lifted all earth-care above,
As he laid his hands on the brothers
And blessed them with tenderest love—

As he said of the babe in his bosom,
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven;"
And strength for all duty and trial
That hour to her spirit was given.

The Resurrection.

"A bodily resurrection holds a position second to none in apostolic teaching. There is not a doctrine more continually or more distinctly enunciated in the Scriptures of the New Testament. The finger of inspiration ever points to the resurrection as the star of hope that shines resplendent in the night of death. All the Christian's aspirations, hopes, and promise-born anticipations respecting the life of glory spring out of it, like the almond buds from Aaron's rod of old. Do we trust in the living God? It is as he 'which raiseth the dead.'—2 Cor. i. 9. Do we look for the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven? It is as that mighty Saviour, 'who shall change the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed unto the body of his glory.'—Phil. iii. 21. Did Paul forget the things which were behind, and stretch forth unto those which were before, ever pressing toward the mark? It was, 'If by any means he might attain unto the resurrection out of the dead.'—Phil. iii. 11. Are there any whom the words of the Holy Spirit have pronounced emphatically 'blessed' as well as 'holy?' It is he that hath part in the 'first resurrection.'—Rev. xx. 6. And if any shall vainly attempt to say that all this refers not to the resurrection of the body, but to some fancied resurrection of the man at death, we close their lips with the words of the great apostle, 'But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.'—1 Cor. xv. 23. 'The Christian doctrine of a future life,' as Mr. Perowne has truly said, regards the whole of man's compound nature. It introduces no dissonance, it does not honor one part of our being to the neglect or degradation of the other. The life of which it speaks is a life of the body as well as of the spirit, a life the form and pledge of which are given in the resurrection of Christ, a life which is actually communicated to us by a true and vital union with him, 'Because I live (yea, and in the manner I live) ye shall live also.'"—The Rainbow.

Power of a Parting Admonition.

Mr. Wendell Phillips tells the following: "As a mother stood by the garden-gate of a sunny morning she said: 'Edward, they tell me—for I never saw the ocean—that the great temptation of the seaman's life is drink. Promise me, before you quit your mother's house, that you will never drink.' And he said (for he told me the story), 'I gave her the promise, and I went the broad globe over—Calcutta, the Mediterranean, San Francisco, the Cape of Good Hope, the North Pole, and the South—I saw them all in forty years, and I never saw a glass filled with sparkling liquor that my mother's form by the garden-gate on the green hill-side of Vermont did not rise before me; and to-day, at sixty, my lips are innocent of the taste of liquor.' Was not that sweet evidence of the power of a single word? Yet that was not half.

"'For,' said he, 'there came yesterday into my counting-room a man of forty, and asked me: "Do you know me?" "No." "Well," said he, "I was once brought drunk into your presence on shipboard. You were a passenger. The captain kicked me aside, you took me to your berth, and kept me there until I had slept off the intoxication. You then asked me if I had a mother. I said I never knew a word from her lips. You told me of yours at the garden-gate, and to-day I am master of one of the finest packets in New York, and I come to ask you to call and see me."'

"How far that little candle throws its beams! that mother's words on the green hill-side of Vermont! O God be thanked for the power of a single word!"

Reconciliation.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

"We entreat, on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Cor. v. 20.

Paul says, "For the mind of the (sarkos) flesh is death, but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace."—Rom. viii. 6. And the reason why the mind of the flesh is death is given in the next verse, "Because the mind of the flesh is enmity to God: for to the law of God it is not subject; nor indeed can it be." To be at enmity with God is to be in death.

But what does Paul mean by "The mind of the flesh?" See v. 9. "But ye are not in the (sarki) flesh, but in the Spirit, if indeed the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is not his."—Anderson. Jesus said to Nicodemus, "That which is born of flesh is flesh." Now the Spirit of God is not born of flesh, for Jesus says, "that which is born of Spirit is spirit."—John iii. 6. And Paul says, "Walk in the Spirit and ye shall not fulfil the desires of the flesh. For the desire of the flesh is against the Spirit, and the desire of the Spirit is against the flesh."—Gal. v. 17.—Anderson. Now since that which is born of flesh is flesh, it follows that those who have not been born of the Spirit have only the mind of the flesh, which is enmity to God. For it is evident from the testimony already quoted, that by "mind of the flesh" Paul means the natural, unregenerated state of man. This is the state into which all are born, and this state, being a state of enmity to God, which is death, Christ says, "Ye must be born again" before ye can enter the kingdom of God; ye must be born of the Spirit; not bodily, that is, physically, but spiritually and mentally, for that which is born of Spirit is spirit; but the body is flesh and will continue to be flesh even in the immortal state, if the first fruits from the dead is to be the sample; hence, being born of the Spirit is not the resurrection of the body or any change after the resurrection. It is purely of a spiritual nature, i. e., the birth of a new spirit within the man, containing a new principle of life which will ultimately (not change the flesh and bone into spirit, but) entirely supercede the blood life, changing the present vile body to one like unto the Lord's glorious body. Well, won't that be changing it to spirit? Let us ask Paul. What sayest thou, Paul? "For we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones."—Eph. v. 30. He was flesh and bones after he arose from the dead (see Luke xxiv. 39), and Paul, some thirty years after his ascension, speaks of him as still being flesh and bone. Immortalizing the body, then, is not the spirit birth, but is done to save the spirit that has already been born within the man. "That we deliver such an one over to satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."—1 Cor. v. 5. Now when a man has had a new spirit born within him—has become "renewed in the spirit of his mind"—he is then reconciled to God; this new spirit being both life and peace. He is then a child of God, as the apostle saith, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God."—Rom. viii. 14. Consequently there can be no reconciliation to God except by becoming a new creature in Christ Jesus, i. e., being born again of the Spirit, by which he becomes a son of God and joint heir with Christ. Let us now see if we can determine the means by which this change in the spirit of the man's mind is brought about.

In Rom. i. 16, Paul in speaking of the gospel says, "it is the power of God for salvation to every one that believes;" hence the gospel must contain some element sufficiently powerful when believed to destroy the enmity to God that exists in the natural mind, else the apostle would not call it the word of reconciliation—"And hath committed to us the word of reconciliation."—2 Cor. v. 19.

Thus far the Scriptures are clear and to the point on this subject. Man is by natural generation (born of the flesh) in a state of enmity to God. The natural result of which is, death, i. e., total and eternal extinction of life; and in order to escape this doom he must become reconciled to God; he must become a child of God and a partaker of his life by having a new spirit born within him, which spirit is life and peace; and the gospel being the word of reconciliation is the means, i. e., power used in producing this result.

We now inquire, What is the particular element in the gospel constituting it the power of God? In John xvii. 3, Christ says, "And this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—Anderson. Therefore, in order to become reconciled to God, a man must know him and Jesus Christ; for it is through him we gain the knowledge of God, and the gospel of Christ is the power of God for salvation, because in it is revealed the knowledge of God.

If we turn to 1 John iv. 7, 8, we will find him saying, "And every one that loves has been begotten of God and knows God. He who does not love does not know God, for God is love." Here love is made the test, to determine whether a man has been begotten of God or not. There were those in the church, even in John's day, that were not children of God (see 1 John ii. 19, and Jude 4 and 16); but professing to be Christians amounts to nothing. If they do not love they have not been begotten of God—they are still in the flesh, and abide in death. Why so? Because "the fruit of the Spirit" (the new spirit born within the man—Christ within the hope of glory) "is love," etc.—Gal. v. 22. And "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, but have not love, I have become as sounding brass, or a clanging cymbol. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith; so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I give all my goods to feed the poor, and though I deliver up my body to be burned, and have not love I am profited nothing."—1 Cor. xiii. 1–3. Why? Because if I have not love I am not a child of God, not having been begotten of God. Well, how may we know if we have love? "Love suffers long and is kind." Why, that is like God; he is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish. "Love envies not; love boasts not; is not vain; does nothing unbecoming, seeks not her own, is not easily provoked, thinks no evil, rejoices not in iniquity, but rejoices in the truth; bears all things [like as Jesus did], believes all things, hopes all things, and endures all things" [as good soldiers].—Vs. 4–7. Now John says again, "We love because he first loved us."—1 John iv. 19. This is the secret of the whole matter. This is what made John and the other disciples in his day love. But all who passed for disciples did not love. The incorruptible seed found no soil within them in which to take root; hence John says, "every one who loves has been begotten of God and knows God; he who does not love does not know God, for God is love." But men must first believe that blessed truth, that God first loved them, before it can produce love in their hearts: the seed must be planted in the soil before it will germinate. And how can men believe that God did first love them, without evidence to that effect? They cannot, and God does not require that they should. He has furnished the evidence. He has adapted the gospel to our natural state, that it may reach us in our state of enmity, and bring to us the evidence of his love and desire for our salvation; hence, it is a good message. Proof—"In this the love of God was manifested toward us." In what? "That God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him."—1 John iv. 9.

"But God makes known his love to us in this, that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."—Rom. v. 8.—Anderson.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoever believes on him should not perish but have eternal life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 16, 17. For God is love: and love could not look upon the helpless victims of sin, destined to eternal death, without being moved with an energy that only infinite love can feel in behalf of their salvation. "He desires all men to be saved."—1 Tim. ii. 4. What more, or stronger evidence of the love of God for poor sinful man can be required than is recorded in the above quotations? But is this the gospel that Paul preached as the power of God for salvation? Let him answer: "But I make known to you, brethren, the gospel that I preached to you, which also ye received, in which also ye stand, by which also ye are saved, if ye hold fast the word which I preached to you, unless ye believed in vain. For I delivered to you, among the first things, that which I also received: that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day," etc.—1 Cor. xv. 1–4.

"For the preaching of the cross is to those who perish, foolishness, but to us who are saved, it is the power of God."—1 Cor. i. 18.

"But we preach Christ crucified: to the Jews indeed a stumbling block, and to the Greeks foolishness, but to those who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ [crucified] the power of God and the wisdom of God."—Vs. 23, 24.

Is this all that Paul preached for the gospel? Did he not preach the kingdom? Yea, verily: but he first preached Christ, sent into the world by the Father, to be crucified for our sins, it being the strongest proof of the love of God for men, and his desire for their salvation that he could present. Proof—"For I determined not to know anything among you but Jesus Christ and him crucified."—1 Cor. ii. 2. "For Christ sent me not to immerse, but to preach the gospel; not with wisdom of speech, lest the cross of Christ should be deprived of its power."—Ch. i. 17. "Yet we speak wisdom among the perfect; but not the wisdom of this age, nor the rulers of this age, who are brought to naught, but we speak God's wisdom in a mystery, even that which had been hidden, which God predestined before the ages for our glory, which none of the rulers of this age knew; for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. But it is written: Eye has not seen, and ear has not heard, and into the heart of man have not entered, the things which God has prepared for those who love him."—Ch. ii. 6–9.—Anderson. So it appears that he preached the cross to reconcile aliens, and the kingdom for the instruction and building up of the disciples. And when his hearers believed the facts of Christ's death for their sins, and resurrection for their justification, and received them for what Paul preached them, viz., the evidence of God's love toward them, this truth, finding a lodgment in their hearts, impregnated them with a new life, and begat within them the Spirit of Christ. They were then "begotten of God," "by the word of truth," and were new creatures in Christ Jesus. Old things having passed away, all things became new. They loved because he first loved them. Hence Peter calls this word, The "incorruptible seed" (1 Pet. i. 23), and says those begotten by this seed, "purified their souls in obeying the truth." And thus they were reconciled to God through the death of his Son. The account of which, being believed, became to them the "word of reconciliation," because it convinced them of God's love for them. They were then sons of God (1 John iii. 1), and joint heirs with Christ.—Rom. viii. 17.

I can find no evidence in the Scriptures that the way into the sheep-fold was to be changed or modified. Therefore no authority for the coming to the anxious-seat to be prayed-for-process; or the standing up in meeting for the prayers of God's people-process. Men and women became children of God, in Paul's day, by first believing the word of TRUTH, then obeying it. Paul did not tell the jailor to go to praying, or to get some Christian to pray for him; but he did tell him to "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," and he and his house should be saved. And that he might believe, "They spoke the word of the Lord to him, and to all his house." What was the result? He believed and obeyed the word "and rejoiced, believing in God, with all his house."—Acts xvi. 34.

Now, when I read of sinners becoming anxious at revivals, and requesting the prayers of God's people, and yet refuse to obey the truth, I conclude that the evidence of God's love has not been clearly presented, or else they have not believed the testimony. And for a man to ask for the prayers of God's people, while he refuses to believe God's word, looks a little like mockery.

Benton Harbor, Mich.

A Smoking Minister.

We make the following extracts from an article in the "Advent Herald," by D. F. Newton. Let ministers and others think of this horrible practice and abandon it. Mr. Newton opens on the "Smoking Minister" as follows:

Smoke? Yes, he does—in his study—in his family, in the streets. I see him day after day in a book store, in Park Row, N. Y., with a cigar or dingy pipe in his mouth. Awful! shameful! Need we marvel that young men in the church and out of it—little urchins, and rag-a-muffins—are seen in the streets, chewing and smoking the vile "Indian weed," when ministers of the gospel, elders, deacons and class-leaders set the example? Example kills, example cures.

Need we marvel that there are in New York city, as Dr. W. Parker says, 235,000 smokers; and that allowing each of these smokers only two cigars per day, at the low price of ten cents, $47,000 is puffed away daily, making an expenditure annually of $17,155,000—aside from drinks which are almost sure to accompany, for tobacco and rum are twins, and go hand in hand.

. . . But to return to this smoking minister: his breath is repulsive, intolerably offensive. The whole atmosphere around him is a stench, even the sacred emblems of bleeding love at the communion table seem more or less impregnated! "The cup of blessing!" And when reproved for this sensual gratification—this unnatural and worse than beastly appetite, what is his apology? "What the harm?" says he, "Tobacco like strong drink, is one of God's 'good creatures?' to be used in moderation, with thanksgiving. Smoking and chewing tobacco make a man neither better nor worse in the sight of God. 'Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth this defileth a man.'—Matt. xv. 11."

Thus this man in sacerdotal garb goes smoking on, searing his conscience, gratifying his fleshly appetite, a slave to habit! When the leaders of our worshipping assemblies hold these views, what hope of reform! The evil goes on increasingly.

"Dearly beloved, I beseech you," says the apostle, "as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."—1 Pet. ii. 11. If one member in our churches is allowed in this filthy, degrading habit, why not another and another—till we have a whole assembly of smokers, chewers and snuffers? "One sinner destroyeth much good." "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

. . . The excuses for using the dirty tyrant are numerous and frequent. One uses it for his teeth; another, for his general health; a third, for his corpulency; a fourth, for his leanness; a fifth, for a watery stomach; a sixth, to help digestion; another because some ignorant sottish, wine bibbing, tobacco chewing or smoking doctor recommended it:—thus and thus, till the catalogue of excuses and subterfuges is filled out.

It is a matter of devout and hearty thanksgiving to God, that the most respectable, learned, and eminently successful of the medical faculty, with united voice, veto "the accursed thing," and warn their patients to lay it aside forever.

As Paul said to Timothy, so say we to you, reader, "Keep thyself pure." Be clean in your person, and be clean in your heart. But depend upon it you can be neither if you use tobacco. No tobacco user is fit for a bed companion. He is giving forth pestilential vapors from all the pores of the skin. He is an embodiment of perpetual miasm. The immediate atmosphere surrounding him is inevitably impregnated and polluted with the constant effluvia which emanates from his whole surface. He becomes a perfect walking distillery of the deadly essence, sending forth its fumes and vapors into the surrounding atmosphere. His mouth is the mill which grinds out the weed, and his whole body the distillery for the essence. Put a chewer or smoker into a vapor bath with no tobacco in the room, and in a short time the whole room will be strongly scented with tobacco effluvia that emanated from his body. Put him into a warm bath and get up a perspiration; then put that water upon flies or vermin or plants and it will destroy them.

Harry's Anti-Society.

It was a startling sight that met Mrs. Goodwin's eyes on Tuesday afternoon as she crossed Sixth avenue and turned into Fourteenth street on her way toward home. "Could it be?" She hastily brushed aside her veil. Yes, there was her own boy, Harry, walking along the street with James Williams, each puffing a cigar! Both boys were young, bright and intelligent looking. Mrs. Goodwin stood a moment in blank astonishment—her boy smoking! And what other bad habits might he not have contracted, all unknown to her? Harry passed on without seeing her, but she faucied he looked pale and ill.

The mother went home with a burdened heart. She had trusted her son; believed that he had been frank and confiding toward her. Was this the first cigar? Had he been tempted to taste of the intoxicating cup also? Mrs. Goodwin was a judicious mother; she watched Harry anxiously that evening, but said nothing about what she had seen in the afternoon. She was earnestly considering how she could best accomplish the object she had in view.

Wednesday afternoon Harry returned from school earlier than usual. As he entered the library where his mother was sitting she greeted him with a smile, saying:

"I was hoping you would get home early, Harry. I was going out, and wanted company."

Harry made some vague reply which attracted Mrs. Goodwin's attention. She saw his face was serious and troubled. Harry turned to his writing table, and soon commenced writing. Anxiously his mother watched his grave face. At length she rose, and went softly toward him. She laid her hand gently on his shoulder.

"Harry!"

"What is the trouble, Harry?"

"I'm forming an Anti-Society," said he, with an impetuosity which would have amused his mother, had she not known instinctively, that it resulted from deep, suppressed feeling.

"Anti means against. What are you against?"

"Mother, I am against smoking, swearing and drinking."

A rush of joy came to the mother's heart. She leaned over and pressed her lips upon the boy's open brow, and silently thanked God that he was saved. Then she sat down beside him.

"Now tell me all about it, Harry."

"Well, mother, of course I know that smoking and drinking and swearing are bad habits; but ever so many real nice boys in our school do these things, and they are always asking me to take a cigar or something, and laugh at me because I don't. Yesterday I did smoke a cigar—and sick enough it made me, too—and at recess James Williams gave us boys some kind of wine or spirit he brought to school in a bottle, and we all talked as I know is wrong. But, mother, isn't it dreadful? James was found drunk in a grog-shop last evening—really drunk. Our teacher told us about it just before school closed. And I want to sign a pledge to help me to keep from drinking and smoking. See, mother, this is my Constitution."

And Harry read aloud: "Whereas, drinking intoxicating liquor does not do any good, and leads to drunkenness; and whereas, to swear is a sin against God; and whereas, to chew and smoke are useless and filthy practices; therefore, in order the more effectually to keep free from these vices, I do, praying for the Divine blessing and help, form myself into a society to be called 'The Anti-Society,' and bind myself to observe strictly the pledges contained in the following articles:

"I. I will not drink anything that intoxicates.

"II. I will not take the name of the Lord in vain; nor make use of vile or profane language.

"III. I will not use tobacco in any form.

"(Signed) Harry Goodwin."

"An excellent pledge, my son," said Mrs. Goodwin, "only you should have a hundred names signed to it instead of yours only." And they talked over the matter together.

The next day at recess Harry collected the boys of his class together, and said:

"I hold in my hand the Constitution of a new society, called the Anti-Society. My name is already down. Shall I read it? All who are in favor say, Ay."

"Ay, ay," ran around the circle.

Harry read it slowly and distinctly. A deep silence followed. The boys looked at each other with sober, questioning faces.

"My name is down," repeated Harry, as he placed the paper on which the pledge was written upon the desk before him. "Who will join?"

Another moment's silence; and then James Williams, pale and serious, but with a look of stern resolution on his face, stepped forward, and amidst unbroken stillness affixed his signature to the pledge.

No other argument was needed. One after another the boys came up until every one had signed his name. This society, formed by one boy's influence, became a regular organization in the school—the teachers giving their hearty approval. Various officers were chosen, Harry Goodwin being elected President. And, what is better than anything else, the boys have nobly kept the pledge.—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

"ACCURACY AND HONESTY:"

OR, ELD. HIMES' CHALLENGE ACCEPTED.

THE Editor of "The Advent Christian Times," in response to our remarks in the HERALD OF LIFE of Dec. 8 on his statements in "The Times" of the week previous, concerning our course in the matter of the "General Conference" of Adventists, replies as follows:

NOT "A DELIBERATE MITSTATEMENT."

The Herald of Life takes our late editorial, An Amiable Warning, in high dugeon. Thinks there can be but little doubt that it was "a deliberate misstatement." We presume it would not have indulged in so harsh a remark, albeit it is given that way, had it not forgotten its editorial published some time since, in which it treated of the proposition uttered by the Buchanan Convention, in November '68, for a General Delegated Conference of Advent-Christians. We trust it will republish that editorial as a postscript to the one which calls for these remarks, keeping the same caption—Accuracy and Honesty.

As to the charge of acridity on our part, we think the Herald labors under a mistake. We quite agree with it, that "Christian journalists should try to speak the truth." We endeavor to do so, and to speak it in love, also. We did certainly suppose for a time, from the style of their publication, that the articles signed "W. H. S." were sanctioned as editorial. Many others were misled in the same way we were. Surely this is a small basis for a charge of dishonesty.

If we are not correct in saying that the Herald did editorially in a notice of the proposition for a General Conference utter words to the effect that such a Conference would be the inauguration of the Advent-Christians as the youngest daughter of Rome, let it say so; and we will either prove that it did, or acknowledge that we were in error.

We accept the challenge, and most cheerfully give the entire article which appeared in the HERALD one year ago the present month. Our old subscribers will bear with us in reproducing what we then said, for the sake of hundreds of new subscribers who have not seen it; and we wish all our readers to understand in what light we regard Conferences of the character spoken of.

The first paragraph in the foregoing extract shows how "amiable" Eld. Himes is. He applies to us the phrase "high dudgeon;" which phrase in plain English is, "Anger; ill-will; qnarrelsome; resentment; indignation." Some or all these epithets are applied to us in a "high" degree; and all this is, "to speak the truth in love!" If that is so, may we be delivered from that person's "anger," especially when it gets "high."

Let the reader bear in mind, as he goes through the following article, that though the "Resolution" to have a General Conference was the occasion of our writing as we did, that Conference was not specified as more censurable than any other organization, that attempts to restrict Christian men in their investigations after truth, and the free promulgation of their convictions. The following is what we did say:

"ADVENT CONFERENCES."

"MAKE us a king to judge us like all the nations." So said the Elders of Israel to Samuel, when he was old. The thing grieved Samuel, and he expostulated with them, and showed them the evil that would arise from such a course; but they would not hear, and replied, "Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like the nations," etc.—See 1 Sam. viii.

In 1842–3, it was often said by a prominent Advent leader of those days, and who still lives, "If we ever become a sect we will be the youngest daughter of the old MOTHER OF HARLOTS."—[That "leader" was Eld. J. V. Himes.]

After the failure of the set time of those days, it was soon discovered that the same leader, with others, was disposed to take steps toward some sort of organization, manifestly to exclude such men or doctrines as they might think likely not to harmonize with their views.

A conference was called in 1845, but not as a permanent organization. Some "Resolutions" were passed, etc. The movemet itself we were opposed to, and did not attend the conference. We regarded it as the entering wedge to a systematic organization so soon as the minds of a free people would bear it. How much or how long the voice of warning raised by ourself and some others at that time, retarded the movement that was destined to develop the "Youngest Daughter," we do not know. One thing, however, we do know, we have never by word or deed favored organizing conferences or churches with the name of Adventists, thus to become known as a sect; fully believing those who held the Advent or Life views were not called to any such work, but to spread these truths, as far as possible, among all professed Christians, whatever their organizations might be.

We have not sought to break up any of the churches that were in existence, or to persuade any one to leave those churches, if they could remain in them and be free to believe what their own convictions told them was the truth of God, and be allowed to let their light shine on others. Ministers, of course, belonging to those churches, if they embraced views new, or different from the church's standard, or creed, must, if faithful to their ordination vows, withhold their new views from their ministrations, or else withdraw from the ministry of such church. If they believed themselves called to preach the truth of God, and were satisfied their new views were contrary to the creed of the church with which they were connected, they must necessarily disconnect themselves from said church as a matter of good faith with the ministers of that body.

We have never, however, favored the formation of churches founded on our peculiar views, or as an organization with a distinctive name; fully believing such organizations were likely to hinder the advance of truth among other Christians. Yet we have not opposed the coming together of brethren and sisters in one locality and calling themselves a church in that locality, provided they did not tie themselves to a set of opinions which could not be changed by honest research and an interchange of thoughts one with another. Any other course we regard as tending to raise up lordships in the body, and so imperceptibly to destroy individual responsibility, and ultimately enslave the body to designing men, who would "seek their own, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's." On this ground we stand and have stood for the last near thirty years, we belong to Christ; and to him alone is our responsibility for what we teach.

We have lived to see not only churches organized, calling themselves "Advent Churches," but conferences by the same name. We have regretted this movement, foreseeing what we believe to be a tendency to lordship, and attempts to suppress any advance in knowledge, and a stereotyping process which would make the body just like any other sectarian organization, and as impenetrable to new truths as older sects, if not more so, from the idea that they are better than other sects because, as they suppose, they are in advance of all others.

We have seen this process of organizing conferences, especially, with deep sorrow. Next come "Resolutions:" advisory, of course, at first; but presently dictatorial; next, penal; excluding every one from their body who presumes to preach or teach what the majority of their body do not wish to have preached among them; thus coming to a level with all other bigoted and stereotyped sects against whom they have so often declaimed. Thus the point is reached and the place of the "Yougest Daughter" is occupied.

We have had occasion to speak against the proceedings of these self-created bodies several times; aware, however, that we incur their censure by so doing, and we have forborne, as much as possible, to speak against such a course, hoping the Lord himself would soon put an end to these things by His personal appearing and kingdom. It would seem, however, by this very delay of His appearing, the originators of these conferences are stimulated to extend their power, and we cannot avoid thinking of Aaron and Israel making a calf while Moses was in the Mount.

These reflections have forced themselves upon our mind in looking over the field and seeing the tendency to multiply conferences, and especially by the doings of "The late Conference at Buchanan," Mich. Among other things done at that meeting appear the following:

(1.) Resolved, That it is not only the right and privilege, but even the duty of the Advent-Christian people to maintain their church and conference organizations: not that we claim there is no genuine Christianity outside of our organization, but as a distinct people we have a great dispensational truth committed to our trust, viz: the immediate, personal advent of Christ, and its kindred doctrines.

(2.) Resolved, That all Adventists truly owe to themselves and to their brethren the work of identifying themselves with us in an organized capacity—thus merging their moral, social, and financial influence and aid in the cause we love, and thus augmenting churches and conferences in strength and influence, and increasing their power to do good to perishing men.

Here, in the first resolution, our "duty" is decided for us. Who authorized them to tell us what our duty is? Each of them may judge for himself what his own is, but we do not recognize or acknowledge any right this or any other self-constituted body has to tell us what our duty is. We meet this usurpation at the door. It is the first step of the "Youngest Daughter" to lord it over God's heritage; and if yielded to, our individuality is gone, and we exchange our responsibility to God for a subjection to men. The resolution is very modest in admitting that there may be some "genuine Christianity outside of our organization." What! "genuine Christianity" where men neglect their "duty!"

The second resolution declares, "That all Adventists" (of course, this means all believers in the Advent of Christ nigh) "truly owe to themselves and to their brethren the work of identifying themselves with us in an organized capacity," etc. To this we reply, "Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand."—Rom. xiv. 4. You may judge of what you "owe," but you cannot judge for others.

We do not admit your right or authority to tell us what we "owe" in these matters. We honestly believe such organizations as conferences, where our duties are marked out and imposed on us by the few who happen to be members of them, are a usurpation of men over the minds and actions of God's freemen, unwarranted by the Bible, and of a most dangerous character; and that the history of the church for many long centuries past has shown these bodies to be the projectors and upholders of heresy and persecution; out of them grew the monstrous despotism of papacy with all its abominations; and her daughters have followed in her footsteps, denouncing all who would not conform to their conference and synodical decrees, thus forcing men to keep silence, whom God had enlightened, on pain of exclusion from Christian fellowship, if not following them with a bitter persecution, and death itself, if in their power.

What guarantee have we that the "Youngest Daughter" will do any better as she grows older and begins to feel that she is a "power?" She already shows signs of feeling her importance, as the above resolutions show. Her voice seems to say, "Make us a king to judge us, like all the denominations around us: they are great by means of their organizations, conferences, synods, councils," etc.; "let us be like them." Expostulate with her, and show her "the manner" (1 Sam. viii.) of these denominations in shutting in error, and shutting out truth, and she stops not, but cries out, "Nay; but we will have" conferences "that we may be like the" churches around us.

As Samuel's voice was not heard, or his counsel regarded when he protested against this conformity of Israel to the nations around them, so it is not likely that our feeble protest will be heard so as to arrest these movements in bringing out the "Youngest Daughter," decked in the attire of her Mother—proscription, pains and penalties for non-conformity to her mandates. We may not live to see it; but, if the Lord does not arrest it by his coming or providence, some will see it.

This "Advent Conference at Buchanan" did not close without showing their determination to "be like the" other churches by adopting the following:

Resolved, That a General Conference of Advent Christians be called, to be composed of representatives from all the States and Territories of the United States, and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Resolved, That this conference shall consist of delegates from the several Advent Christian Conferences of the United States and Canada, each conference being entitled to three delegates. Provided, that in States, Territories, or Provinces where there are no conferences, and isolated Advent Christian churches exist, such churches may unite and send one delegate.

So they aspire to rise to the pinnacle of other churches soon as possible. Next, they resolve to appoint a "committee, to make arrangements for the time and place of the meeting of said General Conference." It was then Voted, That the following committee of seven ministering brethren act as a committee to carry out the objects of the resolution: Eld. John Couch, Eld. S. G. Mathewson, and Eld. Miles Grant, of the East; Eld. Joshua V. Himes, Eld. O. R. Fassett, and Eld. William Sheldon of the West; and Eld. John Porter of Canada.

Thus ministers, as usual, in the "nations"—denominations around them, are to lead off in carrying out the work of organizations; and of course directing in the actions of such bodies; and in fact controlling everything relating to the affairs of such conferences, while inferior ministers, or less favored ones, together with the larger portion of laymen, must stand aloof and foot the bill of expenses, and thank their rulers for telling them their "duty," etc. Truly, these are days of improvement backward toward Egypt, from whence we came out to find the liberty of reading the Bible and understanding it for ourselves, as those who must give account each one for himself. Have we not fallen on the "perilous times" of "the last days?" We say to all, "WATCH."

It is true, that when we published our remarks of Dec. 8, we did not have in mind the article now re-published from the HERALD of a year ago. We are glad Eld. Himes has called our attention to it, and hope he will be benefitted by a fresh perusal of it. If he is not, others will be; for it shows we did not anticipate "the inauguration of the Advent-Christian body of believers as the youngest of the harlot daughters of Rome," at their contemplated "General Conference at Rochester," as Eld. Himes affirmed in the article to which we replied Dec. 8.

In the first place, Eld. Himes himself furnished the name for the Advent body, in case they ever became a sect. He said of Advent believers, in 1842–3, "If we ever become a sect, we will be the youngest daughter of the old MOTHER OF HARLOTS." This statement he made in our hearing in the presence of thousands. Nevertheless, he, with others, has been continually organizing Advent churches, and Advent conferences for the past twenty years; and our article which he called upon us to re-publish, shows that we recognized the existence of the "Youngest Daughter" twelve months ago, at least; and we spoke of the future work of these conferences as "movements in bringing out" this child "decked in the attire of her Mother—proscriptions, pains and penalties for non-conformity to her mandates." Such was our language. The fact of her birth was in the past. A General Conference might help to nourish her into womanhood: it was that of which we spoke, as our entire article will show; and we would like to have Eld. Himes publish the article entire as a "postscript" to his statements of the HERALD's position. The easiest method for him doubtless will be to "acknowledge that" he was "in error." That we will accept.

Having said thus much on the subject, will Eld. Himes deny that certain "leaders" at the Rochester conference, in Nov. last, did seek to have that body proclaim a creed, articles of faith, or declaration of sentiments? and will he tell us whether those who presented or called for such a document, did willingly accept the vote of the conference to "lay it on the table?" If such a document was prepared by certain leaders, and sought to find place in the doings of said conference, it shows what some of the leaders wish to do, and what they design to do as soon as circumstances will allow. The "Minutes of that Conference" show such an attempt was made, though defeated for the time being. The attempt shows the design of those who attempted it; and we forewarn those sincere souls who are disposed to favor these conferences, that if the Advent of Christ is delayed a few years longer, articles of faith, or a "Declaration of Sentiments" will be imposed on the "organized" Advent bodies, to which they will be compelled to submit, or have pains and penalties inflicted upon them for presuming to differ from their theological positions.

While our Lord and Mast r remains in the heavens, or our present life is prolonged, we shall bear our testimony against such things. We fellowship all persons as Christians who manifest that they are accepted of Christ by showing the spirit of Christ; and we never inquire of such whether they are connected with any human organizations. If they belong to Christ, they are our brethren and sisters. But if any professing to be Christians attempt to organize, and then proceed to dictate as to what we shall believe or teach (as ultimately all such organizations do, or will), we say, you have usurped the prerogatives of Christ, and so far are antichrist.

A DISCOVERY.

BY D. J. ELLSWORTH.

IN reading Dr. Adam Clarke's commentary upon Rom. v. 12, and onward, we were surprised to find the very arguments which the opponents of "Life only in Christ" are using in these days, to prove the resurrection of the wicked dead. The writer in the "Crisis" of July last, in the article, "Pauline View of the Resurrection," which was commented upon by "Old Age," of Hartford, and by Br. Spencer, in HERALD OF LIFE for Dec. 15, places in his article, as if composed by himself, whole sentences and paragraphs, without notes or quotation marks, from Dr. Clarke's commentary, which were in part a quotation from Dr. Taylor.

Although the writer acknowledges having drawn largely from writers of ability, etc., yet no distinction is made, and the wording is such that no reader would have any occasion to doubt but that the theories advanced were wholly his own. Such, certainly, was the understanding of the Brn. already referred to, when they commented upon the article.

It is very singular, that the advocates of the mortality of man and the final utter destruction of the wicked, should take the arguments of those who believed in the immortality of the soul, and who did not believe that a man did really die twice, or even once. But to the point in debate.

The writer in the "Crisis" first quotes Rom. v. 18, "Therefore as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life," and says, "There is no question among scholars in regard to the character of this sentence. It is conceded to be elliptical." Then quotes, "Says one," "He who had no particular purpose to serve would most probably understand it from the context thus. Therefore as by one sin, all men came into condemnation; so also, by one righteous act, all men came unto justification of life."

There! Br. "H. H. D.," if that is not universal salvation, pray tell us what needs to be added?

Then, giving the comments of the person he quotes, upon the 12th, 13th, 15th, 18th and 19th verses, which I omit, we find this, "We maintain that as a consequence of Adam's disobedience, a sentence of condemnation to death, without any promise or hope of a resurrection passed upon all men; so by the obedience of Christ unto death, this one grand righteous act, the sentence was so far reversed that death shall not finally triumph, for all shall be again restored to life. Justice must have its due, therefore all must die. The mercy of God in Christ Jesus shall have its due also, and therefore all shall be put into a salvable state here, and the whole human race shall be restored to life at the great day."

This we find to be, "verbatim," from Dr. Clarke's commentary upon Rom. v. 18, except the first two words, "We maintain," which went to show it as a theory of the writer. And further, "The consequences of Christ's obedience extend as far as the consequences of Adam's disobedience. The consequences of Adam's disobedience extend to all mankind; and therefore so do the consequences of Christ's obedience."

This is "verbatim" from Dr. Clarke's quotation from Dr. Taylor, on Rom. v. 12. The ninety-six lines following in the article, to the closing paragraph, are copied whole (with the exception of a few words), from Dr. C.'s commentary upon Rom. v.

I will not transcribe at such length, but give the closing paragraph: "As Christ came as a Redeemer of men, all bound to death through the fall of Adam must be raised, or the death of Christ fails of its effect. As a supposition of a failure cannot be admitted, all men must be raised from the dead."

Now if Christ is the Redeemer of all men in the sense here used, that He will raise all men to life, will it not be well to look at the answer to the question, "How are the DEAD raised up, and with what body do they come," that we may ascertain what will be their condition when raised up, and their prospects for the future?

N. B. We quote from Inspiration. 1 Cor. xv. 40 and onward, "There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another." . . . "So also is the resurrection of THE DEAD. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

Well! what will become of them, then? We turn to 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Paul does not tell us that any of them will die again, but on the contrary that all have shouted victory over death.

Another phrase, often used by the opponents of the "Life views," we find given and repeated by the learned Dr., "Men are not subjected to death for their own personal transgression, but for the sin of Adam;" and he adds, "As through his transgression, all come into the world with the seeds of death and corruption within our nature, superadded to their moral depravity, all are sinful—all are mortal—and all must die."

I like the conclusion of the Dr. Men die because they belong to a mortal, dying race; because they have no principle of life within them to keep them alive. Clearly the result of Adam's sin, but not for his sin. For we read in the inspired Word, "That every man shall die for his own sin;" and, "That Christ came to save us from our own sins." "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" not simply in the sense which the righteous die; but, as clearly taught throughout the Bible, dying a death from which there is no recovery.

We will note one more argument of Dr. Taylor, given by Dr. Clarke, and close.

In continuation of the argument, "The consequences of Christ's obedience," etc., he says, "If the Jews will not allow the Gentiles any interest in Abraham, as not being naturally descended from him; yet they must own that the Gentiles are the descendants of Adam, as well as themselves; and being all equally involved in the consequences of his sin, from which, they shall all equally be released at the resurrection, through the free gift of God" (italics his own), "therefore they could not deny the Gentiles a share in all the other blessings included in the same gift."

No distinction is here made between the righteous and the wicked. All are to receive the gift of God; and what is it? We read, "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." "They that are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection FROM THE DEAD . . . cannot die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the RESURRECTION."

WINDSOR, Conn., Dec. 29, 1869.

THE BURNING DAY.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

MUCH is said of a time coming when the earth will be burned up with literal fire, as some expect, having a belief founded chiefly on two texts of Scripture, viz: Mal. i. 1, and 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10. The first of these might seem to teach it were there no other texts touching the same subject. But the one in 2 Pet. does not teach it.

Peter, speaking of the scoffers of the last days, says they were willingly ignorant that the antediluvian world perished, being destroyed by water. And reasoning from thence, affirms that the present heavens and earth will be destroyed by fire. The literality of the agents by which either world was, or will be destroyed, does not enter into his argument at all. It is the certainty of the destruction of the old world, from which he argues the certainty of the destruction of the present world.

The argument in favor of the world-burning theory is, The water that destroyed the old world was literal; therefore, the fire, which is to destroy this, is literal.

Be it so, for the sake of argument; then the destruction by fire will be as literal as the destruction by water, and no more so. Now the water of the deluge did not destroy the geographical earth, or the astronomical heavens at all. The same sun, moon and stars shine over our heads that shone over Noah's, and we have the same earth under our feet, and the same mountains, hills and vales. Consequently when the present heavens and earth are, in like manner, destroyed by fire, the same sun, moon and stars will continue to shine; and the same geographical earth will remain with its present mountains, hills and vales.

Again, the water of the deluge had a very literal and natural effect; so if the fire of the burning day is literal, it will also have a very literal and natural effect.

If the earth is melted as in a crucible, it will require time to cool. And homogenous bodies cool in times proportionate to the cubes of their diameters. The earth, therefore, from a molten state, would be six hundred thousand years in cooling, so as to be habitable. And even then it would be a virtreous mass of cinders, as hard as flint, and it would require another six hundred thousand years to desintegrate to form earthy soil, before they could plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. See Isai. lxv. 21.

So by whatever agent this earth is destroyed, it is certain that nothing more will be destroyed than was destroyed in the flood.

Moreover, it is evident that there is but one burning which awaits the earth, and but one time for that. If we examine other texts touching the same time, and the same event, we shall find the agent employed; whether it is literal fire or not.

Psa. xcvii.—"The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice. Clouds and darkness are round about him. A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about. The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord." This fire that burns up the enemies of the Lord, when he reigns, is the same as that spoken of by Peter and Malachi; but the hills melt like wax at his presence; and Peter says, "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up."

There can be no doubt but the same agent, which melts the elements with fervent heat, melts also the hills at the presence of the Lord; and it does not look like literal fire. Psa. lxxviii. 63.—"The fire consumed their young men; and their maidens were not given to marriage." No literal fire in this text.

Psa. lxxxix. 46.—"How long, Lord, wilt thou hide thyself forever? Shall thy wrath burn like fire?" Ezek. xxxviii. 19.—"For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken." See also Ezek. xxxvi. 5.

Deut. iv. 24.—"For the Lord thy God is a consuming fire, even a jealous God." And this jealous God is the consuming fire of "The burning day," as is evident from the following text, Isa. lxvi.—"For behold the Lord will come with fire and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Here the fire, the chariots and the sword are all used figuratively, or literally; but the two last are not literal, neither is the fire. Yet Paul says, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed in flaming fire," etc. But this must harmonize with Acts i. 11, "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He did not go into heaven in literal fire; his coming, therefore, in flaming fire must be the fire of his jealousy. "For all the earth shall be devoured by the fire of my jealousy."—Zeph. iii. 8. "For our God is a consuming fire."—Heb. xii. 29.

Fire is used as a term denoting the power of God in the destruction of his enemies irrespective of the agent, or agencies employed. It is also used to denote the zeal of the Lord; as in Judges v. 5.—"The mountains melted from before the Lord, even that Sinai from before the Lord God of Israel."

The above cases, with many more that might be added, are sufficient to show that the word is often used where no literal burning is intended. And in Malachi and Peter it cannot mean a literal conflagration of the solid mass of the earth and its waters. For such an event would come in collision with the "promise made of God unto the fathers." If the land promised to Abraham is melted to a cinder, and cooled off in any length of time, it cannot be the land he was called out to see, and to walk through the length and breadth of it. The ashes of a house are not a house, neither are the ashes of the real estate promised to Abraham and his seed, the real estate itself. But the promises of God are sure. Abraham and the saints will inherit the land now lying between the river of Egypt and the Euphrates, for the earth abideth forever.—Eccl. i. 4. And the land of promise will never be burned up.

LANDAFF, N. H., Dec., 1869.

GATHERED GEMS.

IT has been beautifully said that "the vail which covers the face of futurity is woven by the hand of mercy."

Prayer is ever profitable; at night it is our covering; in the morning it is our armor. Prayer should be the key of the day, and the lock of the night.

As the magnetic needle points always toward the Pole, so does pure love evermore point its possessor toward that God whose character and whose name is love.

Be always frank and true; spurn every sort of affectation and disguise. Have courage to confess your ignorance; confide your faults and follies to but few.

Do little things as if they were great, because of the majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ, who dwells in thee; and do great things as if they were little and easy, because of his omnipotence.

The greatest man is he who chooses the right with invincible resolution, who resists the sorest temptations from within and without, who bears the heaviest burden cheerfully, who is the calmest in storms, and whose reliance on truth, on virtue, and on God, is the most unfaltering.

As you would be lovely in the sight of God, try to be Christ-like. Certainly it is the spirit of Christ within you, which only can make you lovely; the more you resemble him in holiness, the more will you manifest of true excellence; and the more frequent and spiritual your communion with Christ, the more of the loveliness of Christ will be stamped upon your heart, changing you into the same image, from glory to glory.

Grace to live from day to day an increasingly Christian life, without being inordinately anxious about the morrow; faith in Christ as the only and all sufficient Saviour for us; and more success in imitating the example of him who is Lord and Master, are, and must be, the great aim of every Christian, and if ever reached and realized, will prepare him equally for death and life.

The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found, and never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has been our lot to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments, in order to enjoy themselves. Contentment and useful work are sure to bring happiness.—Selected by W. H. S.

J. H. JACOBS, Blodgets Mills, N. Y., writes: We are highly pleased both with the appearance, conduct, and contents of the HERALD. I am doing what I can to advance the glorious cause it so nobly and effectually vindicates, and will not forget to try to enlarge the area of its usefulness. Herewith I send to renew the subscription of O. S. Parker, and one dollar for myself.

W. H. FORD, Tipton, Mo., writes: I have sixty cents more to spend for pamphlets and tracts. Send me the Six Sermons and some Campaign Documents. I am doing all I can for the cause. It is a new thing here, but it will take.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 12, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

THE irregularity of the mails, we learn, has been a source of trial to many of you. We do not wonder that it has. Some do not get their papers for days after they are due; and then cases occur when two or three of different dates arrive at the same time, and others never get them at all. This state of things has increased rather than diminished for the past two or three months. We have complained to the Post Master of this city, and asked if there is any remedy. But none seems to come. Corruption, negligence, or dishonesty, seems to be the order of the day everywhere and among all classes. These things make us much trouble and labor, bordering on discouragement. After all our care and labor to have our papers got up in good order, to have them delayed or destroyed on their route to subscribers is one of the trials we have to encounter. We endeavor to supply subscribers with the lost or missing numbers when in our power; in nearly all cases which have come to our knowledge we have sent the numbers. Continue to inform us of these failures; but be sure to state the number that is missing. If we have one of them left, we always send again.

AMBROSE RONDTHALER.

THIS Br. is of the Moravian denomination; Principal in one of their public Institutions, and a Preacher among them. Accompanying his "New Year's Greeting"—which we gave our readers last week—was a private note, in which he said,

"I am writing another article for our paper. It will be of a more doctrinal character than my Greeting. The Lord willing, I shall send it in two or three days. I am at present enjoying some days of recreation, and thus am enabled to spend some time in writing for the HERALD. How often I wish that I could write something suitable—especially in order to lighten your work. Week after week Br. Storrs writes for us. Thank you; yes indeed, thank you. But a little help now and then will give you time to rest. The Lord bless us all."

We thank Br. Rondthaler for his efforts to ease our labors. The first of a series of Letters, by him, to a friend, on the Life views, has come to hand, and will shortly appear in our columns. We hope he may find time often to write for "our paper." Yet we assure all, we have no time to waste. In addition to our editorial work, printing books, pamphlets and tracts call for continual care, and sending them off to orders is no small work; all of which has to be done with our own hands. Beside all this, we have to revise our mail books, make entries in them daily; change post office addresses frequently; the labor of which is increased frequently by writers not attending to our standing directions at the right hand head of our paper. Some, who write on business, neglect to give their own name; and occasionally omit their post office address and names both. It would seem as if they thought we were next to infinite in knowledge: they know not the wearisome hours they cause us by this heedlessness on their part.

We have made this sort of digression, because some of the heedless ones will read it, attached as it is, who would pay no attention to a separate notice of the matter. We hope they will profit by it, and study the last paragraph, at the head of our paper, under the "TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE."

FROM WM. H. SPENCER.

BR. STORRS: When I wrote you last I was confined to the house. I am much better now, so that I am trying to work some this week again. I have suffered a great deal the past month, but I thank the Lord for his sustaining grace. My lungs are very sore, and I have spells of coughing which cause me severe distress. But my medicine seems to act well, and I am hopeful. I hope now to begin to use my pen again; but the Dr. requires me to seek so much rest that I am deprived of as much time for study and writing as I would desire. In fact, for the past two weeks I have laid it aside almost altogether. I have just commenced a series of articles, "The Destiny of the Ungodly," in which I hope to make a strong impression upon the minds of the public in favor of our great truth, and by making it as readable as possible. I will try and send you a batch of this the fore-part of the week.

I should be glad to write more, but cannot this time, as I am so tired and weak, and this has been written in great haste. May the Lord bless you, and your family, is my prayer.

Yours, in the holy bonds of Christian love.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 6, 1870.

N. B.—I hope soon to write you an article on the "Uncertainties of Geology."

MAN IN DEATH.

IMPORTANT WORKS AT REDUCED PRICES.

THE WATCH TOWER: or Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the SIX SERMONS in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in d ath, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

We have just issued a cheap edition of this work, which will be sold at ten cents, postage (2 cents) added. Ten copies will be sent for one dollar, free of postage.

That those who are not familiar with this work may get an idea of its object, we give a few paragraphs from "CHAPTER I," as follows:

THE chief watchman of the flock in ancient times, had his "Watch Tower" from which he could survey the most distant field where his flock ranged. Concern for them would cause him to give many anxious looks in the direction they had gone; and night might sometimes overtake them in the field. Still he keeps a vigilant look-out for them. He watched the going down of the sun, and looked for the morning, when that glorious orb would re-appear. Under-shepherds might often inquire—"Watchman, what of the night?" At length he responds—"The morning cometh."

So, looking out upon the setting sun of this life, the watchful mind may be led to inquire, "Will the orb of day ever return?" or, "If a man die, shall he live again?"—Job xiv. 14. "Will he be revived into life?" Night has closed in upon him, and all is dark and cheerless in death, unless there are good and sufficient reasons for faith in a future life; and the anxious Watcher cries out—"I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope. My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning: I say, more than they that watch for the morning."—Psa. cxxx. 5, 6.

From the Watch Tower we observe the night closing in on our friends and fellow-travelers; and our anxious hearts long to see clearly through the darkness thrown over them by the closing tomb. Fancy cannot, and will not satisfy thoughtful minds in this matter.

What is it to be in the state of death? is an inquiry to which no man can well be indifferent. Job gave utterance to language common to all men, when he asked concerning man in death, "Where is he?"—Job xiv. 10. Unaided by Revelation an awful uncertainty must rest upon the human mind on this question. Had we to occupy the position of the wisest heathen, when we commit our friends to the tomb, we should still inquire in vain, "Where is he?" Men have indeed dreamed their departed loved ones into some paradise: but it has been one of imagination only; and one which they would much rather have kept them from entering, if they could possibly have retained them here.

So far from man being able to penetrate the gloom of death, to find comfort or life for any in that state, the Lord has asked the solemn and significant question—"Have the gates of death been opened to thee? or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death?"—Job xxxviii. 17. If, then, living men have not, and cannot enter into that state, to explore those dark regions, what folly to talk of knowledge there.

The knowledge of that state, as to the condition of those who descend into it, must be a matter of direct revelation from God, if possessed at all. Human reason and philosophical speculations are just as unavailing here, as they are in relation to man's origin. Unaided by revelation, who could ever have found from whence man derived his being? Men, Christian men, talk loud and long about man's dignity! Pray, where do they learn such a lesson? Is it from revelation, or the vain speculations of philosophy? or that "wisdom by which the world knew not God?"—1 Cor. i. 21. They talk of the separate existence of a human soul—its immateriality, its immortality, and conscious existence in death, as if these matters were facts not to be questioned or denied. A denial of these points is denounced as infidelity; no matter how closely we may adhere to scripture authority in our denials. It seems as if Platonic speculations, with them, outweighed the plainest scripture testimony. We do not accuse them of knowingly thus preferring human to divine testimony. Early religious training has created a prejudice in favor of the Platonic theory, which thereby has become interwoven in all their religious experiences, so that fear of final apostacy prevents their allowing themselves to doubt the truth of any of these topics in relation to "the soul."

By this course they shut themselves up to a stereotyped theory, without ever seriously considering that it may, ultimately, prove disastrous to them or their posterity. This theory, it is evident to our mind, as men advance in means of information, must lead to real infidelity, or to the equally fatal scheme of spirit-rapping—or, to speak more truthfully, animalism—which is now sweeping over the earth.

That the doctrine held by most professed Christians, concerning man's duality—or double being—one part of which is immortal, and survives in a conscious state in death, is not the doctrine of scripture, we trust will be made apparent by a careful examination of those texts relied on for its support, and the opposing testimony of scripture. The question we are to discuss is not, "What is the soul?" or "What is the constitution of the soul?" These questions are purely philosophical, and for answers to them philosophy may be consulted, by such as are anxious to know what God has not seen fit to reveal. The Bible nowhere propounds nor answers such questions. Every assertion by man, about a human soul—as a separate existence—and every statement of the nature, capability, and mode of existence of such a soul, is neither more nor less than a human opinion. Just what that is worth, all such speculations are worth, and no more. The Bible propounds no such topics, and gives no countenance to them. The question before us, then, is not "What is the separate state of the soul after death?" but "What is the state of man in death?" and "What is the hope for him in the future?" The soul or spirit of man—as those terms are theologically employed—as a disembodied personality, is an idea unknown to inspiration. ARCHBISHOP WHATELY, in his "Revelation of a Future State," says—"To the Christian, indeed, all this doubt would be instantly removed, if he found that the immortality of the soul, as a disembodied spirit, were revealed in the Word of God." . . . "In fact, however, no such doctrine is revealed to us; the Christian's hope, as founded on the promises contained in the Gospel, is the resurrection of the body."

BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

IN this work the true teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the real meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

We have had printed a small edition of this work, on light paper, done up in paper covers, and put at the low price of 40 cents single copy; if sent by mail 44 cents, which covers the postage. Five copies, to one address, $2, free of postage.

The call for our "Campaign Documents" has been steady, and a multitude have gone out preaching the words of Life. Such preachers can go anywhere at little expense, and preach so silently that the enemies of truth are foiled in their efforts to prevent its spread, till it has such hold on the reflecting mind as to make it next to impossible to dislodge it. Let these messengers go forth by thousands and tens of thousands. Now is the time to send them out. Many are compelled to think, in these days, who at other times remained indifferent or altogether thoughtless. Let us all work while it is day.

EXPECTATION MAY BE REALIZED.

THERE are sincere persons who think Rome will literally sink during the session of the Ecumenical Council in that city. It may be so; but the encouragement to look for the event soon is rather small; especially if the "Advent Herald" is right in the following statement:

"The Ecumenical Council at Rome is likely to be a long one. Indeed, a well-posted authority says it is not unlikely to continue its short sessions of debates in Latin from day to day, week to week and month to month, for a year, or for two, five, ten, or twenty. The last Ecumenical Council—that of Trent—dragged through the long period of eighteen years, and this was three hundred years ago. The mass of work which has since accumulated for the present Council, we may therefore assume, imposes a task which can hardly be discharged thoroughly inside of ten years, making all allowance for modern improvements, even in church debates."

We think if Rome is literally to be swallowed up by "the earth opening its mouth," there is a strong probability that a "ten years" session of the present Ecumenical Council will last to experience it; and "the Mother of God" may have an opportunity, by a resurrection from the dead, to join in the shout of praise recorded in Rev. xix. 1–4; and the prophecy of Rev. xviii. will be fully explained. Let the reader turn to and read it.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.—ITS FRIENDS.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

BR. STORRS: I was visiting, last Thursday, at the house of Sister Hart, widow of the late Br. Roswell Hart, of Southington, Conn., who was as you well remember, one of the most earnest supporters of the HERALD, and was a faithful and long-tried friend of the "Bible Examiner" before the HERALD was started.

This good brother—whose godly faith and example leave behind a testimony that is of praise and honor to Christ Jesus, and a grateful remembrance of him ever abiding in the hearts of the faithful men who knew him—was taken from his family and the family of God, on earth, by a sudden stroke, about one year ago. He slept, finally, in Jesus, Jan. 16, 1869. A beloved daughter followed on the 22d. Sister Hart was so low with the same fever at the time of her husband's death, as to be unable to see him or realize that he was carried away to his burial. She recovered to find that she was deprived of the beloved one with whom she had so many years lived in the most perfect union, and in the faith of Christ was laid asleep in the arms of the Blessed till the morning of the resurrection, when the LIFE-GIVER shall unite them forever in his Jerusalem. As they were among the first to receive the pure truth upon Immortality and Life in Christ alone, so they hold on to the last.

You knew well that his interest did not abate while he lived. The same is true of Sister Hart. She has shown her abiding interest in the HERALD OF LIFE. She said that, "after the Bible, it is the best of all; we could not live without it." Several of the sons have come to Christ; and while mourning she is rejoicing. The HERALD is a blessing to many, some of whom may not endorse all of its views, yet they love it. I heard a sister, who stands somewhat alone in taking it, say, "It is the very best thing we have in our time."

There is one sad fact to mention in this connection. The brethren have not been awake to call and speak words of sympathy and encouragement. This ought not to be so. I will speak of others who have been examples of faith, ere long.

DEATH.

BY A. BOYNTON.

"As in Adam all die."—1 Cor. xv. 22.
"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."—Rev. xiv. 13.

IT is evident to our mind that Paul alludes to the same class with John, and to them only, viz: Christians. How then can they die in Adam and also in the Lord? The meaning of words is not to be taken in an absolute, but accommodated sense, i. e., by considering the subject matter in connection.

Death is the common lot of all the race of Adam, because of their connection with him, as his offspring; and yet death in its nature, we think, may be classed into three kinds, natural, penal, and sacrificial. Natural death is what we everywhere behold in the vegetable and animal kingdom; a death by nature's law without volition, consequently not on account of a moral character, but because of its condition or nature. Does not Paul allude to men of this class over whom death reigned from Adam until Moses? and would it not be reasonable to suppose, the masses of the race were of this same class? making the words of the poet emphatically true,

"Like brutes they live,
Like brutes they die."

Penal death affects those who are under the law, and who wilfully transgress that law; for the "sin," as John Wesley says on the passage, "is a wilful transgression of a known law." Life and Immortality are brought to light through the gospel of Christ, the LIFE-GIVER. "This is the condemnation that light," the light of life "has come, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." Therefore death is their portion as a penalty for their sin of unbelief in rejecting the LIFE-GIVER. They cling fast to the old stock, and refuse to be engrafted into Christ, that they may have their fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting Life. Thus two deaths are theirs; not two in number, but two in kind. They die naturally as a condition of the race; and penally as guilty of rejecting Christ as a hope of a resurrection, or new life by him.

Sacrificial death is for the Christian, who seeing the justice of the divine law yields to its claims willingly, while he lays hold on a better life which is offered in, through or by Christ, which is a spirit life, angelic, immortal. As proof of our position we offer the following passages: "For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law."—Rom. ii. 12. "By the law is the knowledge of sin."—Rom. iii. 20. "For until the law, sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed where there is no law. Nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression."—Rom. v. 13, 14. "Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish."—Psa. xlix. 20. Solomon seems to allude to the same class in Eccl. iii. 18–20, classifying them with the beasts. Jesus says, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin."—John xv. 22, 24. "But he that believeth not, is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil." John iii. 18, 19. "I said therefore unto you that ye shall die in your sins; for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."—John viii. 24. See also Ezek. xviii. 4, 20. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "What fruit had ye in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. For the wages of sin is death."—Rom. vi. 21, 23. "For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death."—Rom. vii. 5.

The sacrificial nature of Christianity is alluded to by our Saviour in these words, "For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it."—Matt. xvi. 25. "He that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto eternal life."—John xii. 25. Paul says, "I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, . . . that I might know him and the power of his resurrection," etc.—Phil. iii. 8–10. See Rom. vi. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice," etc.—Rom. xii. 1. "For none of us liveth unto himself, and no man (of us) dieth unto himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord," etc.—Rom. xiv. 7, 8. "Them also which sleep in Jesus."—1 Thess. iv. 14. "They also which are fallen asleep in Christ."—1 Co. xv. 18. "If any man come to me and hate not his father . . . and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."—Luke xiv. 26; explained v. 33: "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

How true it is, that in the flesh dwelleth no good thing; and the Christian is ever willing to suffer loss in this direction, that he may be renewed in the inner man, built up in Christ, begotten by the Spirit, and born by him (who is the resurrection and the Life) when he comes in his kingdom.

FRANKLIN AND HIS PAPER.

SOON after his establishment in Philadelphia, Franklin was offered a piece for publication in his newspaper. Being very busy, he begged the gentleman would leave it for consideration. The next day the author called and asked his opinion of it. "Why sir," replied Franklin, "I am sorry to say that I think it highly scurrilous and defamatory. But being at a loss on account of my poverty, whether to reject it or not, I thought I would put it to this issue,—at night, when my work was done, I bought a two-penny loaf on which I supped heartily, and then wrapping myself in my great coat, slept very soundly on the floor until morning, when another loaf and mug of water afforded a pleasant breakfast. Now sir, since I can live very comfortably in this manner, why should I prostitute my press to personal hatred or party passion for a more luxurious living?"

Upon reading this anecdote we are reminded of the reply of Socrates to Archelaus the king, who had urged the philosopher to give up preaching in the filthy streets of Athens and come and make his home at the imperial mansion.—"Meal, please your majesty, is a half-penny a peck at Athens, and water I get for nothing."

Franklin was right. No publication, secular or religious, can be so pecuniarily straitened that it cannot well afford to refuse every contribution calculated to debase it. Socrates was right. An humble maintainance in the discharge of duty, is incalculably better than rich attire and sumptuous fare at the expense of convictions of truth.

RARE INTEGRITY.

THE borough of Hull, in the reign of Charles II., chose Andrew Marvell, a young gentleman of little or no fortune, and maintained him in London for the service of the public. With a view to bribe him, his old school-fellow, the Lord Treasurer Danby, went to him in his garret. At parting, the lord treasurer slipped into his hands an order upon the treasury for £1,000, and then stepped into his carriage. Marvell looking at the paper, called after the treasurer, "My lord, I request another moment." They went up again to the garret, and Jack, the servant boy, was called. "Jack, what had I for dinner yesterday?" "Don't you remember sir, you had the little shoulder of mutton that you ordered me to bring from a woman in the market?" "Very right, what have I for dinner today?" "Don't you know sir that you made me lay up the blade-bone to broil?" "'Tis so; very right, go away." "My lord, do you hear that? Andrew Marvell's dinner is provided; there's your piece of paper, I want it not. I know the sort of kindness you intended. I live here to serve my constituents. The ministers may seek men for their purpose; I am not one."—Selected by L. C. T.

Letters and Extracts.

From W. H. H. McAllister.

Br. Storrs: I wish to tell you and our readers, how I spent the first Sunday of the new year. By previous arrangement I had consented to go to Bethel to speak for our friends there. In the forenoon I spoke from these words, "What must I do to be saved?"—Acts xvi. 30. It was my endeavor to sketch the divine plan of salvation. I tried to show our need of salvation, and from what we are to be saved; what it is to be saved; the means God has appointed to accomplish this; how we may obtain it; its desirability; the reasonableness of the plan; and our duty in bringing men and women to accept its terms. I held up Jesus as the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved, the second Adam the head of the spiritual race. I showed the necessity of the second birth to enable us to see the kingdom of God, without which we cannot survive the wreck of the mortal race. I quoted from scripture to prove that this plan will have its accomplishment by a resurrection of the daad, and per contra that the whole plan would fail without it. I tried to show that its attainment is conditioned on repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the afternoon I spoke on the hope of the gospel. The main argument was to show this hope is of a future life by a resurrection from the dead at the appearing of Jesus Christ. This I tried to show from the promises made to Abraham and their fulfilment; by the teachings of Jesus Christ; by the testimony of Paul, James, Peter, and John.

The Lord gave me great liberty in this my first attempt to present the truth of His word in a public manner. My only prayer was, that some good might be done in his name, the believer confirmed and some sinner brought to see his true condition and his need of a Saviour. I endeavored to manifest the broad principles of Christian love, not seeking to tear down to build up, but so presenting and strengthening my argument, that the influence would be irresistible that if I were right other systems could not be.

The audience was good considering the weather, and was composed in part of members of the Methodist Church. Some of the heartiest responses came from them. In the afternoon I had such liberty and entered so fully into the subject that I was oblivious of the passage of time, and before I knew it, (I am ashamed to say it, and promise to keep better watch in the future), I had spoken an hour and a quarter.

In the evening we had a prayer meeting. Owing to rain there was not a large attendance but we had an excellent meeting. Some young men and youths in their teens bore noble witness for Jesus and avowed their determination to serve him. The older portion of the audience were moved by the spirit of love and testified to the riches of his grace.

There is a good interest in this place, and many have been led within a few months to seek salvation. Eld. J. A. Cleaveland preaches here one fourth of the time. His time expires in April. Other preaching occasionally. Br. Lewis is anxious that I should supply them for the next year. How the Lord may lead me I do not know. I pray that I may do my duty, and if He needs me for an ampler field He will let me know it, and prepare the way. Pray for me brethren and sisters that I may stand up for the truth and be instrumental in leading some to Christ. Yours for the truth.

St. Albans, Vt., Jan. 10, 1870.

From Polly G. Pitts.

Br. Storrs: I have again taken my pen to write a few lines for the Herald; but where shall I begin? O, who can tell the pleasing story of the blessed Spirit's influence; the Spirit that bringeth the peace that passeth all understanding? I can sit, and worship, and feel Jesus within, the hope of glory, but can never tell it. I can say, "Stay, blessed Spirit with thy holy calm, and let every power and faculty of my being worship Thee." I can adopt the language of Mary the Mother of Jesus, when she said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit doth rejoice in God my Saviour;" for has He not regarded our low estate? Yes, verily, and blessed be His name forever. But who can tell the joy? None.

When I read the Herald of Life, and ponder upon the things that have come to pass, I exclaim, "It is God that has done it. He has taken the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, and things that were despised has He taken to fight the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickedness in high places." O, when I think of the thousands of instruments that God is using for spreading his eternal truth, "No Life out of Christ," and that He is sanctifying the instruments in His hands, I say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless His holy name." O, may all the instruments grow to His hand, so that one spirit of life may run through the whole body, being bound together by the love of God, so that neither life nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Yea, Christ Jesus our Lord is the Alpha and Omega; the First and the Last of God's love to fallen man. It is He that was dead and is alive forever more, and hath the keys of death and the grave. O, blessed resurrection morning, when He shall unlock the prisons of the grave, and bid the sleepers awake to life and immortality; to glory and blessedness. O, what a glorious day when the voice of the great multitude that no man can number, shall sound like the voice of great waters, like the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, "Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." O, will not the earth tremble with glory? Yes, verily, for, "As I live, saith the Lord, the whole earth shall be filled with my glory." Amen; so be it. Then, Br. Franke, we can tell the story; then we can sing the new song, saying, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." And again, "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign upon the earth."

I thank you, Br. Franke, for mentioning my name; once it would have hurt me, but now, blessed now, I can say truly, the Lord being my witness, it gave me the spirit to take the lowest room. I am thankful to-day that I have a name among God's people, though it may be the least of all. I too can mention names; many of our dear friends in Christ who live in my heart. O, how sweet the remembrance of the old writers of the Herald, who sleep in the dust of the earth. I can say of such, Sleep on, blest sleepers; God's own hand has drawn the curtain of unconsciousness about you; no time to the sleepers; when the last thought closed, the next thought will be the resurrection.

I will speak of one name on account of my pleasing thoughts afterward. Sr. Lucretia B. Lamb. I love the spirit of her communications. I used to imagine her as a middle aged mother, with a family of children around her; perhaps little ones, yet trying to improve upon the talents God had given her; but when I read her communication written the day that she was 70 years old, I thought of the precious promises of God to the aged in the way of righteousness. He says, "They shall bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing; they shall renew their strength; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint. Their leaf shall be green." Again, He saith, "And even to your old age I am He; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you; I have made and I will bear; even I will carry and will deliver you." Is it not written that, "The grey head is an honor, if found in the way of righteousness? And the beauty of old men is their grey head?" O, let us remember that the whiter our heads, the nearer they look like the hair of Him whose hair of his head was like pure wool.

I bless God that he has given a banner to so many old ones, that it may be displayed because of the truth. And to the young and blooming sons of God I would say, Though sore trials may await you, press on, the crown will soon be given. And to the middle aged I would say the same.

I would be glad to mention many names, for it does us good; it cheers us up in this pilgrim journey. But my prayer shall be that all our names may be precious in His sight, and be found in the Lamb's book of life. Let us all pray that sister Lamb's sight may be restored, and that God may give her full strength to finish the work that He has given her to do.

May a double portion of God's Spirit rest on Br. Storrs, give him all the strength he needs, and keep him at his post till He shall say, Lay down thine armor and take thy crown.

May grace, mercy and truth be and abide with the whole Israel of God, henceforth and forever.

Your sister, hoping for life when the Life-giver comes.

Fredericksburg, Iowa, Dec., 1869.

From J. Hamilton.

To Br. Storrs, and all our dear Brethren and Sisters of like precious faith: As the Herald of Life comes to us every week, so richly laden with truth, and the loving epistles from the Lord's faithful ones, discharging that duty enjoined, to speak often one to another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching, I feel a desire to say to you all, though feeble, we are still pursuing, directed by the light that shines from God's blessed word, which shines more and more as the faithful ones laboring in the vineyard clear away the traditions of men that have for so many years obscured the light. But the harvest is great and the laborers are few. May God give them wisdom and strength equal to their day; for many are yet in traditions deep, and don't know it. But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John, i. 7. How cheering is that fellowship which we have one with the other. This more than compensates for the lack of that fellowship from others, professed followers of Christ, who do not receive the light which we have. But he that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. Ah we see human nature to be the same in every age of the world. He that brings out the clearest light from God's word has always been persecuted most. But the consolations of Christ's words, are the joy of his people. He says, I am the good Shepherd; the good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. I lay down my life, that I may take it again. And when he had taken it again, he said, All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth.—Math. xxviii. 18. And again, I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forever more, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.—Rev. i. 18. He says, Because I live ye shall live also.—John xiv. 19. I have often been reminded of the words of David in the xxivth Psalm, when I have taken the wrapper from the Herald of Life, with its clean hands and pure heart. Read all the Psalm and make the application.

Our health of body is still feeble; but we greatly rejoice feeling that our redemption draweth nigh. It is a great consolation to us, that we are united in a living faith with a praying people, that pray in faith for each other; for Br. Storrs, and for the Brethren and Sisters who help feed the sheep and lambs of Christ. May we all realize where there is much given, there is much required; and may the effectual fervent prayer be offered by us all, that we may be kept by the power of God through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed when Jesus shall come.

Fredonia, N. Y., Dec. 28, 1869.

From L. J. Foster.

Br. Storrs: I never have permitted a word from my pen to appear before the public; but with great caution I venture to write for your paper, thinking I have kept concealed long enough. I have prayed about it, for I wish to please the Lord in every iota of thought, word and deed. I expected Him to cleanse this earth in 1843; but notwithstanding my disappointment, I am willing to wait for him though very feeble and poor. When I was seven years old I believed in Christ in my heart, but refused to confess him with my mouth therefore I must be unsaved till I did so, which was not till almost out of my "teens." But I thank His dear name that I was enabled to then; for now I have such peace in believing and joy in the Holy Spirit. The way is a shining way, that shineth more and more. Though it is over forty-two years since I confessed and tried to please Christ, still my love to him doth not in the least abate. No, glory to His dear name.

Dear children, let us sing "How precious is the name of Christ, the pascal Lamb." Truly we ought to sing of His love, though in the deep waters of affliction, when He sweetens them with his love.

In the year 1864, I had a dislocation and broken bone, which made me bed-fast in one position four months. I was a wonder to many. They would say, "I could not lie so quiet." Neither could I without the grace and strength that God supplies, and which he has promised to give if our needs require. If we ask of Him, we shall receive. I did converse with Him more than all other beings. Many months I was too feeble to hold my Bible to read, and did not try, though a dear book to me. I wish to tell you what was among my first reading at that time. "Fret not thyself because of evil doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity; for they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb." These two verses affected my mind wonderfully. I said, "That doctrine I thought so awful, I guess is correct after all." I have opened to it, and felt powerfully impressed with its truth; but have been cautious to whom I mentioned my change of mind, lest I should do harm. Soon, however, a friend was talking with me on some points that led to the subject, and before I was aware, began to accuse me of such a faith. I said, "Why do you speak thus?" The reply was, "Because I see that my sayings hit you; and now I ask you plainly, Do you believe such stuff?" I answered, "Yes; when I am drawn to such a point, the truth must come." The response was, "Well, if I believed so, I would take my fill of pleasure." I replied, "My pleasure consists in doing the will of the Lord; and I am not in the least inclined to go to the world for happiness; no such bubbles attract my attention: no, such things are not worthy the attention of the pure and the good who can see the Lord in every blade of grass that waves."

I pray that some item of comfort may be imparted by these lines to some lone ones; for recently I have been numbered with that class.

Note by the Editor.

We presume the writer of the above letter is the widow of Dea. Foster, whose obituary appears in another column. Our correspondents should write their names so as to leave no doubt of their sex. We have often had trouble by their neglect in this matter. Do not suppose we know the manhood or womanhood of all who write, of the hundreds we hear from.

From a "Life Lover."

Br. Storrs: As I renew my subscription for the Herald of Life, permit me to extend a kindly greeting, and many wishes for abundant blessings to the dear readers of the paper, many of whom I feel acquainted with: some by having seen face to face, and others by their written communications.

Dear fellow-pilgrims to the better land: May the year upon which we are just entering be one of earnest zeal in the service of the Life-giver's and as our minds have been illumined with the light of divine truth, so may we strive to illumine others, by letting that light shine in the varied circles in which we move.

Shall still hope to receive much profit from the perusal of the paper which I have had most of the time since its commencemt: am interested in its leading theme, and after much thought on the subject, did for awhile call myself a believer in the non-revival of the wicked dead; but there soon came up some points of difficulty which never have been fully met; at least to my mind, and consequently I am somewhat a doubter; still my sympathies are with you, Br. Storrs, and your able corps of contributors. I was long ago pretty thoroughly convinced that the final end of the wicked would be destruction in the literal sense of the term; and the investigations of riper years have confirmed the convictions of youth; but there are doubts remaining in regard to the unconsciousness of the dead; otherwise I should at once openly proclaim myself a full believer in the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ:" for I deem this the only consistent position for those that hold that there is no consciousness in death, or rather, that the whole man dies. But I have an earnest desire to know the truth. I could not if I would, I would not if I could, let this great subject rest without further investigation; and shall endeavor more carefully, more prayerfully than ever before, to examine it in the light of Scripture revelation.

"Dearly beloved, let us walk together as heirs of the grace of life, abstaining from fleshly lusts which war against the soul, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." And "Now, the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost, In hope of blessed life through Christ.

From W. H. Ford.

Geo. Storrs: In 1865, while I was a resident of Marysville, Mo., I heard two very able discourses on the subject of "No Life out of Christ." It was very contrary to the teaching I had received from my parents, and also from the ministers of the gospel: but the reasonableness of the subject, and the ability with which the minister handled it, made a great impression on my mind, and I determined to give it some attention. A discussion on future punishment fell into my hands. Before I read that, I was a firm believer in eternal conscious suffering: but the able arguments in that discussion, has entirely cured me of such ideas. Last October, Rev. W. P. Shockey came here and preached a few sermons. The people had never heard such doctrine advocated before; but the meeting-house was densely crowded every night, and the best attention paid throughout the whole meeting. It gives me great pleasure in stating his labor was not fruitless. The good seed sown in that meeting, has taken deep root in the minds of the people, and has caused them to read and search the scriptures for themselves and not depend entirely upon orthodox preachers. I can safely say, the ten sermons of Mr. Shockey converted fifty souls and some of them members of different churches. Brother Shockey lives in Nebraska. It is expensive to him to visit us, but I am making arrangements to raise some money for him, and have every prospect of success. I expect him to give us a visit soon.

The books I sent for, came in due time and they gave the greatest satisfaction. I have distributed them among my neighbors and friends. I wish to send some books to distant friends. I never expect to stop buying books until all my erring friends get a supply. I would to God that every man and woman had a library of such books as the Six Sermons and Watch Tower. The world would soon present a widely different picture to what it does at this time.

From Deborah C. Corwin.

Br. Storrs: I want through you, to say an encouraging word to the dear saints scattered abroad. The Lord be praised; we have at last got a few of the scattered flock together, and to-night is the second prayer meeting. Tho' necessarily detained at home, I feel the loving kindness of my blessed Saviour just the same. Is He not always ready to answer our faith? And does He not always lend a listening ear, if we are only truly in earnest? My willing heart says yes. He only waits to be gracious. He is always pleased to fulfil his exceeding great and precious promises. Therefore we will trust Him, and not be afraid. Lie passively on his hands without murmuring, whether it be for life or death, sickness or health.

Jesus is the great physician of soul and body; and I must add, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit rejoices in God my Saviour."

Now, beloved, may the God of hope fill you with all peace in believing, that you may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost. And may the God of peace make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen. Your sister in love.

From Paulina D. Campbell.

Br. Storrs: To yourself and all the readers of the Herald of Life, I wish A happy New Year. The past year has gone with all its joys and sorrows, and we are at least one year nearer the kingdom of Life and glory, than we were at the commencement of 1869. Now we enter upon this to receive the great blessings which are in store for us, and pass on to the remaining struggle of life; whether we are to continue till another New Year, or finish our work with this—with the kingdom in view, and "Life in Christ only," for our motto—we may press on to the prize.

I am happy in the great mercies of our God, and still trusting for the future. With kind and faithful remembrance of the household of faith, and hope of hearing their greetings through the welcome and beloved Herald I again say "A happy New Year."

New Britain, Conn., Jan. 4, 1870.

From Ira Fancher.

Br. Storrs, and all the dear ones: How glad I am that I have been permitted to live in these days of superior gospel light. As for you Br. Storrs, I have not seen your face in over twenty years. But I have read Editorials nearly weekly. The last time I saw you was in Albany, in 1849. I was then on definite time. Then in 1868 I had definite time; also in 1869. But they are all past; I am like a ship that has run its reckoning out, looking all the time. But it is glorious, and I am so glad that your life is still spared, and hope we all shall be willing to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints; so that if we have to sleep we may be in the resurrection; for says the Saviour, in the resurrection they are equal to the angels; neither can they die any more. That is just truly, as long as I want to live. Amen.

Sandy Hill, N. Y., Jan. 4, 1870.

C. W. Lyndall, New Albany, Ind., in speaking of the work in that region, writes: Mr. ——, is becoming a noble worker. One day he was buying goods of me, and I put some of the Campaign Documents in his bundle: among them the "Doom of the Ungodly;" and I trust he has come to a saving knowledge of the truth. If you can spare him some documents, I can testify that they will fall on good ground. He has been the means of turning the attention of almost his entire neighborhood to investigation, and some of them have called on me for works. For the past three years, as you know, all the works in the neighborhood have been bought by me; and if you can help me any in addition to what I am doing, I will work harder than ever according to the documents I may feel able to buy and any that may be contributed. I have not received twenty per cent of what I have expended; but our covenant God has given the increase; and in this, I have been rewarded according to my work, and can thank God and take courage, inasmuch as I know my labor has not been in vain in the Lord. Your brother, waiting for the adoption.

Lucretia B. Lamb, St. Paul, Minn., writes: Is it not truly times of perplexity? Would that the multitudes could realize whither they are tending. The believing heart can rejoice amid the gloom; for redemption is drawing nigh. Jesus' sheep, who hear his voice and follow him, will see his face and his name shall be in their foreheads. The love of God! what a boundless theme! He so loved, that he gave his Son as a ransom, and, in an audible voice, declared him His well beloved Son. From Jesus' words, we find this love heightened by his giving his life for the sheep, those whom God so loves. How rich a thought! It is ours to know its heights, to sound its depths, to explore its length and breadth. Yes, all, all is ours, if we have laid all upon His altar a living sacrifice, and are running the Christian race with patience looking unto Jesus. May we so run that we may obtain the rich prize, now almost in sight.

Geo. U. Lewis writes: By the grace of God we are still striving for the inheritance promised to the faithful. Last Sunday, we enjoyed the privilege of listening to Br. W. H. H. McAllister. In the forenoon he spoke of God's plan of salvation. The discourse was listened to with the best of attention, and was well received. It was remarked by one, "He made it so plain and cleared up the points which I had never understood." In the afternoon he spoke of the Christian's hope. The discourse was lengthy, about an hour and fifteen minutes, but was listened to with the closest attention, and was well liked by nearly all who heard it.

Several of our friends have expressed a desire to have him visit us again; and we earnestly pray that he may see it his duty to do so at no distant day. We pray God that our dear brother may not neglect the gift that is in him, but labor for the advancement of the cause as God shall open the way. The cause of truth demands that such talent as his should not be buried up or hid in a "Custom House." Time is short; souls are perishing. May God enable us all to labor faithfully, and in patience wait for His Son from heaven.

Bethel, Vt., Jan. 7, 1870.

S. R. Clinkinbeard, Moulton, Ills., writes: I am still alive, though not in very good health. I talk to the people three Sundays in a month, but have many to contend with. I wish to continue the Herald of Life. I send $2 50, and still owe it some; but misfortunes have been my lot, so that I cannot pay it now; and want of means will, I fear, prevent me from going far from home to talk to the people on Life only in Christ. O that we had some one here to preach the truth as it is in Christ. Send me some tracts if you have any to spare. If you get not your reward here, may you get it in the kingdom.

Yours, looking for the kingdom.

We have cancelled your indebtedness to the Herald, and also sent you some tracts. Call for more when you find you can use them to advantage.

Luther Smith, Sheldon, Wis., writes: I prize the Herald of Life above any paper I ever saw. I believe I take as much pleasure in reading it as any of the brethren and sisters scattered abroad. It has been the means of leading my mind into many precious truths; for which I thank God. There does not appear to be much interest, in these parts, in the Life views. Still I have distributed the pamphlets you sent, and keep the Herald going all the time, and hope yet to see some good accomplished through their agency, and believe we shall. Pray for me.

Yours, looking for the return of Jesus.

Mercy A. Couillard, Swanville, Me., writes; My paper comes very irregular, and I feared I was numbered among those who had not paid; but I have. I feel unwilling to give up its visits, for it is all the preaching I have, and at present I am surrounded by Spiritualists. The Herald of Life comes next to my Bible. I prize it for the truths it contains and the spirit it manifests. Yours, seeking for truth, love, honor and righteousness, and a home in the kingdom when Christ comes to make up his jewels.

Prof. Murdock's translation of the Syriac New Testament, we are told, can be had of Robert Carter & Bro's, 530 Broadway, New York. The price we do not know. Those who wish books procured for them in this city, can address Geo. W. Young, No. 25 Chambers St. He is reliable, and will do the work for a reasonable compensation. We have no time to do it.

The Little Corporal.—This beautiful juvenile for January makes its appearance in a new dress, with a new engraved title page on the cover. It claims to have a larger circulation than any other juvenile publication in the world. Price $1 a year. Published by Alfred L. Sewell & Co., Chicago, Ill.

OBITUARY.

Foster.—Fell asleep in Jesus, at North Newburg, Me., in October last, Dea. J. Foster, 80 years old, lacking four days. He had several slight shocks of paralysis and some severe ones. His life was devoted to the service of Christ and his cause. His last shock of disease was very severe; yet he so far recovered as to shout praises to Him whom he began to serve when but four years old. He found it good to have Jesus to lean on in his dying hour, and to breathe his life out sweetly there. Yes, how sweet to go to sleep in the arms of Jesus, expecting soon to hear his voice saying, "Come forth, and be forever with me, never to die." These thoughts are consoling to one left a lone widow. His many children, too, are receiving comfort that father's end was that of righteousness, and that he could close this mortal life with shouts of glory so long and so distinctly. The house seemed lighted up with the glory of the Lord; and the scene still lingers around my heart with pleasure. It would seem as if the Lord gave him a sight of the glory to be revealed. One said to me, "That is against your no-soul view." But I think it no evidence that man now possesses immortality. God "only hath immortality," the Bible testifies; and He only can give it, and He will not give it except to those who comply with the conditions on which He has offered it.

In Memoriam

Of one who died at her mission work, in Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 23, 1868.

One long sad year the winds have swept,
O'er the lonely spot where thou hast slept;
And still the days go lingering by,
With many a tear, and many a sigh.

Methinks I see, though far away,
Sunlight and shadows round thee play,
Under a sky whose warmest blue,
Brightens the earth, and gems the dew.

I pray thee, Nature, truly tell;
Hast thou done to the dead thy duty well,
O'er her folded hands hast thou decked the spot,
With the lily fair, and forget-me-not?

Hast taught each bird that weaves its nest,
In the elm trees bending o'er her breast,
To pipe their sweetest trills and lays,
In notes of plaint, as well as praise?

As they glide along on airy feet,
Do the winds chant requiems soft and sweet,
Then hasten hither o'er land and sea,
To murmur the same sweet strains to me?

Ah! I hear them now, for the south winds blow,
As through yonder willows they ebb and flow,
And loneliness thrills my heart with pain
As they seem to whisper, "ne'er again."

Hush stormy winds, and my stormy heart,
Of truths, ye can tell me but a part;
For that sister's face I shall see again,
Without sigh, or tear, or thought of pain.

The morning comes; night is almost gone,
The brightening rays presage the dawn:
See the Sun of righteousness arise,
Flooding with glory, both earth and skies.

Oh, joy! the expected day is come!
God's children are wakened and gathered home,
Loving and loved ones, enraptured greet,
Henceforth content at their Master's feet.

Faith, Hope and Love.

BY W. H. H. MCALISTER.

"Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—1 Cor. xiii. 13.

With this passage the apostle Paul closes that beautiful chapter in which he describes the practical workings of charity, or, more correctly, love. In other places he has treated of faith and hope, and shown their great importance. He here draws the comparison in favor of love, as the greatest of the three. It may be interesting to inquire wherein it is the greatest. To answer this properly we must consider the nature and office of each.

Faith and hope stand in such intimate relation to each other in the plan of human redemption, that they are inseparable supplements. Hence their nature, office and importance can best be shown by treating of them conjointly. And if we analyze closely we shall always find that where faith is the subject introduced, its supplement, hope, is always implied if not expressed; and vice versa. Hope is commonly understood to be composed of expectation and desire. Neither of these alone constitutes hope. Expectation without desire would be aversion. Desire without expectation would be dispair. What we hope for we both expect and desire.

"Faith" the Apostle Paul tells us, "is the substance of things hoped for:" The word translated "substance" is in the margin more correctly rendered "ground of confidence." Faith, then, is the confidence of things hoped for; and since there can be no confidence without evidence on which to base it, it also combines "the evidence of things not seen." Faith, then, is composed of confidence and evidence, or, more strictly, confidence in evidence. This might be variously illustrated. "No man hath seen God at any time,"yet we have faith in his existence; for, "the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Here is the perfect exercise of faith. Jesus gives us the evidence; we have confidence in it, and, hence exercise faith.

Faith and hope are alike in this, that they both concern the unseen. "Faith is the evidence of things not seen;" and "Hope that is seen is not hope." They must, then, both concern the unrevealed. Hence their great importance in all matters of divine revelation. The unseen must first be revealed, or we can know nothing of it. Revelation furnishes the evidence of things revealed. If we hold this evidence trustworthy, confidence is begotten; or, in other words, we have faith. Here the office of faith ceases and hope takes up the work. The next mental exercise is to desire the thing we have faith in; and this desire leads us to comply with the conditions on which they are promised that we may expect them. Hence we hope for them.

This can be strikingly illustrated in its application to God's plan of redemption. We read that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God."—1 Cor. ii. 9, 10.

God hath prepared a future life for them that love him. Revelation furnishes the evidence of this fact. We show our confidence by believing it. Thus results our faith. We desire it because it promises a blessing. We expect it because we comply with the conditions of its bestowal. Hence our hope of a future life. All these separate steps are necessary to the realization of the promised benefit. We cannot dispense with evidence, for we could then have no knowledge whatever of the thing promised. Evidence given, we must then have confidence in it or run into atheism or deism. Here is the root of all infidelity, want of confidence in revelation. How narrow the line between faith and infidelity in their inception! How wide the departure in the result!

Thus we see that we cannot dispense with either of the elements of faith without defeating the end sought. And so a perfect faith granted, hope is necessary to follow up and secure its objects, or they fail of realization. We may have faith in the salvation of God; still if we do not desire it, or if we do not so comply with the conditions on which it is promised as to form a basis of expectation, we do not hope for it, and shall not attain it. Leave out one element of either faith or hope and all fails. Without both, in their full and perfect exercise, there can be no salvation for man. Do you wonder then, that everywhere in the Scriptures they are magnified in importance?

In this view, it is no marvel to read, "By grace are ye saved through faith"—"The just shall live by faith"—"Without faith it is impossible to please him;" and in the weakness and imperfection of our fleshly nature, "Faith is counted for righteousness." It is no marvel that the faith of Abel and Enoch and Noah and Abraham, in short, of all those worthies mentioned in Hebrews xi., should have such a significance in the mind of the inspired apostle. It is no marvel that the confidence of the things for which they hoped and their evidence, though unseen, should work such mighty works in life, and sustain them in the hour of death. "They endured as seeing him who is invisible." The importance of hope, likewise, is not overlooked; and that apostle who was arrested, arraigned, and finally put to death for the "hope of the promise made by God unto the fathers," so felt it, that he, in one place, declares that "we are saved by hope."

Does it seem possible that there can be anything of greater importance than these principles of faith and hope? But we are assured that there is; and that principle is love. And wherein is love greater than faith and hope? In the first place, love is the mainspring of faith and hope; the quickening principle of their exercise. Unless we love the great revealer we shall have no confidence in his revelation, and shall treat it with indifference. In this case faith and hope would both fail. There would be no incentive to examine the evidence; no confidenee in it, no desire to obtain the promised benefit, or expectation of so doing, without the warming, quickening principle of love. But if we love the Revealer and the blessing revealed, how quickly we accept the evidence; how strong is our confidence in it; how earnestly we desire it; how surely we expect it. Paul tells us that faith works by love; therefore without love it is without works, and is hence dead, being alone.

Love is an emotion and a desire; and since desire is the strongest element of hope, love enters largely into the composition of hope. Take away love, and you remove the desire, and hope is destroyed. Thus it is easy to see that love is greater than faith and hope, because faith and hope cannot exist in their full and perfect exercise without it.

And love is greater in what it accomplishes. We may tell of the triumphs of faith and the achievements of hope, but the victories of love are greater. It is love that leads men to God. It is love that leads us to labor in our Master's service. It is love that breaks the stony heart. It is love that leads us to do and dare and suffer for his name. Without love there would be but little done for the extension of the knowledge of the Gospel and bringing men to salvation. Again, love is greater than faith and hope in its duration. Sometime our faith will turn to sight, sometime our hope will be realized; but in the eternity before us there never will come a time in which we shall not love our God, our Saviour and all the hosts of the redeemed. The poet has beautifuly expressed this sentiment:

"Hope shall, to full fruition rise,
And faith be sight above;
These are the means, but this the end,
For saints forever love."

And, finally, love is greater as being a divine exercise. Faith and hope are mere human exercises; while love is the essential nature and attribute of Deity. All his dealings with the human family are prompted by love. In love he created us; in love he sustains; in love he has prepared a way of escape from the consequences of our sins. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everla[illegible]ng life."

The great object of revelation, is to show man a way of escape from the consequences of sin; and the love of God prompted Him to prepare and reveal this way; and the execution of this plan involved another exercise of love which must not be overlooked, viz., the love of Christ. All that he did for the salvation of men, he did in love. In love he labored and suffered; and we are all ready to believe that, greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. It is love that conceived, it is love that executes the grand plan of human redemption. It is love that leads us to accept its terms, and it is love that prompts us to labor to bring others to the same acceptance. Take away love in its divine and human exercise, and man would live on in sin, left by a compassionless God to perish without hope.

Here I must leave this subject. It is one of great importance and susceptible of greater elaboration and illustration.

The Dangers of Investigation.

There are few who enter upon the investigation of religious truth, who have not been warned by kind friends that a probable result of such investigation would be a feeling of doubt and uncertainty in regard to many, perhaps most of the doctrines of the christian religion. And there are not wanting, many examples of persons, who having begun by investigating, have ended in a confirmed skepticism. These examples are held up as warnings to the thoughtful, to avoid all original and independent study of religious truth, as liable or even likely to end in unbelief or disbelief of all revealed religion.

Accepting, that there is such a liability to error, it becomes a question, should such liability be a restraint upon investigation? Undoubtedly, it should not. If fully imbued with the opinion that we now have all the religious truth that may be gained by any research, of course we do not need to search any further. There are now few who entertain such an opinion, but there are many, who, feeling that they entertain many errors, and have but a kind of half-knowledge of important truths, refuse to open their minds in search for truths, lest they should embrace greater errors than those they are led to reject.

It is to this latter class, or perhaps I should say, as one of this latter class, that I wish to make a few suggestions in relation to the conditions necessary to a safe investigation.

1. We must search for truth with the feeling of our extreme liability to error. We are to remember that upon any subject there may be a thousand statements and opinions, all false; there can be but one true. We are to consider that many, with ability and honesty equal to our own, have fallen into error, therefore humility and caution are indispensible in all search for truth.

2. Observation shows that all advance in knowledge—except that knowledge furnished by direct revelation—has been the result of investigation; and though the errors into which men have fallen have a thousand times exceeded the truths they have discovered, yet truths have finally been reached worth to mankind all the labor and failures they have cost.

3. We are not to expect so to know truths as always to be able to explain them. We know of light, heat, and gravitation from their effects upon our senses, but we cannot explain them. We cannot explain our own existence, nor even prove that we exist; yet only a lunatic would doubt his existence on that account. How much more difficult when we turn our thoughts God-ward to explain why the divine government and divine character are what we may find them to be.

4. We should look at what we deem truths in their relations. If a long chain be buried in the earth, different persons may discover it in different places, but patient excavation will finally show that it is all one chain. So all truths like links of the chain, though often apparently isolated, are really united by hidden links. It is for these hidden connections and relations among truths that we are to look.

5. A direct revelation from heaven is not to be expected. Nothing is more common than to hear men say, "I have been led by the Holy Spirit to this conclusion, and I know that I am right." There is no scheme so chimerical, no doctrine so unreasonable, no crime so diabolical that it has not been sanctioned by what men believed to be the Holy Spirit. More than this, to accept some inward feeling or supposed inspiration of God as evidence of truth, is to forego investigation and accept as authority our own feelings. I do not mean that we should discard God in onr search for truth. Let God be sought for wisdom, humility, sincerity, for that spirit, those conditions, under which we shall be most likely to succeed in finding the truth. When we pray "Give us this day our daily bread," we do not expect that God is to take our place, raise the corn and prepare the food that is to feed us. No more are we to expect that any spirit, human or divine, will put away the necessity for that mental labor needed in the search for truth.

6. We must frequently say that we do not know. Though knowledge is of great value, yet fortunately eternal life depends but little on human knowledge; or, perhaps I should say, eternal life can be secured by a very little human knowledge. Where others have spoken with certainty, we may entertain doubt. Where doubts exist it is but honest—truth requires that we should entertain them. It is neither a disgrace nor a fault to be ignorant when we have done the best we can to find the truth. To make pretentions to knowledge where we are ignorant or uncertain, is an act to be despised for its meanness and abhorred for its hypocrisy.

How often has some religious dogma of which men knew nothing, save that it had been sanctioned by some half-pagan council, of a semi-civilized age, been made the cause of bitter feuds, of war, persecution, and massacre. How much better to have said, We do not know.

7. As far as possible we should be unbiased by our sympathies, prejudices, hopes, and desires. It is not human to be uninfluenced by our feelings and passions, but we should endeavor to weigh and measure their influence, so that there shall be no necessary connections between our conclusions and our desires.

And finally, when as honest men we have done the best we can, we shall probably retain many errors; but we may also hope to gain at least partial views of great and glorious truths. Truths that shall be a reward for all our labors and all our care. M.

A well known scientific man of New York city, some years since, found himself annoyed by boys who rang his door bell and ran away. So the doctor ground out a heavy charge of electricity, led a wire to the door-bell knob, and sat down to wait. Shortly after there was a horrid howl on the front steps. The boy was half murdered by the shock, and the doctor's troubles from that source were indefinitely postponed.

The Present State of Peace.

Says the "London News," copied into a Western religious paper:

"The world has seldom known a period of more profound peace than that which now prevails. Not only are there no wars, but at present no rumors of war. The Emperor Napoleon is feeble; the King of Prussia is old; the Emperor of Austria is engaged in domestic reforms; the King of Italy is satisfied with what he has already obtained, and Spain ought to have enough on her hands without entering into foreign broils. Even the eternal Eastern question, save for the spurt about Egypt, is quiet for a while; and neither Greece nor Turkey is in a fighting mood.

. . . The gates of the Temple of Janus are nearly closed and if peace be a debauching influence, as some maintain, we now stand a very good chance of being corrupted.

. . . Not merely like a finer sense of humanity, but a clearer perception of self interest, inclines nations more and more every day to a reasonable, rather than a violent settlement of disagreements. After all that has been said by cynics, glad to throw discredit on human progress and the hopes of men, about the failure of prophecies of peace uttered in connection with the Great Exhibition of 1851, it is certain that the public opinion of the civilized world on this subject, is better now, than it was twenty years ago. Dissensions which would formerly have led to war, are now settled by mediation; and kings and people are alike growing wiser with increasing knowledge, and growing inter-communication."

Thus speaks the "London News," and an Ill., religious paper copies it. Does the word of God teach so? Does it say that the millenium is to be ushered in amidst peace and security? Or what does it say? It says, "The day of God cometh as a thief in the night." A thief always comes at the quietest hour, when all are asleep, except where there is a faithful watchman; and it would seem from religious writers, that this is an hour of peace, for they are saying "Peace and safety." When this cry goes into this peace and safety cry, what comes next? "When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape."

Are those who "love his appearing" asleep? Let some of them speak for themselves. While writing this, a letter was handed me from a dear sister with whom I have taken sweet counsel, and one who loves the Lord and his appearing. She says, "We know not what a day may bring forth. I am watching the signs of the times. They seem to indicate the end of the age. In our own country change is stamped upon everything around us. Men's hearts are failing them for fear of the future, to which they look with dark forebodings. In Europe everything is assuming new forms. The old is passing away. What is to take its place, is a question which the wisdom of this world cannot solve. But there is light in the future for the humble children of God, who strive to know the will of their Father in heaven. The word is indeed a lamp to our feet now, if we are willing to be led into all truth. The professed church does not understand her true position; but the time will come, not in the far distant, when the vail will be taken away by the power and demonstration of the Spirit of God, to prepare the way to the future glory, when Jerusalem shall be created a rejoicing, and her people a joy. Then there will be no more weary ones. They will rest at home; a home where all will be glad, because they are children. They will have life, and their home will be eternal. Their school days will be ended, and lessons of obedience to the will of God in the past. Happy and glorious time. May the Lord hasten it."

How different the message of the true watchman from that of those who are lying down, loving to slumber. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober. Your sister watching for the dawn of day. Helen Robertson.

Children's Department.

William Haverly.

"About thirty years ago," said Judge P., "I stepped into a bookstore in Cincinnati in search of some books that I wanted. While there, a little ragged boy, not over twelve years of age, came in and inquired for a geography."

"Plenty of them," was the salesman's reply.

"How much do they cost?"

"One dollar, my lad."

"I did not know that they were so much."

He turned to go out, and even opened the door, but closed it again and came back. "I have only got sixty-one cents," said he; "could you not let me have a geography, and wait a little while for the rest of the money?"

How eagerly his little bright eyes looked up for answer; and how he seemed to shrink within his ragged clothes when the man, not very kindly told him he could not!

The disappointed little fellow looked up to me, with a very poor attempt at a smile, and left the store. I followed him and overtook him.

"And what now?" I asked.

"Try another place, sir."

"Shall I go too, and see how you succeed?"

"O yes, if you like," said he, in surprise.

Four different stores I entered with him, and each time he was refused.

"Will you try again?" I asked.

"Yes, sir, I shall try them all, or I should not know whether I could get one."

We entered the fifth store, and the little fellow walked up manfully, and told the gentleman just what he wanted, and how much money he had.

"You want the book very much?" said the proprietor.

"Yes, sir, very much."

"Why do you want it so very, very much?"

"To study, sir. I can't go to school, but I study when I can at home. All the boys have got one, and they will get ahead of me. Besides, my father was a sailor, and I want to learn of the places where he used to go."

"Does he go to these places now?" asked the proprieter.

"He is dead," said the boy softly. Then he added, after awhile, "I am going to be a sailor, too."

"Are you, though?" asked the gentleman, raising his eyebrows curiously.

"Yes, sir, if I live."

"Well, my lad, I will tell you what I will do; I will let you have a new geography, and you may pay the remainder of the money when you can, or I will let you have one that is not new for fifty cents."

"Are the leaves all in it, and just like the others only not new?"

"Yes, just like the new ones."

"It will do just as well, then, and I will have eleven cents left toward buying some other book. I am glad they did not let me have one at any of the other places."

The bookseller looked up inquiringly, and I told him what I had seen of the little fellow. He was much pleased, and when he brought the book along, I saw a nice new pencil, and some clean white paper in it.

"A present my lad for your perseverance. Always have courage like that and you will make your mark," said the bookseller.

"Thank you, sir, you are so very good."

"What is your name?"

"William Haverly, sir."

"Do you want any more books?" I now asked him.

"More than I can ever get," he replied, glancing at the books that filled the shelves.

I gave him a bank note. "It will buy some for you, I said."

Tears of joy came into his eyes.

"Can I buy what I want with it?"

"Yes, my lad, anything."

"Then I will buy a book for mother," said he, "I thank you very much, and some day I hope I can pay you back."

He wanted my name and I gave it to him. Then I left him standing by the counter so happy that I almost envied him, and many years passed before I saw him again.

Last year I went to Europe on one of the finest vessels that ever plowed the waters of the Atlantic. We had very beautiful weather until very near the end of the voyage, then came a most terrific storm that would have sunk all on board had it not been for the captain.

Every spar was laid low, the rudder was almost useless, and a great leak had shown itself, threatening to fill the ship. The crew were all strong, willing men, and the mates were practical seamen of the first class; but after pumping for one whole night, and still the water was gaining upon them, they gave up in despair and prepared to take to the boats, though they might have known that no small boat could ride such a sea. The captain who had been below with his charts, now came up. He saw how matters stood, and with a voice that I heard distinctly above the roar of the tempest, he ordered every man to his post.

It was surprising to see all those men bow before the strong will of their captain and hurry back to the pumps.

The captain then started below to examine the leak. As he passed me, I asked him if there was any hope. He looked at me, then at the other passengers, who had crowded up to hear the reply, and said rebukingly,

"Yes, sir, there is hope as long as one inch of this deck remains above water. When I see none of it, then I shall abandon the vessel and not before; nor one of my crew, sir. Everything shall be done to save it, and if we fail it will not be from inaction. Bear a hand, every one of you, at the pumps."

Thrice during the day did we despair; but the captain's dauntless courage, perseverance, and powerful will mastered every mind on board, and we went to work again.

"I will land you safely at the dock in Liverpool," said he, "if you will be men."

And he did land us safely; but the vessel sunk, moored to the dock. The captain stood on the deck of the sinking vessel, receiving the thanks and blessings of the passengers, as he passed down the gang-plank. I was the last to leave. As I passed he grasped my hand, and said:

"Judge P., do you not recognize me?"

I told him that I was not aware that I ever saw him until I stepped aboard his ship.

"Do you remember the boy in Cincinnati?"

"Very well, sir; William Haverly."

"I am he," said he. "God bless you!"

"And God bless noble Captain Haverly!"

Early on the Right Track.

"Mother thinks I'm too young to take the temperance pledge," said Johnny; "but I don't think so, because, you see, the younger I take the right stand, the better: and isn't it always best to start right?"

I think so. Boys understand what the pledge is, and in a thousand cases it is better, in these times of evil associates and early temptations, for a boy to stand thus committed for the right. His ground is already taken, and he will not easily be driven from it.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 800 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

INTERESTING LETTERS.—No. 1.

FROM AMBROSE RONDTHALER.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Dec. 31,
New Year's Eve and Night, 1869.

DEAR BR. P.: Weeks have come and gone since your truly welcome visit at my house. Your business, I know, is such that you cannot often spend much time with me; and you are aware that my duties are of such a nature as to keep me much at home. Knowing you to be deeply interested in those views which I honestly and sincerely believe to be true, and having some days of recreation, I thought of writing you a brotherly epistle. Should I, at times, unfortunately, express myself somewhat harshly, you, as my Christian brother, will not be much offended. Let us have patience with each other; and more than this, let us cultivate true charity, and practice it toward all. Each wishes to have the other think as he does. This is quite natural; but, with this wish, we are too apt to accuse one another of a want of charity. Let us, therefore, humbly supplicate the Lord to give us that charity, which is well-pleasing unto Him; and let us also fervently ask Him to guide and lead us into all truth.

I am very glad that you do not, like one of my dear brethren, whenever I touch upon "Life only in Christ" views, say, "From the doctrines I'll ne'er waver, in the Holy Scriptures stored"—thus plainly giving me to understand that he unquestionably believes the truth, and thus, at once, and that rather unceremoniously, locking the door against me.

Neither do you, as my excellent friend F. say, "Among so many different views it is difficult to find the right one. I have neither time nor inclination to wade through them all. Enough, there are good Christians of every creed." Neither do you say, "Br. R., why trouble yourself and others by constantly agitating these things? This does more harm than good. It tends to separate friends; it creates coldness, and, in short, is of no benefit whatsoever to the church." Neither do you say as my dear Br. K., "Your views of annihilation were held by the Gnostics, or, at least, by some of them; and why exhume such obsolete views? They have had their day. Verily Solomon was right, when he said, 'There is nothing new under the sun.'" Neither do you think, as my good, aged father (I bless his memory), said, and that more than twenty years ago, "My son, I do not exactly condemn your views; but if you wish to be idle and unemployed for a season in eternity, I have no objections; I wish to be active." Neither do you, as some others, constantly bring forward the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, stoutly maintaining that that narrative is a history, or that it contains historical elements, and is no parable, although you are not quite satisfied with the explanation given. You earnestly and uprightly desire to know the truth; and you have often told me, that you are not by any means so wedded to early prejudices and preconceived notions, as to find it hard to divest yourself of them. But here, my brother, permit me to say, that this is not so easy a task. Although I have thought on these subjects for many a year, still I find it difficult to combat against prejudices of education; but God's ennobling grace makes us stronger and mightier against them.

As far as I understand you, and we have so often interchanged our views, that I think I am correct, your objections are the following: The general belief of the Church is, and always has been, against these views—the Bible in general favors your belief—and if "Life only in Christ" views were generally promulgated, the floodgates of wickedness would be widely opened and pour forth waters of bitterness.

As regards your first objection, let me just simply say, and that ought to be enough for every honest and independent Protestant inquirer, many wrong views were entertained by the so-called Christian Church at and before the times of the Reformation. Luther and his coadjutors had to contend against their enemies, their opponents, their friends, and last, though not least, against themselves. Will you, my dear brother, think on these things? If you do, I shall not fear the result.

And now, as regards your objections on Bible grounds. However, before examining these grounds, let me just touch on an objection, which you sometimes, although not very often advocate. You sometimes say, in speaking of the dead, that our doctrine of their unconscious state argues, to say the least, unkindness on the part of God; and then you kindly, although somewhat exultingly add, that I frequently quote the words of one whom you highly esteem, but with whom you do not agree, "The Bible says, 'God is Love,' and any construction of His Word that contradicts this testimony must be erroneous, however plausible it may appear." In an amicable way you use these words as a weapon against what you call most gloomy and fearfully dismal views. Brother, does the sweet and blessed sleep of those asleep in Jesus, tell of unkindness on the part of God? Think, brother. Do you not perhaps think unkindly of God's kindness? If your views are correct, what becomes of the wicked dead? Hundreds and thousands of years, millions have already suffered and are now suffering! And is this in accordance with your faith? You, too, believe that "God is Love." But the subject is fairly before us. Let us proceed.

You say the Old Testament no where speaks in clear language of the state of the dead—the writers of its books often so express themselves as to leave us justly to infer a conscious state. To one chapter, however, you often triumphantly (pardon me) refer. It is the xivth chapter of Isaiah. And this chapter, with some kindred passages, you consider a mighty one against our views. We shall not leave it untouched. In my next letter, D. V., we shall take up that chapter. Meanwhile ponder on God's own commentary—"That they may sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord."

In this letter, permit me to quote, from an abundance of passages, only a few, that not only seem, but clearly and positively teach the unconscious state of the dead. "The dead praise not God, neither any that go down into silence." "For in death there is no remembrance of Thee; in the grave who shall give Thee thanks?" "What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise Thee? Shall it declare Thy truth?" "The dead know not anything." "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest."

Other passages, as strong, will readily occur to you. Brother, say, honestly say, is there any ambiguous language in these words? Do they not all clearly and distinctly tell us what is the state of the dead? Do they not all most sorrowfully point back to the gloom of Paradise? Do they not all most mournfully reverberate the words of God uttered in the garden in the cool of the day, the most mournful day that this world has ever seen? "What words?" "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." And are not these words—is not this truth the echo of the whole of man's life? Oh! does not this truth sound in our ears, in our graveyards and cemeteries? And do not the names and the pictures and the representations of man, given in the Bible, proclaim, in language that cannot be misunderstood, his evanescence? Let us walk into the Bible picture-gallery. It is not far from us. What do you see? "Grass"—"Flowers"—"Smoke"—"Vapor"—"Shadow"—"Pilgrims"—"Weaver's shuttle"—"Old Jacob before Pharaoh"—"Old Moses with the xcth Psalm"—"Rachel mourning for her children"—"An old patriarch with his son's coat held up before him by his children, rending his clothes, and putting sackcloth upon his loins and mourning"—"Job, bereft of his family and fortune, sitting in the ashes"—"David mourning for Absalom."

What a picture-gallery! And on the door of this picture-gallery is written in large and legible characters—"As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live."

Come, brother, let us leave this picture-gallery, and go back to Adam. He knew nothing of inherent immortality. He saw Abel lying before him in his blood. And the first dead was bewailed as perhaps no dead one has since been bewailed. There stood no preacher in that field to tell Adam and Eve and Cain—"Abel, your son, Abel, thy brother, has gone to heaven! None to comfort them with the doctrine of inherent immortality! Abel's soul lay in his blood—it was poured out on the earth—with his blood his life was entombed. No immortal-soul preacher preached there. The Lord preached: even He "who only hath immortality."

And the text of the Lord God: "What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." No conscious state of the dead—no inherent immortality! And Adam's faith, and Cain's faith, yes, Cain's faith, too, was the faith of the antediluvians.

And here, brother, let us rest a little to give you an answer to your fearfully strong objection, that our views open the floodgates of wickedness. Christ, our LIFE-GIVER says: "In the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking." And Paul says—There are such who say—"Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." The antediluvians weltered in sin and iniquity. Deep shades covered the earth. How dark the gloom! The gloom of the grave! Naught was heard but the insulting language of mortals! Deep-drawn the curses of men, as they cried, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." The antediluvians assented to the truth. They sinned against the light. Great was their contempt for Life—astounding great! Yes, they were giants in wickedness! The floodgates of wickedness were widely opened—and "all the fountains of the great deep were broken up too; the windows of heaven were opened also, and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." Yes, that was the end of those who assented to the truth. And such too, were "those reckless men who once filled Paris with debauchery and blood, and inscribed over the entrance of all the public cemeteries, "Death is an eternal sleep!" Yes, "bad men (hear it all ye sincere believers in Life only in Christ) have always had a hankering after the doctrine." Read this truth in "Life and Death Eternal," by S. C. Bartlett, D. D., pages 334 and 335.

Book of God, what do we read in thee? "To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life." "But seeing you put the word of God from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Brother, do we agree? Let us go into that Court of Justice. Do you see that man tried for murder in the first degree? Is his faith in any particular doctrine received as an excuse for his crime? Will it do him any good, if he says, "I believe in the unconscious state of the dead. I do not believe in the immortality of the soul." Or, will it do him any good, if he says, "I believe in universal salvation." Or, will it do him any good, if he says, "I believe that > "While the lamp holds out to burn,

> The vilest sinner may return?"

Or, will it do him any good, if he says, "I believe in the immortality of the soul—I believe that the good go to heaven, and the bad go to hell." Will such excuses avail in a Court of Law? Brother, draw your own conclusions.

And now, we have rested. Let us go on. The faith of the antediluvians, wicked as they were, and the faith of their preacher, righteous Noah, was the faith of the patriarchs and the people of Israel. The fathers fell asleep; they were gathered to their people; they slept with their fathers; they went into sheol—into hades—into the grave. Shall I quote some passages? It is not necessary. They are well known to you. This was the faith of the Israelites while groaning under "the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppressed them." This was their faith when they sang Moses' song on the shores of the Red Sea. This was their faith in the wilderness, where thousands of them fell. This was their faith when they entered the Land of Canaan. And in the Holy Land they adhered to the faith of their fathers. True, they had heard in Egypt of the immortality of the soul, and of the conscious state of the dead, but they adhered to the faith of their fathers. Here and there, now and then, we find Egyptian and Canaanitish immortality believed by some.

Wretched King Saul was not free from it. And the necromancers in Israel were imbued with it. But, as a people, Israel adhered to the faith of their fathers. After their return from Babylonish captivity, Babylonish immortality began to work. And we know, that in the time of Christ there were Jews dwelling in every nation under heaven. And Socratic, and Platonic, and Pithagorean and Ciceronean immortality was believed by many, among whom devout Jews dwelt. And in the days of the LIFE-GIVER, the Pharisees and the Essenes believed in the immortality of the soul, and the conscious state of the dead. This we well know. And, my dear Br., you need not quote from Bartlett's "Life and Death Eternal; a Refutation of the Theory of Annihilation"—published by the American Tract Society. Nor need you refer to "The State of the Impenitent Dead," by Alvah Hovey, D. D.

We are well aware that the Jews, in the time of Christ and His Apostles, were falsely instructed by many who had left the faith of their fathers. While some continued to adhere to the faith of their fathers, others drank in heathenish doctrines like water. False views and false interpretations, right views and right interpretations were held and proclaimed. But the measure of the iniquity of the Jews was full. Jerusalem was destroyed. Thousands fell by the edge of the sword, and thousands were led away captive into all nations. They are scattered throughout the whole earth, and because they will not believe in the Great LIFE-GIVER, who has said, "I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this?" because they will not believe, they hear only the tolling of the bell of death, muffled by the tattered rags of heathenish immortality; while the mournful dirge—"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," is strangely amened by Christians of every denomination; yes, strangely and mysteriously amened by "Life only in Christ" believers, and by good men and women who believe in the immortality of the soul.

Brother, I solemnly believe that you are wrong; but you see that I do not condemn you. In the language of Pope,

> "Let not this weak, unknowing hand,
> Presume Thy bolts to throw—
> And deal damnation round the land
> On each I judge thy foe."

I have not forgotten Isaiah xiv. 4, etc. I wish to deal fairly and honestly with you. The Lord willing, I shall write to you again.

One word more. But no—the last church-bell of 1869, at night, has just ceased tolling. Half an hour more, and the clock on the Moravian church steeple will strike 12—and 1870 will be ushered in. The high sounding tones of the organ, played by a truly worthy and much esteemed friend, with the music by the band of trombonists, in harmony with the loud melody of other instruments, will be heard, accompanying the words sung by the assembled congregation, words which I have heard, with but few exceptions, for upwards of fifty consecutive years, at the solemn hour of New Year's night—the words—

> "Now thank we all our God
> With heart, and hands and voices,
> Who wondrous things hath done,
> In whom His world rejoices;
> Who from our mother's arms
> Hath blessed us in our way
> With countless gifts of love,
> And still is ours to-day."

And then a few minutes more, and I know that some of my friends will come and wish me and mine a Happy New Year. Perhaps Br. P., to whom I have written, will be among them. If not, a Happy New Year to you, and to all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE.

Brethren, let us pray for each other.

Your sincere brother,

AMBROSE RONDTHALER.

12 o'clock, midnight, New Year's morning, January 1, 1870.

THE DIFFERENCE.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

WHAT is the difference between the death of the wicked, and the death of the righteous?

In the event of death itself, there is no difference. The righteous, the wicked, and the beasts all die alike. "They have all one breath." "When their breath goeth forth, they die." "In that very day their thoughts perish." "They all go to one place; all are of dust, and all turn to dust again." In this sense, "as the one dieth, so dieth the other;" "even one thing befalleth them all."—Eccl. iii. 19, 20; Psa. cxlvi. 4.

In another sense there is a great difference between the death of the righteous, and the death of the wicked. The wicked die like the beasts, to remain dead. The righteous die, with the assurance that they shall live again.

My object in this article will be, to trace this distinction as we find it in the Bible.

1. The wicked die like the beasts, to remain dead.

God gave to Adam a law, which provided that man by obedience might have free access to the tree of life, and live forever. It also provided that by disobedience he should surely die. Adam sinned. God explained his punishment, saying, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." He then excluded him from the tree of life, lest he should eat of it and live forever. After this punishment was executed upon Adam, it is said, All the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died.

In this brief account we have 1, The punishment announced: 2, The crime committed: 3, The sentence given, and the explanation of the punishment; and 4, Its execution. This death is the final punishment for sin. Paul says, This death hath passed upon all men; for all have sinned.—Rom. v. 12. Then all wicked men are under the condemnation of the law given to Adam, and will die as a final punishment for sin. This law will be of full force as long as there are wicked men in the world. It reads, "thou shalt surely die." This will be the end of sin.

Gen. vi. 17. "Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven and everything that is in the earth shall die. The flood came, "and all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, all that was on the dry land died. And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." This punishment was final, so far as this record shows. These men died just as the beasts died, and will remain dead as long as the beasts remain dead. They suffered all the punishment God required of them. And will they be made alive to be punished again? Was their destruction by the flood only the first installment of their punishment? Must the world be judged, and punished twice for the same offense?

The sin of Sodom and Gomorrah became very grievous. And the angels said, "We will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord, and the Lord hath sent us to destroy it." "Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven, and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground."—Gen. xix. 13, 24, 25. Did the Lord threaten to do anything more to those cities than to destroy them? Will he ever punish them any more?

The children of Israel in the wilderness, were a stiff-necked and wicked people. The Lord said unto them, "But as for you, your carcasses, they shall fall in the wilderness. I the Lord have said, I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation that are gathered together against me; in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die."—Num. xiv. This is the punishment the Lord threatened to bring upon them. This punishment they suffered. Will the Lord punish them again?

"The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."—2 Pet. ii. 9, This the Lord has done many times. He knows how to do it. In the time of the flood, he saved Noah, a preacher of righteousness, and punished the wicked world with a flood. In the time of Lot, he saved him, and punished the wicked with death by fire. In the time of Pharaoh, he saved the children of Israel and punished the Egyptians with death in the Red Sea. In the wilderness he saved Caleb and Joshua and the children who were not twenty years old when they came out of Egypt, and punished the rest of the children of Israel by destroying their carcasses in the wilderness. These were examples to them who should afterward live ungodly.

Those of whom Peter spoke, in 2 Pet. ii. were to be reserved in like manner unto the day of judgment to be punished. They were very wicked, having known the way of righteousness, they had turned away from the holy commandment. What was to be their punishment? They were to perish utterly in their own corruption, as the brute beasts perish. Brute beasts perish only once. Their death is final. Those who perish like them will perish only once. This will be final. To what condition are they reserved? To the mist of darkness forever.

The wicked to which I have referred, embrace all classes of wicked men. All the forms of death to which they have been subject are comprehended in the penalty of the law given to Adam. "Thou shalt surely die." "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This death to the wicked is final. But if the gospel provides that the wicked shall be made alive again in order to be punished for rejecting the gospel, in addition to the punishments described above, then, it is an addition to the law, and is not comprehended in it.

I will introduce a few more testimonies in proof that the death of the wicked is final.

Num. xxi. 6. "And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people, and many of the people died." This death must have been final if there had been no remedy found. But a remedy was provided. A brazen serpent was lifted up on a pole, that those bitten might live. This was a great favor. Now what shall be done to those that refuse to look on the serpent? Shall they be allowed to die of the bite, as if no provision had been made, and then be made alive again that they may be punished for not looking upon the serpent, and die a second time? Would such an arrangement comport with the purpose of lifting up the serpent that they might live? especially if it was known that but few would look and live? Could we approve of such a plan? No: surely we could not. But as the fact is stated, it commands our highest admiration. The bite of the serpent would have caused death, if no remedy had been found. The remedy was provided. Now it is not certain that all who are bitten will die of the bite; some may look and live. After the trial is past, some are found who refused to look at the serpent. These have not been healed, but by refusing to look, they secured the same death a second time. The first cause of death, was the bite; the second cause of death, was rejecting the remedy. The first may very properly be called the first death, and the second the second death.

The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers ex cept where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out o the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,

NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

The Saviour said, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." As the bite of the serpent secured the death of those bitten, if no remedy had been provided, so sin secures the death of the sinner, if no gospel had been provided. As the serpent was lifted up, not to condemn those that were bitten, but that they might live, so the Son of man was lifted up, not to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved. As those that refused to look at the serpent, died of the bite because of that refusal, so those that refuse to believe on the Son of man, will perish in their sins because they believed not on the Son. As the death that came, first by the bite, and second by refusing to look at the serpent, was final, so the death that came first by sin, and second by refusing to believe on the Son, will also be final. As those bitten who did not look upon the serpent, were already condemned to death, so those who do not believe on the Son are also already condemned to death. As was the effect of looking or not looking on the serpent, so will be the effect of believing or not believing on the Son.

Psa. xlix. "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish. Like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them. They shall go to the generations of their fathers, they shall never see light." These who shall never see light, include all that do not understand. To all such who like sheep are laid in their graves, this death must be final.

Prov. xxi. 16. Of the same class, is "The man who wandereth out of the way of understanding," he "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." He shall never be removed. "He that believeth not the Son, (from whatever cause) shall not see life," (and to prevent any missunderstanding of this statement it is added), "but the wrath of God abideth on him." The Jews could not have life from Christ because they would not come to him; and no man can come to Christ, except he be taught of God. Those therefore, who have not heard and learned of the Father, cannot come to Christ that they might have life. Except ye eat his flesh and drink his blood ye have no life in you.—John vi. 33, 57.

If a man receive life from Christ, he cannot die. This excludes all that is said about a brief life for the wicked. If the wicked receive a brief life, it does not come from Christ; for all who receive life from Christ will live forever. "He that hath not the Son, hath not life" from Christ in any sense.

Thus we have shown that the penalty for transgressing the law given to Adam—"thou shalt surely die"—was to be a final punishment. That all the wicked of every grade, will utterly perish in their own corruption, as the brute beasts perish. That, from this punishment there can be no appeal to the gospel for a severer punishment. For then, the gospel would cease to be the gospel of the kingdom, already prepared; but would be an amendment of the law of the kingdom, so as to secure a severer and more effectual punishment for sin, the provision in the law of the kingdom having been found inadequate for such a purpose.

2. The righteous do not die as the wicked and the beasts do; but they die with the assurance that they shall live again.

Of Christ, who is the way, and the example for the righteous to follow, it is said, "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption."—Psa. xvi. Also, "The Lord hath sworn unto David, Of the fruit of thy body, will I set upon thy throne."—Psa. cxxxii. 11. These prophecies are applied to Christ in Acts ii. 25–36. This Jesus hath God raised from the dead to die no more. He was earthy and died. He was raised from the dead and made the heavenly, and will remain alive forevermore; and is become the first-fruits of them that sleep in him or are dead in him. This is the assurance, or pledge that the righteous will not remain in the tomb, as the wicked do: but that they will be made alive again, as Christ was. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," (from the dead). "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise."—1 Thess. iv. 13—. By virtue of this provision in the gospel, the righteous die in hope of being made alive again, to die no more; but there being no such provision for the wicked to live, even for a brief time, they must remain dead, and never see light or life.

It is because of this provision for the righteous to live again that the scriptures so abound with assurances to the righteous that they will have life. And it is because there is no provision in the gospel for the wicked to have even a brief life, that it is never said that the wicked shall live again.

A righteous man dies with this assurance, that "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." God's "dead men will live; together with my dead body shall they arise." He expects eternal life in the world to come; and that all who are found worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead will die no more; that none who believe on the Son will be lost, but will be raised up at the last day; that all the harvest of which Christ is the first fruits, will be made alive from the dead as Christ was; that all who are in Christ, and who are asleep in him, will be made alive at his coming; and that all who strive to attain to the resurrection of the dead as Paul did, will attain unto it, and will have their vile bodies fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body.

These assurances to the righteous are in contrast with the statements concerning the death of the wicked; that they shall be consumed in the grave, and remain in the congregation of the dead; that they shall utterly perish as the brute beasts perish; that they shall never see light or life, but that the wrath of God will continue to abide on them.

To the wicked their death is final. It is like the death of the beasts that perish. It is their end. But to the righteous, death is only for a moment; deliverance will soon come. The victory over the power of death will soon be won through our Lord Jesus Christ. To them will be given an incorruptible and immortal life. The interruption in the life of the righteous, by death, will be so exceedingly brief, it will hardly be remembered to have occurred at all. In fact, the righteous will have no recollection of having been dead. The difference, then, between the death of the wicked, and the death of the righteous, in regard to time, is as endless duration is to a moment. In regard to blessing, it is, as to be wholly deprived of blessing, is to an endless life in the enjoyment of the fulness of blessing.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Dec., 1869.

THE GLORIOUS BURDEN OF PROPHECY.

"BEHOLD! the Lord cometh." This is the cry that should arouse the world; this is the music swept from the harp of prophecy to gladden the Church; this is the great truth around which other truths cluster, and from which they derive their life-force and far-reaching significance. It takes many forms, and occurs in many connections; now diffusing joy unspeakable, and then shaking the heavens and the earth; now calling the dead to rise from their graves and enter upon a glorious immortality, and then causing the panic-smitten rebels to implore rocks and mountains to crush them into "abhorred annihilation" from the awful eye of the Judge; now encircling the sainthood of all generations with a divine halo, brighter than noonday, and then hurling the devil and his legions to the earth on their way to the dismal darkness of the pit.

But whatever the form, connection, or result, the great master-thought which the Omniscient Spirit would impress upon the minds of men is the advent in glory of the Father's Anointed as Judge and King of all. This central thought is never departed from, never brought into the presence of any other thought that can equal it in importance or splendor. There are no twin glories before the eye of the Seer. There are glories manifested on the earth, and on the sea, and in the heavens—physical, moral, mental, domestic, social, world-wide; but they all radiate from the presence of the Great King, and are the consequences of that presence. If the nations are at peace, and learn war no more, it is because the Prince of Peace has come and put down by the power of his strong right hand, the despotic tyrannies and the wild democratic revolutions that have for so many weary centuries agonized the world. If Edenic fertility beautifies and gladdens the earth, and if the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose, it is because the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, has returned to his inheritance, and lifted the curse from its soil. If the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noonday, no longer fill cities with consternation and mourning, it is because he at whose word diseases fled in the days of his humiliation, has come in his glory as the great healer of suffering humanity. In a word, not one of the manifold priceless things that cluster in beauty on the page of outstanding prophecy can ever gladden the eye of man until the Son of Man return in power and great glory to take possession of the kingdom and dominion "under the whole heaven."

For this is God's revealed order—the declared outline of that purpose which he works according to the counsel of his own will. No scheme of man's devising, no church system, no theological theory can alter it, or set it aside. All events will take place exactly as God has determined; the evil foreseen in Churches and States will assuredly take place; the good by which that evil is to be overruled and overthrown will most certainly appear at the proper time. And, it is beyond doubt, that the early Christians cherished as a blessed hope, the coming of the Lord in their day. There is no revelation of the time, but there was the fact, and on that fact they gazed with fond desire. Let us do the same; for, though we know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh, it is certain that the coming is the glorious burden of prophecy.—The Rainbow.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE BURNING OF THE WORLD.

A CORRESPONDENT of the "N. Y. Observer," writing to that paper from London, gives some account of a sermon he heard by DR. CUMMING, the great writer on prophecy and the second advent of Christ. He speaks of the sermon he heard, as follows:

"The sermon throughout was full of thought and thought, expressed in the highest beauty of poetry. He grew specially eloquent in his protest against the view that this earth, with its Jerusalem, and Bethlehem, and Nazareth, and above all, Gethsemane and Calvary, was to meet annihilation in the conflagration of the great day. On the contrary he confidently affirmed its regeneration and its repossession by man as his future paradise, and predicted the visit of the inhabitants of other spheres to this planet when once more radiant with the divine glory and their rejoicing over it as the brother once lost, but now happily found never more to wander."

With these sentiments we most heartily concur. We have no faith in the "burning-world" theory, nor have we had any in it for twenty-seven years past. When Christ returns from heaven, then will commence "the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began."—Acts iii. 21. This plain testimony agrees with the general teaching of the Bible; the abundant assurance that the "meek shall inherit the earth;" and "the righteous shall never be removed; but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." "The upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."

Such testimony—and it can be multiplied to any extent—shows that the earth is not to be burned up, or its geographical surface destroyed. It is this earth from which the "righteous shall never be removed," as it is this earth from which "the transgressors shall be rooted out," and not from what some call "the new earth;" meaning a re-created earth after "this earth is burned up in a universal conflagration." Such a view though it has a few symbolical or figurative texts which are construed to support it, is irreconcilable with the clear statements of "holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit;" and clearly state that the land then visible to their mortal eyes, should be their everlasting inheritance, and that they should "dwell therein forever;" and the "dominion" of their King should be from sea to sea, and from the river [Euphrates] to the ends of the earth."

The believers in the universal burning of the world, building on the symbols of Revelation, tell us there "will be no more sea" in their "new earth." Very well: then their new earth is not the place of Christ's reign, for where he reigns there are seas, and His "dominion is from sea to sea." Thus it is clear, there is error in their view of the symbols of Revelation, because their view contradicts the testimony of "holy men of old," as we plainly see.

BR. SPENCER'S HEALTH.

MANY of our friends are anxious to hear about the health of this brother, and we give them the following extract from a "private" letter just received:

"My health continues about the same as when I wrote before, though doubtless I feel less soreness in my lungs; but the weather is so bad for me. I am trying to work part of the time. For the present I have to lay mainly aside my evening labor, so I am not able to write as much as I could desire. You cannot realize what a comfort the HERALD is to me. May the Lord prosper it and bless you."

BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

LAST week we gave notice of a cheap edition of the above-named work, in paper covers, at the low price of 40 cents per copy. We have since determined to give bound copies at a reduced price, and now offer the work bound at 82 cents, which includes the postage. It has been $1. 16 including postage, so that we have, in fact, reduced the price 34 cents per copy to those who receive it by mail. We will send four copies to one address for $3, postage free.

See our offer of last week for this work in paper covers; viz: 44 cents per copy, including postage; or, five copies to one address, for $2, postage free. Now is the time to give this work into the hands of such as will read. It is an important one for such as have not time or ability to consult the large work of Judge HALSTED on the "Theology of the Bible."

THE LEAVEN WORKING.

In the "Advent Christian Times" of Dec. 21, 1869, appeared the following significant query, over the initials of an educated preacher of some note:

"Was the penalty, with which Adam was threatened, literally executed? If it was not, what became of God's veracity? If it was, on what principle can Adam ever have a resurrection?"

There is the truth in a nut-shell; if the threatened penalty was not literally executed, then, indeed, is God's veracity called in question. But the record very plainly informs us that Adam "died"—the threatened penalty was death—and, therefore, as the penalty was executed in its fullest sense, and he returned to the dust from which he was taken, our brother may significantly inquire, "On what principle can Adam ever have a resurrection?"

But we may extend this question farther. As God has declared that "the wages of sin is death," do we not question the "veracity" of God in assuming that the wicked will have a resurrection fully as much as in Adam's case? As the penalty of sin is death, "on what principle can" they "ever have a resurrection?"—or live again after death? Will our mortal resurrection brethren answer this query? Who will answer it from the Scriptures?

Truly our brother has proposed a hard question for his brethren to answer; and with their theory of the re-living of the wicked dead, we see not how they can give anything like a Scriptural answer. But the extract, which we have here called attention to, is significant as an indication that the doctrine of "Life only in "Christ" is exciting earnest thought, which we feel cannot but lead to God-honoring results. W. H. S.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan., 1870.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

THE sun had sunk beneath the Ionian Isles, and night had thrown her sable mantle far over all the East. Palestine, the land by sacred promise given to Abraham and his seed, was hushed in the general stillness of the night. The city din of Jerusalem had lulled away, even the measured tread of the wall sentinel, or perhaps the watchman of the night, as he slowly paced the streets beneath the gilded turrets and snow-white walls of the sacred temple.

Nature seemed hushed, and all was still. The quiet flocks had ceased their bleating on a thousand. hills, and, under care of faithful shepherds, were couched in fleecy robes for the night without the city, and all was silent save the gentle murmurs of a rivulet, or the mellow breeze that softly sighed through the fruitful groves; or, perhaps, the responsive note of the wakeful nightingale.

Nor was there aught else to attract the attention of the oriental shepherd, but to turn his wandering eyes from his flock to gaze awhile on the stellar canopy of heaven above, and view those brilliant gems that adorn the nocturnal arch of heaven, and meditate on things divine.

But suddenly among those twinkling orbs of light, a strange object meets his astonished gaze; the radiance of which eclipses all else besides, and which on heaven plumed pinion, with rapid flight descends to earth, and throws a golden radiance far into the realm of night, so as to seem a "little morn on deepest midnight risen."

Trembling with fear the astonished shepherds gazed on his heavenly form. "Fear not," said he, "for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Then suddenly there appeared with the heavenly messenger, a multitude of celestial ones, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," until hill, and glen, and forest wild reechoed the shout, the general burst of joy: and all creation smiled, as when the earth in Eden beauty, sprang from chaos wild, and "The sons of God shouted aloud for joy."

Such was the splendid and sublime announcement of the advent of him whom the prophets said should come to take the throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. No wonder the angels of heaven shouted aloud for joy on this momentous occasion; for the whole world of mankind lie under the just sentence of death, to drop into the murky pool of oblivion to be no more.

Oh, horrid thought! Is there no hope? Yes; the heavenly messenger brought the glad tidings of great joy; in Bethlehem of Judea one is born to give life to the dead. Despair not, poor sinner; in Christ Jesus there is life, but none out of him. For it is written, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." And he—"shall remain in the congregation of the dead."

LIVERMORE, Maine, Jan., 13, 1870.

TEN YEARS AGO.

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: It is New Year's day morning, 1870, and I wish you a happy new year. I pray that through your columns, this year, many may be brought from the mists of ignorant superstition to the glorious light of Life only through Christ. I don't pray for intellectual enlightenment. No, I pray that the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead may accompany your visits through the land to give light to them who sit in darkness, and to guide their feet in the path where there is a lamp and light, even the light of life.

This morning I have been looking back upon the new year's day morning of 1860, ten years ago. Then, dear HERALD, you were not in existence; but one as noble as yourself was then fighting the hard battles, and preparing a way for your feet. That one was the "Bible Examiner;" too worthy to be forgotten.

But another look at ten years ago. Then I myself was in mist and darkness, as to the gospel plan of salvation. Then I believed in the immortality of the soul, going to heaven at death, eternal torments, and all the kindred doctrines. But I, who then sat in darkness, have seen great light. Then I sat in the region and shadow of eternal torments; but light has sprung up. O, glorious light of Life and of the true merits of the great LIFE-GIVER; also, what his real relation to the redeemed from among men will be. Ten years ago I called Geo. Storrs the blackest infidel in the land. Why? Because I believed, without examining for myself, as many poor creatures do, that he was perverting the word of God. But as soon as I was willing to investigate for myself, and the Lord opened my heart to receive the truth in the love of it—to his blessed name be all the glory—then I thanked the Lord for having raised up Br. Storrs, and given him grace and strength to go forward amid all opposition. And may He still spare his life and energies, until this same precious truth shall have given light, saving light, to many thousands more; and until the kingdoms of this world shall have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. Then the kingdom shall be set up under the whole heaven. It shall not be left to other people, but the saints shall possess it forever, even forever and ever. Glorious day! We long for thy dawning!

Still one more look at 1860. I remember that morning. I then believed in the Lord's near coming. Yes, and loved it too. I was glad 1860 had come, for I believed without doubt that the Lord would appear before 1870. I have been mistaken, and say the Lord knows best. Still this new year's morning I cry, Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly. But if thou tarry a little, for wise purposes of thine own, give thy children grace to endure to the end, so that they may be saved.

For myself I say to Thee, my Father and Guide,

"I know not the way I am going,
But well do I know my Guide!
With a child-like trust do I give my hand
To the mighty Friend by my side;
And the only thing that I say to Him,
As He takes it, is—'Hold it fast!'
Suffer me not to lose the way,
And lead me home at last.

"As when some helpless wanderer,
Alone in some unknown land,
Tells the guide his destined place of rest,
And leaves all else in his hand;
'Tis home—'tis home that I wish to reach,
He who guides me may choose the way,
And little I care what path I take,
When nearer home each day."

DEAR HERALD, I take the above lines from your issue of two weeks ago. That Guide is an old and tried Friend of mine. He has led me by the hand now about twenty years, and all I say this new year's morning is "Hold it fast." He who leads me may choose the way. And little I care what path I take, if I can only follow my faithful guide at all times, honor his precious name, and reach home at last. The path is sometimes rough, and the storms beat vehemently, but the Rock of Ages is sure. Amen. Praise the Lord.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

BY A. BOYNTON.

THROUGHOUT the Bible, as connected with God's people, we find two Adams, two births, two lives, two laws, and two testaments or covenants. The old covenant is spoken of in Deut. v. 1, 2. "The Lord God made a covenant with us in Horeb;" and ix. 16, "The Lord gave me two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant." Our Bible is divided and is called the Old and New Testaments; which is synonymous with old and new covenants. Proof: Rom. ix. 4. Covenants (mean testaments): also, Heb. viii. 6; xii. 24; xiii. 20, and Gal. iii. 15. In these texts the margin is testament, testaments. On the New Covenant we propose to dwell more particularly. Through or by whom was this made? "For the Law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John i. 17. "And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple; even the messenger of the covenant."—Mal. iii. 1. "I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people," etc, Isa. xlii. 6. "He (Christ) is the mediator of a better covenant."—Heb. viii. 6. In chap. xii. Paul, in contrasting the two covenants, says in the 24th verse, "We are come to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant." This is called in chap. xiii. 20, the "everlasting covenant."

With whom was this covenant made? "Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah."—Jer. xxxi. 31, cited by Paul, Heb. viii. 8–10, and x. 16. The Gentiles were included. See Rom. ix. 22–33. "And that he might make known the riches of his glory, on the vessels of mercy which he hath afore prepared unto glory; even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles."—verses 23 and 24. "Wherefore remember that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision, · · · That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, · · · But now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."—Eph. ii. 11, 13.

"He came unto his own, and his own (Jewish kindred) received him not. But as many as received him, (both Jews and Gentiles) to them gave he power (right or privilege) to become the sons of God even to them that believe on his name."—John i. 11, 12.

When made? "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead."—Heb. ix. 12, 15–17. The taking away of the first covenant, and establishing the second is more fully brought out in Heb. x. 1–14. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant which was established upon better promises. In that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."—Heb.viii. 6, 13. "For this is my blood of the new testament, (or covenant) which was shed for many,"etc.—Matt. xxvi. 28. All who partake of the Lord's supper acknowledge in this act, their covenant obligation. We might say that this covenant was made with the twelve apostles as the representatives of the twelve tribes of Israel, which was proclaimed in power to them on the day of pentecost, but after its rejection, they turned to the Gentiles. Where this covenant is written, how written, and for what purpose, we will reserve for another article.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y..

THE WARNING MESSAGE.

NOTHING is more clearly set forth in the history of the world than that God always sends forth a warning message before visiting the children of men with a judgment for their wickedness. This is consistent with his character—which is one of supreme love and justice—and with the principles upon which He deals with a fallen race. Before visiting a judgment of a universal extent upon a rebellious race, He has commissioned and sent forth faithful servants to warn the people of the coming danger, and to point out the means of escape. Such is the history of God's judgments in the past.

A warning message has never been a popular one. This could not be in the nature of things; for the means of escape which are therein set forth require submission on the part of the guilty. For example, look at the autediluvian world. Their wickedness was so great that God regretted that he had made man, and issues a decree that he will destroy man from the face of the earth. But his great love for the race of man, still prompts him to offer the guilty an opportunity to escape the threatened destruction. He commissions a man of holiness and faith to promulgate his decision. This warning message presented the nature of the danger, and plainly set the means of escape. The result was lamentable. The warning cry was scoffed at, and the remedy rejected. The message was unpopular; and the delusive tide of public opinion carried the human race down to destruction.

From this we learn that it is not always safe to be on the popular side—it is not safe to heedlessly run a great risk because the majority do.

Again, in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities of the Plain the same facts are apparent. After God had decided to destroy that rebellious people, He faithfully set before them the nature of the judgment and the means of escape. But this also was followed with the same result as in the other instance—only few were saved.

From numerous portions of the New Testament we learn that the moral condition of the world in the days of Noah and Lot was a type of the generation upon which the last great judgment should be visited, when the Son of man shall be revealed "in flaming fire, taking vengence on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction."

In the days of Noah and Lot they did everything in utter disregard of God's warning: every imagination of the heart was only evil continually—"Even thus shall it be when the Son of man shall be revealed." No generation it seems to us, could more perfectly fulfil this type than the present. The depravity of mankind is of a universal nature, pervading all climes, and all classes of society.

But Peter particularly speaks of these times when scoffers shall abound; when the judgment message should be sounded forth to a godless world; for it was this message of the speedy return of the Lord of life and glory at which they were to scoff. No message has ever developed scoffers like this; and they will continue to scoff until they share the fate of the antediluvians.

Many are the signs and wonders that assure us that we are not mistaken in regard to our conclusion that the speedy consummation of all things is at hand. Not only in human language is this warning found, but nature herself gives signs of a speedy change, such as was never indicated before. In the air and skies, on sea and land, there is a remarkable fitness to the prophetic word. These things are noticed by those who have eyes to see, and ears to hear. To such they bring no gloomy apprehension; for Jesus says, "When ye see these things begin to come to pass, then lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."

Again, the Scriptures show us that in the last times, in opposition to the warning message, there would be a "peace and safety" cry. There is one class who repudiate the message of Christ's coming, and say, "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation;" and this is reiterated by another class who say, "My Lord delayeth his coming." Under the influence of their cry the popular church is "deceiving and being deceived," "having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

This peace cry is presented in numerous forms, among which are the mighty worldly achievements of the modern church—making large additions to its fold, of wealth, number and influence, "being increased in goods and having need of nothing." Thus the modern shepherds comfort and deceive their flocks with the Laodicean peace cry. But upon such will the Lord come "as a thief in the night."

In all ages when there has been any warning message proclaimed, there has been a peace cry, which has deceived the masses. So in our day the world is again being deceived by the same cry, which is so pleasing and soothing to the ears of unregenerated human nature. Surely the fearful pages of history should warn us of following the examples of past generations. We may safely trust in the words of Jesus, "Behold, I come quickly."—Selected.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM CATHARINE C. WILLIAMS.

BR. STORRS: It would not be strange from my long silence, till the present volume is so far advanced, if I have ere this been counted among those from whom you feel reluctantly compelled to part company; but I feel under an obligation, from which I do not wish to be released, to help sustain and spread abroad what to me was and is indeed "glad tidings of great joy," and would that it could be to all people. I can't tell, and it would do no good if I could, all the reasons why I have been so tardy. I have not felt like writing, till within a few days I thought I must try and bring my feelings to do so.

When I wrote last, the dear son whom I have mentioned was feeble, going down gradually, needing more and more and tenderer care; occasionally rallying a little after taking medicine, or following some medical prescription, only to take another step downward, which could not be regained. He gave up all expectation of living long four or five months beforehand, though he wanted to live, while at the same time he thought if prepared he should be willing to go. He kept around during the summer, laying by one thing after another, giving up one thing after another. After the cool fall weather came on he failed rapidly, but was confined to his bed only about one week.

On the morning of Oct. 23, at 23 minutes past 5 o'clock the end came. I did not wait till then to mourn for him; I had long been in mourning and tears, as I witnessed from day to day the stealthy march of the terrible disease that I felt must sooner or later lay my beloved son low. He had long looked upon death calmly; though he felt he had no well-grounded hope of a future life, yet he knew that Jesus loved him, and while trying to point him to the "Lamb of God" he felt it was too much to hope for pardon for such a sinner. He was a pure, conscientious and dutiful son, however, and tenderly beloved—all the more so, that he suffered or endured so much for our country.

During the last fortnight of his life he told me that he felt his sins were pardoned, and he was ready to go. I felt to praise the Lord that the cloud that had seemed to shroud the future was lifted, and from that time he seemed impatient to go. He had long been getting ready as though about to take a journey, and wanted everything ready for the moment of departure. About 24 hours before he died, he wanted his brothers and sisters called, telling me, "I think my time has come." All came; when he gave each his dying charge, left messages for all he loved best, kissed each and bade them farewell; then he lay back composed, his work all done, but not his sufferings over. He so longed for rest. His sufferings consisted more in unrest than pain; that seemed in my power to alleviate; but I could not give him rest; when he finally found it I felt thankful in my unutterable anguish. I could but commit him to the dear Saviour and leave him, feeling and knowing "Our Father doeth all things well."

I do not know as I ought to say so much about my precious son, but I could not well help it, as my heart is so full. I know I am not alone; the fell reaper is all around. The main thing is to be ready, not wait till a sick bed to prepare. I asked my son a few days before he died, while he could yet sit up in an easy chair, if he would not like to live and get well? He replied, "It does not seem as though there was much to live for." So far as earth's joys are concerned, there does indeed seem but little; but it is worth living for, to lay up a treasure in heaven, to gain an interest in that world where sin never enters nor death blights—there may we meet our beloved son.

Another absorbing interest since our son's death has been the preparation for, and marriage of, another daughter; two married and three dead, leaves us only four out of nine children, the youngest eleven years old.

BUTLER, Mo., Jan. 6, 1870.

P. S. I am in hopes I can be more prompt in future while life and strength lasts, though I feel both waning. I should be glad to do more than I do, but don't know how it will be. I hope never to forget nor cease to praise the riches of that grace that brought me out of darkness into such glorious light. That it may shine more and more, is my prayer now as ever.

FROM MRS. F. D. ANDREWS.

BR. STORRS: As I have not written to you since the commencement of this volume, I will now report myself. I prize the HERALD OF LIFE very much. I hope that it will be an instrument in the hands of God's children of doing good all over the world. As I receive it from week to week, and read the different letters, I am very much encouraged, and I praise and thank God for the truth; also for the different gifts that are in the church. I rejoice that the time is soon coming when we all shall meet, never to part again, and as we have been instructed in the good word of the Lord, it is our duty as well as privilege to give it to others, so that they may be led to fear God and keep his commandments.

I can say that I love to search the Scriptures. How much there is in them to be learned; "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom;" the prayer of my heart is, that I may understand all the Bible. I want the truth; that will stand when hay, wood and stubble are burned.

I was pleased that Sister Perry asked the question, Are we not the literal seed of Abraham in these United States of America? I hope we shall have, from our brethren and sisters, some Bible proof on that subject. I think there is proof positive in God's word that we are. So it appears to me. "As I live, saith the Lord, surely with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you; and I will bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, and bring you into the wilderness of the people."—Ezek. xx. 33. "Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the North, saith the Lord; for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord."—Zech. ii. 6. "Behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her."—Hos. ii. 14.

The house of Israel went into captivity on account of their transgressions. Jesus said, I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. God has said that He would allure Israel and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her; and he has, praised be his holy name.

This country was a vast wilderness; scattered Israel was allured here with a hope to worship God according to the dictates of conscience and to be at peace. That she came from the north country of Europe, is as certain as that we find her in the wilderness. Jesus took upon him the seed of Abraham, being the son of David after the flesh; but the only begotten Son of God by the Holy Ghost. He came in the form of sinful flesh, and condemned sin in the flesh; showing to the whole world that in their sinful or Adamic nature, they were unfit to have the everlasting dominion; but thanks be to God, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we shall inherit all things. God the Father, by the resurrection from the dead of his dear Son, has begotten us again unto a lively hope, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away; reserved in heaven for you who are kept, through faith, by the power of God, ready to be revealed in the last time.

The promise made to father Abraham was that the land he was then a stranger in, he and his seed should possess forever. Jesus, being the seed of Abraham, can claim that promise; and being the Son of God with power, we, by being in Christ, are the Israel of God or the true Abrahamic seed; for all are not Israel who are of Israel. For Abraham and his seed to possess the land of Canaan forever, he will be raised immortal; the curse will finally be removed from off the earth, so that it will bud and blossom like the rose; the saints will be made immortal, and with their King will reign in that land. The royal law of God will go forth from Jerusalem, when he shall reign before his ancient people gloriously; and the earth will be purified by fire by degrees; not the whole world all at one time.

The earth will bring forth abundantly when the curse is removed, and will be as it was when God pronounced it very good; and, thank the Lord, that will be good enough. I think as God created the animal race, and pronounced them very good, that their lives will be perpetuated in the new creation. How we can harmonize the Scriptures and not hold that view I cannot see.

The last chapter of Zechariah teaches that after the Lord my God has come, and all the saints with Him, that there shall come upon the nations who are left after the great battle, punishment of no rain if they come not up unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts. The saints who come with their King will be immortal. Jerusalem and all therein will be holy; and if upon the horses' bells there will be written "Holiness unto the Lord," they are there for some purpose; and I believe that they will, with such of the animal race as God sees fit to keep alive after the punishment is passed upon all the world, live in their lot that He has divided off for them forever.

The feast of tabernacles, that the children of Israel kept, was to be a statute forever in their generation. So it seems that God will have it kept as he has commanded, and this will be the great feast of feasts, when we are come up out of the wilderness before our King to rejoice; and as they of old took the boughs of thick trees and willows of the brooks, so shall we, again, and cry hozannah to our King! Then will our offeaing of praise be holy, for we will be holy, also every pot and bowl or vessel in Jerusalem, and all that offer up praise will use them to seethe or boil in them.

Isai. xxv. 6, "And in this mountain shall the Lord of Hosts make, unto all people, a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees; of fat things full of marrow; of wines on the lees well refined." This agrees with the words of God by Isaiah: "Then shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem before his ancients gloriously."

EAST BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 6, 1870.

FROM ELD. THOMAS K. ALLEN.

BR. STORRS: I have taken the HERALD OF LIFE now for one year, and I have been so much interested in it, that I wish it sent me the coming year. You have my warm sympathies and prayers. And although I cannot now, on account of financial embarrassments, help much to support it, I hope in a year or two, if I should live, and everything works as I now think it is tending to give you material aid. So then now, you will please accept the will for the deed.

I was surprised in reading in one of the numbers of the HERALD, a few months since, of the death of your only son. I became acquainted with him 26 years ago, in the city of Philadelphia. But since I have been in Minnesota, I have never heard from him, but I supposed he was still living. You may therefore judge how much I was surprised when I read in some Editorial remarks, in answer to a letter from a friend in New Hampshire, that he had died a year ago last February. I could not help weeping and feeling very sad. But at the same time I could look forward with joyful anticipation to the time when the LIFE-GIVER shall come from heaven, raise him up, and with all the saints receive everlasting life. I deeply sympathize with you and sister Storrs, in your sad bereavement. Yours in Christ.

Note by the Editor.

Our son fell asleep in Jesus the second day of February, 1867, near three years ago, after years of suffering. His end was triumphant, with the emphatic expressions on his lips, "BLESSED JESUS—ETERNAL LIFE;" while the Divine glory filled us with unutterable joy and peace in believing; the heavenly remembrance of which abides with us unto this day. Our language was then, and still is "Glory be to God and the Lamb." A few days more and the "eternal life" will come.

FROM LA FAYETTE NORRIS.

BR. STORRS: I have been very sick during the last month, even nigh unto death; but God in his infinite mercy has spared my life for my family's sake and for my own sake, that I might form a more perfect subject for the kingdom of God. Indeed as I lay on my sick bed, I felt that I was not yet fit to enter the kingdom; and I prayed that God would spare me yet a little longer; and I resolved if He did, I would strive more earnestly than ever to live at the foot of the cross.

God has been very good to me; even in my sickness I can see his goodness, for it has led me nearer to him. Although I am in limited circumstances, and my sickness cost me probably nearly fifty dollars, yet God has enabled me to pay my debts and provide comfortably for my family, and have a little left to spread the truth; while some of my neighbors, in better circumstances than I am, have to keep their children from school for want of clothing. Improvidence has done this; and yet they are chief members of the church, and can shout and pray the loudest of any in the meeting.

I have always considered it a duty to provide for my family. I feel thankful that God has given me a disposition to be diligent in business. Perhaps this disposition has led me to be too worldly-minded, although I have always tried to guard against it. For many years I have desired to get enough ahead so as to have something to spend for the truth. But while I was sick I thought perhaps this was wrong; and I about concluded not to work quite so hard, and take a little more time to talk and work for Jesus in some other way besides simply giving money; and at the same time give what money I could. It seemed to me that my way was hedged up, and that if all I did for Jesus and his truth was to give money, I should do very little. This fall I expected to have considerable to give for the truth, but my sickness took it away. Well, I feel resigned to God's will, and my prayer is, that He will enable me to see what my duty is.

I have written to many of my friends, and sent them tracts; and have met with some success. But it seems impossible to get them to the point where they in turn will work for the truth. O, how my heart would rejoice if I could get one who would love the dear HERALD and the truths it proclaims as I do.

I still keep up meeting in my house every Sabbath, although none but my family attend. But I feel blessed in the effort. We call it our Bible lesson. We have had the question up, Where do the righteous go? or, what is their destiny? We have just gone through the Old Testament. But in no place have we found the least hint that they shall ever dwell in any place but this earth; but abundance of testimony that they shall live on the earth in a happy state.

We next shall examine the New Testament; but as I have been looking ahead I know what we shall find; and as I read my Bible I am astonished how people ever came to believe the notion of going to heaven at death, or at any other time. One Sunday one of my neighbors happened in while our Bible class was in session, and a glow of love filled my heart to think I had the chance of speaking a word for Jesus to my neighbors.

I love the dear HERALD in all its parts. I love the letters and extracts; the editorials and the more lengthy articles from others on the different Bible subjects. Even those pieces that I disagree with are instructive. I cannot agree with the brother who believes the world will be burnt up at the end of the Millennium. I have long since discarded that view. If this world is good enough for Christ and the saints to dwell here a thousand years, why is it not good enough for them to dwell here forever?

My love to you and all the dear brothers and sisters who write for the HERALD, and for those who read it.

CAMPTON, Iowa, Jan. 2, 1870.

FROM MARIA E. BELLMAY.

BR. STORRS: I feel thankful that I was ever led to read the HERALD OF LIFE. At the time of the first preaching of the Advent, I was a strong Methodist, though I had not united with the church. To tell the truth, I had not got the love of God in my heart. My prayers were to God to keep me from the awful hell. I never felt right: there seemed to be something wrong in the doctrine I heard preached. It was a question in my mind, for years, What is the resurrection for, if God sentences some to heaven and some to hell, at death? Was he going to call them up to judge them over again? My Bible did not teach me so. I attended different denominations, and hearing much the same things, I thought I would stay at home and read my Bible. So you see I have been anything but a happy woman. I felt I could not live so. I then borrowed some of the HERALD OF LIFE and became a subscriber. Then sent for tracts and the Six Sermons, also a dear little tract, "GOD IS LOVE." When I read that, how my heart did leap for joy! "God is Love!" Why could I not have seen that before? I cannot say half I desire to; but ere long we shall realize the fulness of God's love. I thank you for continuing my paper. I am afflicted with neuralgia, attended with a crushing headache. For weeks at a time I cannot write at all. I would be glad to write for the HERALD if I had the ability. It does me good to hear from the sisters who can write. Go on, dear ones, and let your light shine. I will by the grace of God, see you all, when Jesus comes. Yours, praying for a resurrection.

PLAINVILLE, Conn., Dec., 1869.

FROM M. M. EASTMAN.

BR. STORRS; I was much interested in the last HERALD. Your reminiscence about the home of your childhood was very interesting; anything pertaining to the life of our beloved Editor, who has never flinched in defending so nobly the cause of our soon coming King and its kindred truths, will ever be read with pleasure.

The "New Year's Greeting," was good. "The Antichrist" was made very plain, as the same writer's article was the week before. I hope Br. Green will keep his hand in. And the "Smoking Minister" ought to put to shame every minister who uses the filthy weed. No words can be found strong enough to condemn it. I want to hold my breath when I come near one that uses it. We ought not to countenance such as a minister of the gospel; it makes a wreck of the greatest minds; slowly poisons their whole system, stagnates the blood, causing a train of evils to follow; sudden deaths, etc., making people prematurely old and stiff, with black, nasty looking teeth.

Would that Paul's admonition might be heeded, especially by those who expect to go to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, "Keep thyself pure;" and Peter's admonition, "abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul."

Two years ago I heard you preach some blessed truths from the text "God is love," (at Springfield, Mass.) Then you had passed your three score years and ten; but your step seemed as firm, body as erect, voice as clear, and mind as active and bright, as one in the vigor of youth. I have often wished since, we could know your habits of life. Such an article from your pen, would interest the readers of the HERALD, and perchance induce the careless and slovenly to more correct habits of life, so they need not cut short their days of usefulness. Please give us an article on this subject.

And now about our dear Br. Spencer. I hope fervent effectual prayer will be offered up in his behalf. He ought not to be laid aside till Jesus comes. His pen adds greatly to the interest of the HERALD.

You may want to know how the cause prospers in old Landaff, the first charge you took when a Methodist. They still have a name to live here, but Methodism has greatly changed since those days. The life of the church came out in '44. We have a few here who are looking for a return of the Nobleman: they have been strong on the life and death question; but believed all the dead would be raised until Br. Zenas Campbell came here, the first of November, and has preached to our little band, and he has taken away their props and opposition to that subject and to other new ideas. He backs everything up with the sword of truth. Our people think they never heard anything like it; so smart, such a beauty, harmony, and unfolding of the Scriptures, and plan of salvation. As Br. J. B. Cook said, in 1850 of Br. Campbell, "His statements of truth are brief, lucid, and weighty with its intrinsic truthfulness. He makes no attempt at display; but with simplicity he relies on Bible truth to make all the impressions, and do all the good that can be done." Br. Campbell is now in Maine, for a few weeks; will soon be back to labor with us again. Yours looking for the King soon to come.

FROM HENRY A. TROEGER.

BR. STORRS: To say that I am very much pleased with the HERALD, does not express my feelings, as the disappointment consequent upon its occasional non-arrival, with Thursday's mail proves to me; and I have often regretted my inability to support it in a more substantial manner, and thereby prove my appreciation of the incalculable good it imparts through a dissemination of the cause of truth. But the business in which I have been engaged for the last four years, has been so little remunerative, that it barely sufficed to satisfy the calls which the Church of which I am still a member demanded. I expect to be able soon through the help of the Lord to do more for the spreading of the truth.

A year ago, I daily expected to be thrown out of the pale of this Church, and I was in a measure waiting for it, but I felt it my duty to remain and let it do its worst, endeavoring in the meanwhile, by a consistent Christian life to prove the faith that is in me, and that I was not ashamed of the "Words" of Jesus; and now, through the help of the Lord, by continued calm persuasion, this "Heresy" has apparently at least, lost so much of its hideousness, that our preacher can pleasantly argue upon it, sometimes even until midnight and has progressed so far as to acknowledge lately, that he might be brought to admit that the wicked would be annihilated, but only after the resurrection.

May the Lord continue to bless your endeavors, and daily give you an increase in wisdom to understand his truth as He wishes it to be understood, and to Him be all the glory. With you awaiting the appearing of our Life, I am your brother in Jesus.

SANDWICH, Ills., Dec., 1869.

FROM EMELINE WOOD.

HAPPY NEW YEAR to all the brothers and sisters scattered abroad. I hope that our dear Father will bless you all abundantly this new year, in all things, give you the riches of his grace, and bestow a larger portion than ever before. I had a call from our Br. Rowarth. It did seem so good to see one of the saints' faces; and what joy it will be to see them all in a throng around our dear Saviour, to hail him to the earth again. It gives me the greatest joy to think of it and to greet the dear ones that I never will see until our LIFE-GIVER comes; then we will see each other and never part again. But I do bless our dear Father for your love and all your kindness to me; and my heart overflows with love to God for blessing the truth here. It is running and our Father is glorified.

Dear brethren and sisters, I have another favor to ask, and as the Lord has answered your petitions for others, I trust you will engage in it with all your heart. I found a dear sister up in the second story of a house, as I went around the other Sabbath, all drawn up with rheumatism; had not walked a step in two years, but happy in the Lord. I said, Dear sister, can you not exercise faith to be healed? She said if she had the prayers of Christians to unite with her she did believe the Lord would heal her. She said what nice books you have; cannot you spare me one? I said they are advent tracts. She was glad, and took me by the hand, and said, I have a cousin that is an advent preacher, and his son is a preacher. He gave me some papers, but it was a good while ago. When I left she said, Do not forget to come again. So I went to see her on Monday evening. She said, What blessed books those are. I gave two of them to a friend in the country, and he said, I am going to subscribe for that paper, the HERALD OF LIFE; and he wanted some of the "Documents." She wanted more to read, and some to send to her daughter and friends. So, you dear ones, remember her at a throne of grace.

I took some tracts to a friend of mine. I gave her the "Bible Examiner" and "GOD IS LOVE." She wished me to see a letter she had just received from a friend that has just buried a child, which has gone to heaven, and she feels so bad! What, I said, feels bad because her child has gone to such a blessed place? I should rejoice if I felt my friends were there. She said where are your friends? I said, not in heaven; for Jesus said, Where I go ye cannot come. I went last Sabbath to see her again. She said, I read those tracts, then lent them to a friend, and she has received the faith—embraced it with her whole heart. So I went searching the word; and then Jesus taught He would raise them up at the last day, and give them eternal life. How it did rejoice my heart, because she is such a devoted sister in the Lord.

How the Lord does bless me when I go round. He prospers me, and opens the way for me. I do not find one opposer wherever I go. Glory be to our Father; he gives me such good health and sends me so much work I do not find time to write.

JANETT MAYO, N. Amherst, Mass., writes: BR. Campbell's remarks on the words of Jesus, "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me" were words in season to me. Sister Beach knows all the experience she speaks of. I am a lone pilgrim, but not disheartened. O no: I have had a standing invitation for years to the "marriage supper of the Lamb," that Br. Spencer speaks of. I started for the kingdom in 1822, from the bright side of the cloud that shone on Israel: took a ticket through to Mount Zion by the straight line—the Red line; yes, the Blood line, strewed with the blood of prophets and martyrs; but a safe line; all the stopping places are for the information of the passengers. When I started, I knew only that my sins were forgiven; but O, what a light has shone along the way! what precious truths! all light, and heat, and glory! I have my trials; always have had; but I can testify they have never been too many or too frequent for my good. I'll bear the toil, endure the pain, supported by Thy word. God bless Br. Storrs. I am not as old as he is; I could not edit a paper, but I can pray for him who does. May the Lord gather us pretty soon, is the prayer of your sister.

J. C. DAY, South Ashburnham, Mass., writes: The truth is slowly but steadily gaining ground, notwithstanding all the opposition and hate, which sectarianism can invent against it. O how thankful we ought to be that the path of the just will continue to shine clear down to the perfect day. Men may graduate, but the truth is onward. We are so glad to read the cheering epistles from the dear brothers and sisters from all parts of the field. O what could we do without the dear HERALD OF LIFE? O I am so glad for that word life; and God grant it may be the means of pointing many a benighted mariner upon the ocean of time, to the only source of life, is the prayer of thy Br. hoping for life when He who is the Christian's life shall appear.

P. P. VICK, Kalamo, Mich., writes: I have been reading the HERALD OF LIFE since last April, and I have been led to search the Scriptures more carefully than ever before to see if you taught Bible doctrine. I find you have; and I take comfort in reading the communications from our brothers and sisters in the love of Christ. We are lone travelers in these parts in this faith; but we know in whom we have believed and put our trust, and hope to be found worthy at the coming of the Master, to enter into his joy and sit down on His throne.

LOVILLA FIDLER, Watseka, Ills., writes: I should like to have some of the preaching brethren come out here and preach to us. We have very little of it. Could you not persuade Br. Grim, or some other able speaker, to come and give us the word of Life? I think there might be much good done. I believe there is no life out of Christ; and that the punishment of sin is not dying, but death. As the wicked have no resurrection or life principle abiding in them, according to the Divine plan, they will forever be holden of death. Peace to all the children of God.

JOHN BUTTOLPH, Troy, Mich., writes: I am a firm believer in the Life views, and appreciate them in their fulness, and strive to live them out. I have been studying them about three years, and mastered them. I do not know of any other person in this county, of about 40,000 inhabitants, that believes as I do; but quite a number believe the wicked dead will be raised to life and then destroyed. Yours, in the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ.

FREEMAN GLADDING, Albany, N. Y., writes: In thinking lately of the passage, "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish," I have been led to inquire, In what way do the beasts perish? Surely not by a conscious existence in misery; nor will any pretend that they are raised into life and killed again; but death is their end, and makes an end of them; and if men—the class spoken of—are to be "like" them, how can any such thing happen to them? I am lending my papers around, hoping to induce others to subscribe.

D. CLEW, Wisconsin, writes: I know of but one thing I can find fault with in the HERALD OF LIFE, and it shows clearly that you are behind the times. You do not label your paper to show us our indebtedness. I do not know what effect it has upon others, but upon ourself it causes delay and neglect of duty. I want to be prompt in paying the printer; for it is a small item; and when the Lord appears, I want to appear with a clear conscience, owing no man.

We do not know but we may violate that "Resolution" which forbids a response till next week; but we will "take the responsibility" for once. We never send any "labels." Each subscriber who pays only $2 for his paper, pays all that the "UNION" demands; but he has his paper for one half its actual cost. If he happen to pay a little more than $2, he will feel the better for it. If he does not pay that, we still continue his paper for awhile; then, if we hear nothing from him, we drop his name, but send no "duns."

THE MOST ALARMING SIN.

IF I were called to point out the most alarming sins of to-day—those which are most wide-spread in their ravages, most deceitful in their influence, and most soul-destroying in their ultimate effects—I would not mention drunkenness with all its fearful havoc, nor gambling with its crazed victims, nor harlotry with its hellish orgies; but the love of money on the part of men, and the love of display on the part of women. While open vice sends its thousands, these fashionable and favored indulgences send their ten thousands to perdition. They sear the conscience, incrust the soul with an impenetrable shell of worldliness, debauch the affections from every high and heavenly object, and make man and woman the worshipper of self. While doing all this, the poor victim is allowed by public opinion to think himself or herself or herself a Christian; while the drunkard, the gambler, or the prostitute is not deceived by such a thought for a moment.—Dr. Crosby.

"COME QUICKLY."—This is the church's hearty echo to Christ's promise: "Behold, I come quickly." Come Lord Jesus! thus beats the pulse of the church, the mystical body of Christ, and we should never be satisfied till we find such a spirit breathing in us, and causing us to look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ. What comes from Heaven in a promise, should be sent back to Heaven in a prayer. Come, Lord Jesus, put an end to this state of sin, and sorrow, and temptation, and gather thy people out of this present evil world.—Mathew Henry.

MURDOCK'S SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT.

GEO. W. YOUNG, 25 Chambers St., this city, informs us that he will furnish the above work at $2.36, to any who may apply to him for it. The 36 cents are for postage when sent by mail.

All our friends who wish books, outside of our office, should apply to Geo. W. Young, as above. He is reliable, and can safely be intrusted with the business.

THE LORD'S COMING.

The world is growing gray and old,
And scoffers at the judgment bold,
And yet Thou art not here.
Thy chariot-wheels, O when shall they appear?
We only know, as dies each evil year,
Thy coming draweth near!

Some in Thine absence watch and weep,
Most of the would-be watchers sleep;
Few hearts there are that yearn,
O Lord for Thee! few loving hearts that burn
And break for Thy return!

The pale and clouded light of day
Still shows the wretched same array
Of glorious vanity!
The painted hues which hide deformity,
The hollow smile of secret misery;
The rival joys which men would have to be,
O Lord, instead of Thee.

Some hazy eyes are looking for a time
Of peace and righteousness in every clime;
Some ears are listening for a universal chime
Which shall precede Thy coming—but the wail
Still rises to a gale,
And pity weeps, and purity turns pale—
While moans of suffering, songs of revelry,
Clangor of war, and shouts of ribaldry,
Alone with their delightsome melody,
Answer these baseless hopes in bitter mockery.
The darkness deepens: through the ten-fold gloom
Stream on earth's millions, to the day of doom:
While ever and anon, the fearful cry
Of human passion tells the struggle nigh:
The last uplifting of the ocean swell;
The last proud effort of triumphant hell:
The last defiant roar
Of all Thy haters, who the light before
Of Thine appearing, Lord! with horror sore
Shall, overwhelmed, sink to rise no more!

It is the midnight hour; the careless lie
Wrapped in the slumbers of security—
O blinding light!
O rending sky!
O form of swift descending majesty!
O shout of joy!
O horrid cry!
O thrilling shriek of wildest agony!
O angel legions, dazzling white!
O dead, arising at the sight!
O voice above the loudest trumpet blown!
O Christ, Thy thunder tone!
Calling Thy myriad myriads from the grave.
We rise, we soar, we cleave
The clouds beneath Thy feet.
And, mounting,
With ecstacy
And hallelujahs sweet,
O Saviour, thee!

From every voice with one accord.
It is the Lord! it is the Lord!
And full in every raptured eye
His image shines resplendently!
O long-believed in, seen at length,
Outshining in Thy sunlike strength,
Thy glory mingling with Thy grace,
We see thee, Jesus, face to face!

With all the armies of the sky
We shout thy glad Epiphany!
Thrice welcome, earth-rejected King!
From every lip Thy praises ring!
Thrice welcome to thy rightful throne;
For Thou art worthy, Lord, alone!
For Thou art he who once was slain.
And we are now to share Thy reign;
For Thou hast washed us in Thy blood,
And made us kings and priests to God!
O silver-angel trumpets clear,
Uplift the joy from sphere to sphere!
O saintly voices, sweet and strong,
Roll through eternity along
The thunder of redemption-song!

SOMETHING FOR WOULD-BE LEADERS.

LET the advocates of sectional or "National Conferences" read the following and lay it to heart. We copy it from "The Christian Union" of Dec. — 25, 1869.

RELIGIOUS MACHINERY.

BY REV. C. H. A. BULKLEY.

ECCLESIASTICAL Conventions and Œcumenical Councils seem to be the methods of furthering God's cause in this age of machinery. They furnish lengthy essays, excellent resolutions, and eloquent speeches. Some of them, Pharisee-like, lay heavy burdens on men's consciences. Theological thumb-screws, and spiritual jackspits, are prepared by them to make the Church do better and the world grow wiser. Do they succeed in this? No doubt it is a good thing for men collectively to talk over religious matters. Secular affairs are thus advanced. A spirit of enterprise and enthusiasm is thus generated, resulting in earnest and often successful effort. May not the same process be legitimate, and the same results ultimate in religious affairs? Most assuredly, if the Church is merely an institution, an establishment, an organization, formed by the crystalization of human particles, and if the spirit necessary to infuse it is to be produced by a process of galvanic friction. But such is not the true idea of the Christian Church. It is not the New Testament idea. Christ did not call men collectively to form them into organized bodies, erecting them into Presbyteries, Councils, Classes, and Conventions, with their Presidents, Vice-Presidents, and Secretaries. He did not gather them to discuss knotty points in theologies, to concoct elaborate schemes for saving men or to establish certain principles of ecclesiasticism. He did not encourage them to authoritative utterances as to whether a man should be virtually ordained before he could preach, or whether a lay preacher was or was not a proper person to speak words of truth. These were questions only fit for the stupid profundities of a Dun Scotus and a Thomas Aquinas, equal to those which they so eruditely fought over; as, for instance, whether an angel in leaving one and reaching another point passed through the intermediate space. Christ never called men together for whatever purpose. They followed him. They pressed upon him. They came to be fed, to be taught. It was a council, the Sanhedrim, that condemned him, and all such human conglomerations have from time immemorial been the darkeners of wisdom with words, making confusion worse confounded by their ecclesiastical edicts.

The first gathering of disciples was at Jerusalem, when, for ten successive days, they were all together continuing with one accord in prayer and supplication. When the day of Pentecost dawned, then came the divine gift. But during those days of supplication there was no machine-work of Bishops in robes and lawn sleeves, or of Doctors of Divinity with little bits of paper slipped into their hands telling them, when, how, and what to speak; there were no reports of impractical enthusiasts, boasting of how many wondrous things of good they had done, and what successful plans they had employed and expecting that every one else should drag the Church-chariot in his harness.

That such men are sincere, devout, and industrious, cannot be denied. But would it not be better for them and all other Christ-named men to tarry at home in their own Jerusalems, and, ignoring all conventions, all discussions, and all machinations for good, implore the divine life to come into them, and thus make the Church a vitality, a spontaneity, an activity, rather than a mere piece of enginery? They may manufacture and put together their cylinders and cog-wheels and pivots, setting them all a-going by a hand-lever; but this will not make fire and steam.

It should not be forgotten that true Christian effort is an outgrowth. The life of Christ effloresces and fructifies forth into the world wherever it is possessed. Its power must be seen and felt by men when they come in contact with its touch. All the wax-work and shell-work and mosaic-work of human hands, though representing flowers ever so costly and beautifully, can never produce the living hues and ravishing perfume of God's handiwork. The life of God alone is competent to this. That life must be in the souls of men sought and gained directly from God himself without the aid of genuflexions, and ritualisms, and discussions, and resolutions. When men have that life, they will not need or care for these other things. They will not waste time, energy and money, in getting up convocations to see what should be done; but they will go immediately to their master's work. Nothing so fully evinces the consciousness of spiritual deficiency as does this regard for outside religious machinery, this demonstration of religious effort. "The kingdom of God," says Christ, "cometh not with observation." It is not a show of zeal that proves its presence. More fire burns in great coals underneath an ash-heap than in the blaze that sparkles round huge logs, especially if they be green. There is much green wood as well as many light kindlings in these convocations—the one never burns at all, the other goes out quickly. Even those venerable and dignified doctors who discourse in their up town churches are ignorant, utterly so, of what the masses need. Yet they can speechify, eloquently indeed, on sending the gospel to the masses. But this cannot be done by Conventions in Fifth-avenue churches, or Councils in Rome. The work cannot be reduced to a system; it is this that kills religious effort. When the Church is just enough in a dying state to be conscious of it, then, as in the dead ages, it calls its councils and assemblies, its diets and synods, to establish orthodoxy and condemn heresy, to goad the sluggish into ephemeral zeal, and to inflame enthusiasts into fanatical deeds. All such religious machine-work ends in ashes and wreck; or, if not so bad as this, in smoke and thin air. But when the Church is truly alive, her spiritual units as wheels within wheels, moved by the Spirit of the living God, then her integral life is a potency; she will need utter no urgent cry, use no wire pulling and pipe-laying, make no forced marches. Her children will come, as came the clans gathering on Scotland's hills, as the Swiss from Alpine vales, as patriot men from Northern homes of liberty, full of true zeal, with the fire of God in their heart and in their eye, landing at once with spiritual weapons to fight well the good fight of faith.

A DESOLATING EVIL.

No greater, more wide-spread and desolating evil exists in the world to-day than intemperance. In church, in state and throughout society it steadily works its work of destruction, and gathers strength constantly. So impetuous is the world in its wild career of thoughtlessness and folly, that it takes little note of the bold operations of this wholesale destroyer. Sometimes when some bright light in the intellectual firmament is seized by it and extinguished, consumed like the burning stars of which astronomers tell us, men stand aghast, horror-stricken, knowing not whether to most wonder at the stupendous power of the slayer, or the worm-like weakness of man's boasted strength, but the thousands that from among the masses are daily crushed down into death, thrust into drunkards' graves, pass away almost unheeded, and are forgotten on the morrow by all but those into whose homes the curse has thrown its terrible blight. From all stations in life this destroyer recruits his death ranks. None are too mean to be desired by him; none so high as to be beyond danger, if they trust only in self. We record the following case, related by an eminent preacher. It is not an isolated one, but fairly represents the fearful plunges from eminence and usefulness down to degradation and ruin, that are continually occurring in life.

"In one of the older colleges of Massachusetts, there was seen a youth of the highest promise, bearing an honored name, and concentrating in his own intellect the moral power of the generations of his ancestors. He was a prodigy of learning. He seized a language almost by intuition, and his heart entered into the heart of antiquity, as he read the language of the old and buried nations. Called upon by the officers of the college to read dissertations in the chapel upon abstruse and difficult subjects, he was accustomed to read them from blank papers, pouring forth spontaneous bursts of argument that thrilled while they convinced, and charmed while they persuaded. He levied large tribute from the lore of every nation under heaven. By an anomaly in American colleges, he demanded and received his first and second degrees from his Alma Mater, on the same day, and on the same evening he was joined in the holy bonds of wedlock with a most estimable lady. His course was still onward and upward. His profession, the law, led him to the highest office of advocacy in the State. He was Attorney General at an age when most students are admitted to the law. Suddenly, when as yet no one knew the cause, he resigned his high appointment, giving no reasons. He was a secret drunkard. Too high was his sense of honor, and the importance of his station, to intrust himself longer with the destinies of society. I turn with horror from the years of degradation that followed. He sunk like a mighty ship in mid ocean, not without many a lurch, many a sign of righting once more to plough the proud seas that were destined to entomb him forever. Long since his lovely wife had quitted the house which his vices had made wretched; she had returned to her parents to grieve and to die. But though her husband bowed over her grave, and wept bitterly on the head of the sweet boy she left behind her, he was not permanently affected by the shock. The most distinguished men for talent and piety in the United States wept and prayed over him; and at times he would get the better of the demon that ruled him, and again put forth his gigantic powers. The greatest effort he put forth during this period was the successful advocacy of an important case before the Supreme Court of the United States. Marshall, the patriarch of American judges, gazed with wonder on the barrister, as, burst after burst of eloquence and argument followed. A member of Congress from Massachusetts, seeing his splendid portrait hanging in a conspicuous place at Washington, inquired whose likeness it was; and one of the highest authorities answered—that is the portrait of Talcott, the most brilliant genius—the most talented man in the United States. In his last spasm of temperance he wrote 'The Trial and Condemnation of Alcohol;' a popular tract, clothed with the forms and phraseology of a criminal court. But after a fatiguing argument before a court in the city of New York, he was over-persuaded by an advocate to take a glass of liquor; and he complied. It was his last sober moment, till he was in the agonies of death. As the fabled Phœnix is said to rise from the ashes of its parents, one of the most lovely, eloquent advocates of temperance in the State of New York, was the son of this ruined genius; the little one over whom he wept at the grave of his wife."

Though sad indeed is this life-picture, it has constantly occurring counterparts as we all know who take the pains to observe what is transpiring about them. We see poor and rich, low and high, ignorant and learned, alike consumed by the baleful fires of intemperance and lust. To the monstrous evil is more than applicable the language in Proverbs, respecting another branch of iniquity. "She has cast down many wounded, yea, many strong men have been slain by her. Her house is the way to hell (sheol) going down to the chambers of death."

PAUL THE APOSTLE.

"SAUL, also called Paul (by which name this illustrious apostle was generally known after his preaching among the Gentiles, especially among the Greeks and Romans), was a Hebrew of the Hebrews, a descendant of the patriarch Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin, and a native of Tarsus, then the chief city of Cilicia. By birth he was a citizen of Rome, a distinguished honor and privilege, which had been conferred on some of his ancestors for services rendered to the commonwealth during the wars. His father was a Pharisee, and he himself was educated in the most rigid principles of that sect. His sister's son and some others of his relations were Christians, and had embraced the gospel before his conversion. That he was early educated in Greek literature at Tarsus, may be inferred from that place being celebrated for polite learning and eloquence, and also from his quotations of several Greek poets. From Tarsus, Saul removed to Jerusalem, where he made considerable proficiency in the study of the law, and the Jewish traditions, under Gamaliel, a celebrated teacher of that day. He appears to have been a person of great natural abilities, of quick apprehension, strong passions, and firm resolution; and was thus qualified for signal service, as a teacher of whatever principles he might embrace. He was also blameless in his life, and strictly faithful to the dictates of his conscience, according to the knowledge which he possessed. This is evident from his appeals to the Jews, and from the undissembled satisfaction he expresses on a serious comparison and recollection of his former and later conduct. His parents completed his education by having him taught the art of tent-making, in conformity with the practice of the Jews, with whom it was customary to teach youth of the highest birth some mechanical employment, by which in case of necessity, they might maintain themselves without being burdensome to others; and his occupation appears subsequently to have had some influence upon his style. For some time after the appearance of Christianity in the world, he was a bitter enemy and a furious opposer of all who professed that faith; and when the protomartyr Stephen was stoned, Saul was not only consenting to his death, but actually took care of the clothes of the witnesses who had stoned him.

"After this event, Saul took an active part in the persecution of the Christians, not only in Jerusalem, but also throughout Judea; and procured letters of commission from the high priest and elders, or sanhedrim, to the synagogue of the Jews at Damascus, empowering him to bring to Jerusalem any Christians, whether men or women, whom he might find there. He also obtained letters to the governor of Damascus, we may presume, to permit them to be removed from his jurisdiction. While Saul was on his journey thither for this purpose, his miraculous conversion took place, A. D. 35, in the manner recorded in the ninth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and to which Saint Paul himself has numerous references in his Epistles. The conversion of such a man, at such a time and by such means, furnishes one of the most complete proofs that have ever been given of the divine origin of Christianity. That Saul, who possessed such distinguished talents and acquirements, from being a zealous persecutor of the disciples of Christ, became all at once a disciple himself, is a fact, which cannot be controverted without overturning the credit of all history."—Selected by F. MAN AND FUTURITY.

WHO has not asked, "What has the future for me?"

Who has not wasted hours and weeks in idle reverie, robbing it of the substantial good with which the improvement of those wasted hours might have endowed it?

And he who vainly strives to "look into the seeds of time to see which grain will grow and which will not," is unconsciously losing the beneficent influence of life's spring showers, and behind the clouds of harrowing speculation, hides her benignant sun-rays. Meanwhile his more philosophical neighbor, remembering that there is no hour so dark, and no moment so ecstatic as to stop the resistless wheels of time, bends his energies to the cultivation of the seed that falls from the full hand of Providence; and though all may not mature, he will not fail of a harvest.

Not so many life failures after all have come of idleness as of misconception; of seeking alone in opportunity, what belongs in part, to a rational will. Men labor too often as the slave, who looks to the setting sun as the ultimatum of earthly bliss, be the day's toil what it may.

In return for aimless toil, they hope that years, that flying time, will bring the coveted wealth or fame. But decade on decade rolls into the past, leaving them in blank astonishment that they remain unchanged.

A true life like the stalactite, grows by slow and silent accretions, and though it is not given us to know which of the seeds of time shall grow, we know that time will return the golden harvest to the consistent and persistent laborer. But persistence without consistency is toiling against fate. Be sure that the soil is adapted to the seed, and toil will render the inevitable return.

Genius is too often looked upon as the spontaneous fountain of fame whence flow, without effort, inexhaustless volumes of inspiration. But never yet was that genius so pure, or so profound, as to be independent of, or superior to the shackles, the passions and temptations of ordinary humanity.

The lives of great men go to show that great natural genius, without labor, and will-force, is less fruitful than well-directed labor with a smaller fund of that possession, called genius.

We would not advise that the cart-horse be placed upon the race track, or the mathematician be turned to poetizing, but we would warn those who are listlessly awaiting the development of genius or opportunity, or the growth of some great mental gift or golden treasure, that they are choking valuable seed in the weeds of inaction.

It is better to triumph in an humble sphere of action than to subject ourselves to the mortifying defeat that awaits all those who struggle for power and fame in a sphere that is beyond their comprehension.—Selected from words by HAYES C. FRENCH, Minister.

DAILY PRAYER.—An aged minister once gave some advice to a young Christian. It was this. "Never neglect, never forget, daily, secret prayer. It is here that the Christian loses ground. Neglect this, and you cannot fail to grow cold and indifferent. Never let a day pass over your head without earnest prayer."

The good old man is dead, but the words he uttered may serve as a warning to more than one, especially to the young. Never neglect secret prayer. Are you busy? Do you excuse yourself because you are so hurried every day? Remember who gives you time. Are you well and strong? Thank God for health. Are you sick? Surely your heart must frame petitions to Him who holds life and death in his hand. Are you exposed to temptations? There is no safeguard like prayer. Have you neglected this duty? Take up again the broken threads. Have you never begun? "Life is short and time is fleeting." Do not neglect secret prayer.—Selected.

TRIALS.—It is the pruned church, like the pruned vine, that bears the most precious clusters; it is the crushed soul, like the crushed aromatic plant that is the most fragrant.

The harp of David reserves its sweetest notes for dirges, and the pencil of the Holy Spirit draws its brightest pictures on a dark ground. He who is a stranger to the depths of divine mercy is a stranger to the heights of divine promise, to the riches of religious joy. Man never appears more glorious, nor God more gracious than when the prophet stands among lions. It is true greatness, says Seneca, to have in one the frailty of man, and the security of God. Hence persecution is spoken of as a gift:—"Unto you it is given in behalf of Christ not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake;" and the prediction of suffering is in the clear words of the Master. "In the world ye shall have tribulation."—Selected.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

A STORY FOR OLD AND YOUNG.

"MRS. R. may Luther go home with me and stay to-night?" said little Alice B. to the minister's wife, who was visiting with her husband and children among the members of his congregation.

The family of which Alice was the youngest made no professions of religion. Mr. B. was a good man in his way; that is, he was honest and kind, but he had never become a child of God.

Luther went home with Alice, and a pleasant romp they had. At last the children's bedtime came. Now, Luther had been taught to kneel down by his papa's knee, and to repeat his prayer before going to bed. So the artless child, in the absence of his parents, walked confidently up to Mr. B., and knelt down, folded his little hands, and in a clear voice repeated:

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take,
And this I ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

So quietly did the child act, that the old man was not aware of his intention until saying "Amen." He arose, and, going to each, he kissed them good-night.

When the children were asleep the family sat long and thoughtfully. Each seemed to be pursuing an absorbing train of thought. At length Mrs. B. broke the silence, as a tear sparkled on her cheek, saying, "What a sweet child!"

Mr. B. took no part in the conversation thus started, but leaving his family circle, retired to his bed-room.

He passed a restless night, and thus, to the oft-repeated question of his wife, "Are you ill?" he only replied, "No."

Morning came, and while breakfast was being prepared, the cheerful "good morning" of the children, and their playfulness, seemed to drive away the singular gloom of kind Mr. B. The chairs were placed, and they sat down to breakfast.

Luther, wondering why they did not have worship, looked from one to the other as they began to eat without the "grace" they always had at home. Thinking, no doubt, that they forgot, he turned his eyes to Mr. B. and said, almost in a whisper, "We didn't pray." It was too much. The old man left the table. Going into his room he fell upon his knees, he wept and prayed.

Mr. B. and most of his family now stand at the Lord's table with their neighbors, showing how God "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hath perfected praise." Luther did what many sermons and exhortations failed to do, and now he and Alice may both repeat their little prayers by Mr. B.'s knee, while, with his hands upon their heads, he smiles and echoes heartily the Amen; and the family altar is erected and loved.

"Feed my lambs," said Christ, and it may be that the tender lamb may lead the straying sheep into the fold.—Lutheran Observer.

A SEWED-UP MOUTH.

IT is said that in the country of Siam, if one is found guilty of lying, the law dooms him to have his mouth sewed up! A sad punishment, truly.

Now, suppose that everybody who told a lie in this country was sure to have his mouth sewed up with an invisible thread, by an invisible needle, how many open mouths should we see in the streets? I wonder how many boys and girls who read this would have sewed-up mouths? Many would have open mouths, for I believe many of you have never told a lie, and I hope you never will; but, alas! some of you have, and if you are ever sent to Siam, and tried for lying, your mouths will be sewed up.

Let those who have never told a lie, cleave to their love of truth. Let those who have, repent, and do so no more. Let all remember that "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord; but they that deal truly are his delight."—N. Y. Observer.

DON'T BE LAZY.

A LITTLE boy was once walking along a dusty road; the sun was very warm and oppressive, but, as was his usual way, he stepped along very quickly, thinking that the faster he walked the sooner he would reach the end of his journey.

He soon heard a carriage coming, and when it had caught up with him, the driver reined in his horse and kindly asked the lad to ride, which he gladly accepted.

When he was seated in the wagon, the gentleman, a good old Quaker, said:

"I noticed thee walking along briskly, and so asked thee to ride; but if I had seen thee walking lazily I would not have done so by any means."

Boys, think of this, and wherever you are, whatever you may be doing, never be lazy, and you will always be repaid for your trouble in some way, if not by being picked up by a Quaker.—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price. 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

INTERESTING LETTERS.—No. 2.

DEAR BR. P.: My New Year's Eve and Night letter contained the promise, the Lord willing, of a second. Since that night the Lord has graciously permitted us to live to see the first few days of the new year. "Our times are in his hands." And let us rejoice that they are. Should health and life be kindly given me by Him who ordereth all things, I shall, in a little while, send you a third communication.

At the close of my first letter I reminded you that I had not forgotten the xivth chapter of Isaiah. Will you please, before proceeding, read that chapter again, and read it carefully and very attentively. What an elegy! How strange, and how strangely beautiful a dirge! But with all its beauties, yes, sublime beauties, what a vein of irony runs through this funeral song! Well does a German commentator of the last century translate the word, in the fourth verse, rendered proverb in our English Bible, with Lied—Song! And if that word had been translated Liedlien, the diminutive of Lied, a little song, a song of contempt, it would have been still better. You are one of the few who read the Old Testament in the Hebrew, and you are conversant with the German. You can, therefore, judge for yourself. After writing the above, I called on the Rev. F. H., our mutual friend, a Hebraist. I have his authority for saying that the word translated proverb, may be correctly rendered, song of derision. Philologically he agrees with me. Besides he told me that Delitzsch renders it, a song of triumph. To decide the question, we referred to Gesenius. Under the Hebrew word, Mashal, the word here used, we found, to my gratifying astonishment, under its fourth meaning—Spottlied, a song of derision; and he quotes this very passage—Isaiah xiv. 4.

Triumphantly I returned to my house, and destroyed much that I intended to write in this letter. For, as my friend F. H. remarked, on leaving him, "Gesenius is authority for the whole world." From that destruction, however, I retained the following. Not unfrequently do we find in the Bible, persons and people the song of derision. I gave some instances. "And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword among all nations whither the Lord shall lead thee." Job says, "And now am I their song, yea, I am their byword." The Psalmist says, "And I became a proverb (in German, derision, mockery) to them. They that sit in the gate speak against me; and I was the song of the drunkards." In Lamentations of Jeremiah we read, "I was a derision to all my people; and their song (Luther's translation, Liedlein) all the day." In connection with these passages, I quoted part of the cxxxviith Psalm.—"By the rivers of Babylon we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof. For there they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion." Here we have the Babylonians saying to the Jews, either to deride and vex them, or perhaps in derisive pity, or perhaps with sincere compassion, "Don't be so downcast—come, cheer up! Give us one of your national airs, or sacred songs." I also referred to Genesis xi.,—to the beginning of the building of the city of Babylon and of the tower of Babel—to the insulting, God-defying language of the builders under Nimrod, the mighty hunter, or as the Septuagint renders it, a hunting giant before the Lord, whose grand object in hunting and driving the people together was, to erect a monument of his pride and of his people's degraded subjection. I called your attention too, to God's language here used—quoting Fuller's comment on this passage, "The remarkable language here used, implies counsel and determination, and an indignant contempt of the presumptuous project formed by the builders." Reminding you of what followed this language of "indignant contempt," we left that plain, on which no lightning flashed, and that tower, above which no loud thunder rolled, and the Land of Shinar, which no earthquake heaved, and while proceeding we read the best commentary on Babel and Babylon and the pride of all nations—the second Psalm. We dwelt on the words, "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision." And, once more casting a look on those that remained around that tower, and on those that left for the wide, wide world, we saw them keeping and taking along their pride. And with the Bible open before us, I asked you the solemn question, What is the climax of pride? The belief in the inherent immortality of man! For man, of whom the Bible says, "And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul"—for man, the creature, to say, in defiance of God's word, "I am immortal!" Yes, I added, the inherent immortality of man, with all its concomitant dogmas and usages, is the offspring of pride and of departure from the living God. This I saved from what I destroyed. I mention this in order to say how much unnecessary studying and thinking would be prevented, if, in difficult passages we at once had a correct translation. Well does Halsted, in his "Theology of the Bible," page 630, say, "There is but one way to reach the truth; and that way is, to discard all the different theories which different sects would impose upon us, and set ourselves to an examination of the original Scriptures, just as if no other Scriptures than those in which the God-word was originally given were ever written. They were written for all time; and should, therefore, be studied with all the care and interest with which they would be if now first given for the very purpose of putting an end to sect and controversy, and giving unity to the church."

But where are we? Standing before the tomb-stone of Babylon—reading her elegy! Splendid elegy! But how seemingly confused! It seems purposely confused—for Babylon is confusion! How seemingly contradictory! It seems purposely contradictory—for Babylon is contradiction! "Babylon!" Name for luxury, arrogance, despotism, tyranny, daring insult against God, exaltation to a throne among the stars; and name, too, for desolation, and for God's mockery of all vaunted human greatness, the incipient wish of which is—inherent immortality—the acme of which greatness is—inherent immortality! "Babylon!" Justly hast thou merited this disdainful elegy! And shall we, dare we, can we ground a doctrine on a song of derision? True, there are awful truths in the midst of solemn mockery! It contains what Babylon believed, and it contains the truth coming from God. It contains historical elements, the past history of Babylon. It contains her everlasting doom. Let us analyze, beginning at the 9th verse.

"Hell (hades, sheol) from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations." Deep mockery! The expression, stirreth up the dead for thee, may be translated, waketh the dead for thee. It is so translated by Luther, in the German Bible. Mockery, deep mockery! Babylon by her coming to waken the dead!! This is the province of another—of one mightier than Babylon—even of Him who is the "Resurrection and the Life." He alone has "the keys of hell (hades) and of death." "Even all the chief ones of the earth," etc.

God's truth. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast Thou visited them and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish."

"All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? Art thou become like one of us?" Mockery, deep mockery! In a conscious state of the dead, and in its accompanying idolatrous dogmas, and images and altars and temples, with its multitude of sorceries, and its great abundance of enchantments, thou didst believe and didst revel in them.

God's truth: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." "The dead know not anything." "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." "Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!" "For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north. I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High." This was Babylon's history—this her language. Art thou immortal? "The King of kings, and Lord of lords only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach; whom no man hath seen nor can see: to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen."

"Thou shalt be brought down to hell (hades, sheol) to the sides of the pit."

"They shall lie down together, they shall not rise; they are extinct, they are quenched as tow."

"They shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts."

Brother, I have given only the outlines. Please read the elegy again, and may the Spirit of God guide us into all truth.

Babylon! proud Babylon! Again thou loomest up—where? In the last book of the Bible. Read Rev. xvii. 5. Is it not strange that in our English Bible, capital letters are here used? We might almost think that the same Spirit that inspired the sacred writers inspired the translators. Read Babylon's doom in the next chapter. What a history! What an elegy! What an awful dirge! Pride! Contempt! Mournful requiem! "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you upon her."

"And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

Pride! And what is the culmination of pride? The sinful belief that we possess inherent immortality. And what are the pharisaical rags, covering this sinful belief? The proud, though seemingly humble, acknowledgment that a creature can commit infinite sins against an Infinite God! Brother, we cannot humble ourselves too much before God. But, free from all pride must our humility be. It must be in accordance with Bible truth.

"Surely every man is vanity." "He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not." "Dust and ashes!" "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing." "God be merciful to me a sinner."

O for more grace, to say from the very depth of a believing, humble and contrite and confidential heart,

"For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are DUST."

May we "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To Him be glory both now and forever. Amen."

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Jan., 1870.

THE UNHOLY ALLIANCE.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

THE professed church and the world have become so mixed up that it is difficult to tell them apart. By this union the world has not become elevated; but Protestantism, by degenerating to a level with the world, has lost the primitive power that Christianity wielded in the world. In view of this sad fact, it becomes the duty of every true disciple of Jesus to cry aloud. Shall we see the true bride of Christ forsake him and join hands with his adversary, and still hold our peace? Nay, verily. God has not changed. His commands do not accommodate themselves to the desires of unsanctified human nature. They are unequivocal. Therefore, when we see professed Christians depart from primitive purity—compromise their religion with the evil, and settle down in the broad way to ruin—we must sound the warning. It is every Christian's duty to do the same; and the reasons are many.

1. This alliance is contrary to the word of God. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is an enemy of God."—James iv. 4. This is too plain to be overlooked. Whoever seeks the happiness and pleasures of the world instead of the joys which God gives his children, is his enemy. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;-for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial; or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people."—2 Cor. vi. 14–16.

2. It is contrary to the teachings of men eminent for their piety. Hear the testimony of John Wesley on this subject. He says:

"Whatever it costs, flee spiritual adultery! Have no friendship with the world. However tempted thereto by profit or pleasure, contract no intimacy with worldly-minded men. And if thou hast contracted with any such already, break it off without delay. Yes, if thy ungodly friend be dear to thee as a right eye, or useful as a right hand, yet confer not with flesh and blood, but pluck out the right eye, cut off the right hand, and cast them far from thee! It is not an indifferent thing. Thy life is at stake—eternal life, or eternal death! . . . When thou knewest no better, the times of ignorance God winked at. But now their eyes are opened, now the light is come, walk in the light! Touch not pitch, least thou be defiled. At all events 'keep thyself pure.'

"But whatever others do, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear, hear this: However importuned or tempted thereto, have no friendship with the world. Look around and see the melancholy effect it has produced. How many have fallen by this very thing! They would take no warning; they would converse, and that intimately with earthly-minded men, till they measured back their steps to earth again. O come out from among them! from all unholy men, however harmless they may appear, 'and be ye separate;' at least so far as to have no intimacy with them. As your fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, so let it be with those and those only, who at least seek the Lord Jesus in sincerity."

Payson was a holy man, an eminently useful minister of Christ. In early life he renounced the world. He says, "After long doubting the propriety, and even the lawfulness of mixing at all in society, where duty does not call, and after suffering a number of times for indulging myself in it, I am at length taught to renounce it entirely; and it is not a needless scrupulousity. It does appear a duty to shun all communication with the world, when there is no well-grounded reason to hope to do good. There are, to be sure, many very plausible reasons, but I doubt whether they will bear the test of Scripture."

To one who urged him to go into society and to frequent public amusements, he wrote: "Can a man walk on pitch and his feet be not defiled? Can a man take coals of fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned? If he can, he may mix freely with the world, and not be contaminated. But I am not the one who can do it. . . . When I go into company, if it is pleasant and agreeable, it has a tendency only to fix my thoughts on earth, from which it is my duty and my desire to turn them—to give me a distaste for serious duties, especially prayer and meditation, and to render me desirous of the applause and approbation of those with whom I associate. I cannot avoid feeling some desire for its friendship; and this friendship the apostle assures us, and my own experience feelingly convinces me, is enmity with God."

"I have at length obtained satisfaction respecting doubts about society; not, however, till I was brought to give it up. After I had done so, it appeared so plain and proper, that I wondered how a doubt could ever have arisen on this subject. Two or three plain rules I find of wonderful services in deciding all difficult cases. One is, to do nothing of which I doubt, in any degree, the lawfulness: the second, to consider everything as unlawful which indisposes me for prayer, and interrupts communion with God; the third is, never to go into any company, business or situation, in which I cannot conscientiously ask and expect the divine presence. By the help of these short rules, I settle all my doubts in a trice, and find that many things I have hitherto indulged in are, if not utterly unlawful, at least inexpedient, and I can renounce them without many sighs."

THE SAINT'S JOY AND SORROW.

"I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you."—1 Cor. iv. 8. "The days will come," etc.—Luke xvii. 22.

I PLACE together these two verses—the words of the disciple and the words of the Master—as breathing the same spirit. They speak of present pressure and trouble; they point to a day of deliverance and triumph; they indicate the feelings of Christ's Church in this evil day and evil world. Paul means to say, "I wish the time of reigning were really come, as ye seem to think; for then should we share in that glory, instead of being the offscouring of all things;" as if feeling most deeply present trial, and longing for the day when the glory shall be revealed. The Lord means to say, "Days are coming when ye shall long even for one of the days of the Son of man;" pointing to approaching tribulation, and intimating that under the pressure of this they would long for even one day's relief. Both these passages are written for us, that we might not be overwhelmed with despair, as if some strange thing were happening to us, when trial comes down on us like a thick cloud. Taking both verses together, we extract from them such consolations and truths as the following, for the special use of the Church of God.

1. The pressure of present evil.—There is evil in the world, and there will be till Christ come. There is evil in the Church. There is sin, confusion, darkness, pain, affliction in many forms, bereavements, persecutions, anxieties, cares and vexations, poverty, hatred, contempt, with many more such evils. They come on us daily. They press hard on us, and weigh us down. Each disciple has his own special lot and peculiar trial. Paul felt his deeply; and we must all feel them, for we are not made insensible to sorrow by our becoming believers. The Head felt his sorrows, and prayed, Let this cup pass from me; so the body in all its members feels its sorrows, and "desires one of the days of the Son of man," or longs that the day of reigning were come. "O wretched man that I am," we cry, in reference to the inner conflict. "Woe is me that I dwell in Meshech," we cry concerning the fightings and storms without.

2. The anticipation of coming good.—This good is called by our Lord the days of the Son of man, in contrast with the present days, which are simply days of man, or "man's day," "this present evil world." It is called by the apostle the time of reigning, in contrast with the present time of downtreading and persecution. These good days are coming, and we fix our hope upon them. They are blessed, and glorious, and endless. They shall reverse everything that is evil now—that pertaining to soul and body, to man and man's earth, to the Church and to the world. It is resurrection that we look for; the times of restitution; a kingdom; new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Then all shall be holy, happy, peaceful; the body glorified, the earth renewed, Satan bound, Antichrist overthrown, sorrow turned into joy, the cross exchanged for the crown, the tents of Kedar for the New Jerusalem, the wilderness for Canaan, the weariness of the pilgrimage for the everlasting rest.

3. The desire of relief.—Paul's words express this desire, and Christ's prediction intimates the same thing. We are not expected to be satisfied with pain and sorrow, so as not to long for their removal. We long for deliverance; nay, for the most temporary respite—even for one of the days of the Son of man. The burden is at times so heavy that we cry out under it, and wish that the present days were shortened, and the glory hastened. One day's respite would be a great thing for us when overwhelmed at times with evil. But the respite comes not; patience must have her perfect work. There is no sin in the desire, only let it not be impatient. "Not my will, but Thine be done."

4. The frequent disappointment.—The sky seems for an hour to clear, and then the clouds return after the rain. The sunshine promises and then passes away. We seem to come within sight of Canaan, and then another range of desert mountains rises up between. The day seems almost breaking, but it breaks not; the shadows seem just departing, but they depart not. Often we say, The long road is ending, the next turn will bring us to its termination; and, instead, another long stretch of road lengthens out before us. Often we say, Surely this darkness cannot last, this evil must have spent itself; but in vain we thus think. The time is not yet. Often we say, Surely Christ is coming, the reign of crime is ending, the era of holy peace is at hand, the kingdom is going to begin; and then the prospect darkens again, and we seem to hear the voice, "Not yet, not yet." Often we cry, "How long?" and the answer is, "Wait," be patient, stablish your hearts; it will not be long.

5. The kingdom at last.—These are sure things. They will come at last, though on the back of many disappointments. He that shall come will come, and will not tarry. The signs of the times have often cheated us, but at length they shall be found true. They will introduce the kingdom and the rest. The glory shall break forth; the Son of man shall be revealed; He who is our life shall appear. The ransomed of the Lord shall return with songs; the days of our mourning shall be ended; sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

6. The connection between present evil and future good.—Our present light affliction worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Present evil is the soil out of which the coming good is to spring. Light is sown for the righteous, but it is sown in darkness. It is out of sickness and weakness that our immortal health and strength are to come. The grave is the birthplace of incorruption. It is sown in weakness, and is raised in power. Thus God shall overcome evil with good; out of sin coming holiness, out of our brief sorrow the eternal joy.—Quarterly Journal of Prophesy.

REVELATION XX.

BY J. C. WHEELER.

THIS chapter has caused much controversy, and excited much interest in its study. I hope to show some of its harmony with other Scriptures. By so doing we may be able to find out what God intended to convey therein, whether to place the thousand years past or future. First, we wish to notice the dragon that is to be bound. To understand this matter perfectly, 1st, we are to learn the interpretation God has given of these matters; if parables, by the law of parables; if symbols, by the law of symbols. Now the dragon here spoken of is given in symbolic language for reasons assigned.

1. You turn to Rev. xii. 3, 4, and so on. There you will find the same dragon spoken of. Here dragon represents pagan Rome, as existing when Christ was born. So we must come to the conclusion if it means pagan Rome in chap. xii., it must in chap. xx.

But, says one, Why does he bring in devil and satan?

I answer, for this reason: The doctrine that Pagans held was devilish and satanic; also a bottomless doctrine.

Again, in Rev. xx. 1, he speaks thus, "And I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit." The key here spoken of represents a certain power which shall bind this bottomless doctrine or power for a thousand years. For it is the only bottomless doctrine ever mentioned in the Bible. And its start was as early in the history of the world as the garden. It commenced with these words, "Ye shall not surely die," in contradiction to God's word. So we learn it is without bottom or foundation. Paul speaks against this very doctrine to the Colossian brethren, chap. ii. 8.

Says Paul, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."

We learn, 1st, the word "rudiments" here means the first principles taught of an earthly nature ("ye shall not surely die.") 2d. We learn that Paul warned us against vain philosophers, which did arise under pagan Rome, Zoroaster, Socrates and Plato, teaching the same doctrine ("ye shall not surely die"), or the immortality of man, ending in the same great ocean of spiritualism. So pagan doctrine is bottomless.

The definition of pagan is thus given, "Who worship false gods or images." Their form of worship is this, "They would make a great image, then one chosen from the assembly would present himself before the image, then he would twist and wring until he would assume a spirit coming out of the image and entering into him; then he would turn to the assembly and address them." This is modern spiritualism in its early stages.

Now then, we learn what is to be bound a thousand years. It is the pagan power, or image worship; it was to cease. Again, we learn this fact, that this image worship did exist until about 792 or 3, when in harmony with the edict of Justinian to unite all men in one faith; so in harmony with the edict Charlemagne, or Charles the Great, who had power over State and Church, did subdue the image worshippers; and the aforesaid worship ceased until free toleration was granted about 1792 or 3, which makes the thousand years of Rev. xx. complete.

Since the liberation of said power, satanic delusions have increased in a tenfold ratio, until it has arrived at the present standard, with inherent immortality for its foundation (modern spiritualism), with a denial of God, Jesus Christ, and the Bible.

Now, to show more positive that the thousand years are in the past, we take an expression used in 3d verse, and compare it with the common idea of our Adventist friends. The expression alluded to is this, "They cast him into the bottomless pit," for this reason, "he should deceive the nations no more until the expiration of a thousand years."

The common idea of our Adventist friends is this: When the Lord comes, mercy is gone to the world, and all that are good go up to meet the Lord; and those that are filthy will be filthy still, and all that are holy will be holy still; and, as Daniel says, "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that is written in the book," and I believe it, for so it is written. But with this idea how can they place the thousand years in the future? For all are saved that ever will be; and why should he be so careful to bind the devil so he should not deceive those nations that are already deceived, and no hope nor mercy for them? You cannot fail to see the point.

Also, every nation is lost when the Lord comes, but one; and that is the holy nation, which cannot be deceived. It is a nation that is brought from every kindred, tongue and people; they that fear God and work righteousness; so satan's work is completed when the Lord comes; no more deceptions to be used, for he will be destroyed.

Again, in that thousand years, John saw "thrones, and they (more than one), sat on them, and judgment was given to them (plural, not God's judgment), and I saw the souls of them (or persons of them) that were beheaded.

I ask, where were those souls or persons beheaded? John says, in Rev. vi. 9, they were beheaded under the fifth seal. Very well. That is in the past, is it not? Yes, says the opponent. Well, then, I have brought another fact from the Bible to show it is in the past.

Again, I ask, Why were they beheaded? I answer, "for the witness of Jesus."

Then, if the thousand years are in the future, who is able to behead immortal beings, who are changed from corruption to incorruption, from mortal to immortality? I ask, Who?

Again, we learn they were beheaded for "the word of God." Now, then, how could it be after the Lord comes, or future? for God's word is a shining light, that shineth more and more to the perfect day, and not a thousand years after.

Jesus is the author and will be the finisher of our faith. So then, at the resurrection, we shall come in by sight and walk no more by faith; so we shall be with wicked nations no more to witness for Jesus; and if so, then silence is forever on the part of those who place the thousand years future.

Again, we learn that this thousand years spoken of in Rev. xx., existed in time of the beast or papacy. For this reason: They did not worship the beast. Who? Those that were beheaded. It can't be after the Lord comes, for the beast is to be destroyed with the spirit of his mouth and the brightness of his coming. It would be foolish to say they did not worship the beast, when the beast did not exist. So much for this point.

Again, they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Question: Who are they? Why, those that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, etc. They lived and reigned with him a thousand years. It does not say they will not live in the future. But it does say they will exist or endure the time specified. For this reason he speaks as he does in Daniel vii. 25. Of the beast or papacy, it is said, "He shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High; and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hands until a time, times, and dividing of times."

So Jesus, seeing the determination of papacy to destroy his saints, says, in Matt. xxiv. 22, "Except those days should be shortened, there shall no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

So this accounts for the language in Rev. xx. 4, "and they lived and reigned with him a thousand years," notwithstanding papacy thought to wear them out.

Verse 5.—"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years are finished. This is the first resurrection."

This language implies that others had lived prior to the thousand years, and would not live again until the thousand years were finished.

This is the first resurrection, and it comes at the wrong end of the thousand years for the theory of two resurrections; for it comes at the last end of the thousand years; and then, unfortunately for that theory, it is the first resurrection, and the second will never be found.

Again, after the thousand years are ended, satan is to be let loose, or Pagan doctrines are to have sway. Question: For what? "To deceive the nations."

But, says one, "It does not say Pagan power was let loose." I ask, what was bound? I answer, it was Pagan worship. Then what was to be let loose? Certainly that which was bound, viz: Pagan worship.

Pagan worship was bound for the space of a thousand years, and it began its sad work at the expiration of the same.

Now to the point. For what purpose was satan set loose? I answer, To go out and gather the nations to battle, prior to Jesus' coming, as we learn in Rev. xvi. 13, "Three unclean spirits, like frogs, go forth to kings of earth, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty."

This is under the sixth vial; and all will admit this is transpiring before us at the present day. If so, the loosing of satan, Rev. xx., is all in harmony with Rev. xvi. 13. Both are to do the same work, to gather to the battle of the great day of God. Right then and there, "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments pure." So the idea that the thousand years is in the future is not correct. For death, and he that hath the power of it, which is the devil, is to be destroyed when Christ comes. Then if death, and the cause of death is removed, there will be no more death, for death and hell will be cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death.

Thus if you get the devil and wicked men raised up a thousand years after the Lord comes, to die again, they will get one death too many, for it will be the third instead of second.

May God grant that we may all so have the love of the truth in us, that we may ever say, "Not my will, but thine be done."

May this be our happy lot. Amen.

NORTH TURNER BRIDGE, Me.

A COUNT'S DEVOTION.

WHEN Catherine the Second ascended the throne of Russia, she solicited Count Munich to accept some marks of her favor, although she knew he had been the most formidable opponent to her accession. "No," said the Count, "I am an old man: I have already suffered many misfortunes; and if I purchased a few years of my life by compromising my principles, I should make but a bad exchange."—Selected by L. C. T.

G. W. EVANS, Greenfield, Mo., writes: The tracts you sent here were received and distributed all round. Many expressed themselves well pleased; but the love of God is something they have heard but little of. They have heard so much preaching and talk about "brimstone" that many have concluded the devil is the best friend they have; and they are most afraid to believe God's word for fear they will displease the devil, and in that case he will heap up the fire on them. Truly darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people. If it were not for the hirelings I doubt not that many in this part of the country could be led to see the truth; but as it is, few are willing to risk their salvation on the word of the Lord. I trust, however, the seed sown by scattering these tracts, will bring forth some fruit to life eternal. Yours, in hope of that life at the coming of Christ the LIFE-GIVER.

THE DIRECT AID OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

IT is a question, with many who claim to be Christians, whether we are now to expect the direct and special aid, assistance, enlightenment, and sanctification of the Holy Spirit of God. That such work of the Spirit should ever be doubted, among professed believers in christianity, can only be accounted for by the action of extremes; because some professing to be led by the Spirit have run into scandalous extravagances, and neglected the word altogether; therefore, others have gone to the extreme of ignoring the work and leadings of the Spirit altogether. Both positions are false and dangerous. "The Spirit and the word agree," and cannot contradict or contravene each other. The word is an immense blessing; but it may be abused and misused as well as the Spirit; and few are better agreed as to the real meaning of the word than others are as to the work and leadings of the Spirit; and because some abuse the word and make it to sanction their abominable teachings and practices, shall we abandon it entirely? If not, so neither should we treat lightly the Spirit's work and leading because of the folly and fanaticism of such as abuse the doctrine of the gift of the Holy Spirit.

That the Holy Spirit is a gift of God's grace, promised and imparted to true believers in Jesus, is abundantly proved by the teachings of Christ and his Apostles. Our Lord said before he went away, "I will pray the Father, and he will give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever: even the Spirit of truth whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you."—John xiv. 16, 17. Again, "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—Verse 26.

In this remarkable and glorious promise, we have it distinctly stated who the Comforter is, viz., the Holy Spirit. It is that which "the world cannot receive"—"it knoweth him not:" but believers in Jesus do "know him," and, "he dwelleth with" them, "and shall be in you." There is no evading these statements except by the grossest perversion of our Lord's words, which clearly shows that those who do it are of "the world," and know nothing of real christianity, as here clearly exhibited by its founder. It is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit that distinguishes a real disciple of Christ from a mere worldling professor, who is anxious about rites and ceremonies, or has "a form of Godliness, but denies the power thereof." Such were to abound in the last days, and fill up the great apostacy.

Again, our Lord said, "When he, the Spirit of truth is come, he shall lead you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come." To suppose this language is at all applicable to the written word, or the Scriptures, is the hight of absurdity; for if the term Spirit may be applied in these great and precious promises to the Scriptures, and not to the work of the Spirit of God, then it may be thus applied always, and then what confusion is introduced into the word itself. Take a few examples. "If the Scriptures of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Scriptures that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11. Again, "Jesus was led up of the Scriptures into the wilderness to be tempted."—Matt. iv. 1. "The heavens opened, and the Scriptures like a dove descended upon him."—Mark i. 10. "And immediately the Scriptures driveth him into the wilderness." "Jesus returned in the power of the Scriptures into Galilee."—Luke iv. 14. "They spake as the Scriptures gave them utterance."—Acts ii. 4. "Then the Scriptures saith to Philip, go near and join thyself to this chariot."—Acts viii. 29. "Likewise the Scriptures helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what to pray for as we ought; but the Scripture itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."—Rom. viii. 26.

These illustrations of the absurdity of calling the Spirit and the word one and the same, might be multiplied to any extent; but enough has been presented to convince the impartial and unprejudiced that while the "Spirit and the word agree," and cannot contradict each other, the Spirit itself stands in the foreground; is the author of the word, and as superior to it, as the cause is superior to the thing caused. The word is an immense blessing; the Spirit is a vastly greater one, and that without which there is no divine life in us, and no future life for us. No wonder then that Christians are cautioned, "Quench not the Spirit"—"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." "If ye live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit;" and remember, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Gal. v. Let us also keep in mind that, "after ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession."—Eph. i. 13, 14. Let us beware that we do not trifle with the Spirit, or set it at naught.

That to believers this Spirit is inward, and not merely outward, or in the word, it would seem unnecessary to argue, if credit is given to the word itself: "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you," said Jesus; and this indwelling cannot be restricted to the apostles, if they understood what they were authorized to teach; for Barnabas is said to be a "good man, and full of the Holy Spirit." Paul saith "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" —1 Cor. iii. 16. "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be the Spirit of God dwell in you."—Rom. viii. 9. "If ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Verse 13.

How evident that the most distinguishing feature of true Christianity is, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit; by its power all our victories are won, whether over ignorance or sin. The written word itself is powerless to give life and victory, only as it is wielded by the Spirit. In the Spirit's hand it is a "sword," and cuts down sin; gives victory in every time of trial. We are "chosen to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."—2 Thess. ii. 13. The Spirit is the author of the truth. He then who exalts the written word above the author of it, so far commits an act of idolatry. The Spirit stands first, above the word written, in its importance, though never opposed to the word; but it reveals in the believer truth, but for the Spirit's presence he would never understand or know its power.

Are Christians "so foolish, having begun in the Spirit," as to suppose they "are now made perfect by the flesh?" by any intellectual use of the word "written on tables of stone," or parchment of any kind? and not rather, "written with the Spirit of the living God" on the "tables of the heart?"—2 Cor. iii. 3. "Eye hath not seen . . . the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God . . . the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God;" for what purpose? "that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."—1 Cor. ii. 9–12. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—Verse 14. How exactly this language agrees with that of Jesus, in speaking of the gift of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, "whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you."

Alas, for any of us who receive not the Holy Spirit for our Comforter and Guide, or "having begun in the Spirit," seek to be perfected by some other agency, and grieve or quench the Holy Spirit, and perhaps deny its actual agency in instructing, sanctifying, and leading us "into all truth." Let no one suppose such a sin is a trifling one. Such might be shocked if they hear of any one who rejects the Bible, or written word: but how much more criminal to reject the author of that word, and affirm that the Spirit that inspired holy men to write that word, has ceased to manifest himself to believers now? Especially, seeing Christ has said that "He may abide with you forever." Not for a few months or years, but "FOREVER." Precious promise! Shall we cast it all away, call it "a delusion;" and say, "Not so, Lord: the written word is enough for us?" No wonder such darkness as to the meaning of the word, and divisions about its true sense, have filled the churches, and made the word foolishness to many, when the only infallible TEACHER has been dismissed from our theological schools, and the "wisdom of men" is substituted in His place. May God preserve LIFE-BELIVERS from such a fatal snare. Let us pray fervently for the indwelling, teaching, and leading of the Holy Spirit of God. "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."—John xvi. 24.

THE DESTINY OF THE UNGODLY.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"What shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel of God?"—1 Pet. iv. 17.

THIS is an important question. It has often been propounded since it was written by the inspired penman, and we can but feebly conceive of its magnitude, when we consider the profound interest with which it has for ages engaged the mightiest intellects of the theological world. The infidel, in his sneering attacks upon Christianity, has asked this question, and then contemptuously pointed to the multitudes who endeavor to answer it with their preconceived opinions and educated notions. Alas, were we to look here for the truth, we would look in vain.

OUR ONLY SOURCE OF INFORMATION.

Aside from the book of inspiration this weighty question never has and never can be satisfactorily answered. What reflecting mind would rest its hopes of eternity, with inward satisfaction, upon the philosophy of Plato and Seneca, whose writings are intermixed with blasphemy, or upon the reasonings of Bolingbroke, Hume, Voltaire, or Tom Paine? Were we left to explore the profound depths of human reason for a solution of the question of the destiny of man, we should be doomed to disappointment, and it would remain forever shrouded in mystery and darkness. The Bible—God's holy book of inspiration—alone unfolds all the light we can obtain on this subject. Through its illuminating rays the purpose of the Creator is made apparent; the placing of man upon the earth, subjecting him to trial, and demanding his obedience to divine law, is divested of all mystery. In its pages alone we can fully ascertain the character of that just and holy Being who has promulgated his decree to punish those who resist his law, and despise his love in offering his only begotten Son for their salvation. "God is love." "We love him because he first loved us."

THE THREE SOLUTIONS OF THE QUESTION.

There are three leading doctrines pressing themselves upon the attention of mankind, each claiming to solve the great question of the destiny of the wicked. That all our readers may clearly understand the subject we will state these theories briefly.

1. The theory of eternal torment.—The votaries of this theory, undoubtedly compose the majority of those who accept the divine inspiration of the Scriptures, and assume that the wicked are destined to be punished with unending torture. As this theory at the present age of the world, holds such a prominent position, perhaps we cannot state it more clearly than in the words of the great orthodox divines, and thus show to what depths of delusion they have gone in describing the miseries of the lost.

Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, in his sermon of doom's day, says: "When the damned have drunken down whole draughts of brimstone one day, they must do the same another day. The eye shall be tormented with the sight of devils, the ear with the hideous yellings and outcries of the damned; in flames the nostrils shall be smothered as it were with brimstone; the tongue, the hand, the foot, and every part, shall fry in flames."

Emmons says: "The happiness of the elect in heaven will in part consist in witnessing the torments of the damned in hell. And among those it may be their own children, parents, husbands, wives, and friends on earth."

This is fully equalled by Dr. Watts, when he says:

"There is a never-ending hell,
And never dying pains,
Where children must with demons dwell,
In darkness, fire and chains."

"God is present in hell, in his infinite justice and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture. The presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there display or manifest his love, so hell would be no hell, if God did not there display his wrath. . . . His fiery indignation kindles, and his fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their being will admit."

Again, hear President Edwards, the renowned metaphysician and able divine of New England. He says:

"The woes of sinners in hell will not be a cause of grief to the saints in heaven, but of rejoicing. This rejoicing will be the fruit of an amiable disposition, and a perfect holiness and conformity to Christ. . . . After your godly parents shall have seen you lie in hell millions of years or ages, in torment day and night, they will not begin to pity you then. They will praise God that his justice appears in the eternity of your misery."

In these descriptions of hell torment should be considered terrible, what shall we think of that given by C. H. Spurgeon, the great pulpit orator of England? He says:

"When thou diest, thy soul will be tormented alone; that will be a hell for it; but at the day of judgment thy body will join thy soul, and then thou wilt have twin hells; body and soul will be together, each brimfull of pain, thy soul sweating in its inmost pore drops of blood; and thy body, from head to foot, suffused with agony; conscience, judgment, memory, all tortured; but more; thy head tormented with

"Sullen moans and hollow groans,
And shrieks of tortured ghosts."

"Thine heart beating high with fever; thy pulse rattling at an enormous rate in agony; thy limbs cracking like the martyrs in the fire, and yet unburnt; thyself put in a vessel of hot oil, pained, yet coming out undestroyed; all thy veins becoming a road for the feet of pain to travel on; every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of hell's unutterable lament; thy soul forever and ever aching, and thy body palpitating in unison with thy soul. Fictions, sir? Again I say, they are no fictions, and as God liveth, but solid, stern truth. If God be true, and this Bible be true, what I have said is the truth, and you will find it one day to be so."

This theory, from the days of pagan darkness, has been pressed upon the world as a solution of the question of the future destiny of the unrighteous, but ascribes to God simply a character of extreme cruelty and vindictiveness, wholly inconsistent with the plainest teachings of revelation. We are asked to believe it; but who really does, or can? True, many profess to believe it, and strenuously advocate it; but the quiet hours of meditation and reflection bring their doubtings and misgivings. Again, as far in the extreme the other way, and equally as far from the truth of revelation, we have offered as a solution of this subject,

2. The doctrine of the final salvation of all the race.—Large numbers fleeing from "the pagan doctrine of a vengeful Deity and eternal torments," have sought a solution for the subject of future destiny in the assumption that "every child of Adam is an heir of God, and joint-heir with Jesus Christ; and consequently, human destiny is an eternal future of infinite blessedness and glory." We quote this from an authentic source; and, while presenting God in a much lovelier light than the previous theory, yet, in seeking refuge from the moral poison of the endless torment theory, had they but stopped and searched God's word, and exercised faith in His declarations, they would have found the desired relief for their minds, which is like "an anchor for the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail, whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus."

3. The theory of limited torment—or two deaths for the wicked.—This theory, being pressed very prominently before the religious world, at the present time, maintains, in opposition to the doctrines we have just mentioned, that the wicked, not possessing immortality inherently, nor obtaining it as a "gift" through Christ, are destined to be raised from the unconscious state of death to "live a life of sorrow, tribulation and anguish," and finally lose their existence in the "fire of gehenna," which is "the second death;" and thus again be returned to the same state of unconsciousness from which they were awakened. Can we consider this anything else than a modification of the endless torment theory? Does it not embody the same principles of vindictiveness which the other theory ascribes to God? One theory asserts that the misery of the finally lost shall never end; the other denies the eternity of its existence, but assumes that their anguish will terminate in the second death.

The unscriptural nature of this theory as well as its unreasonableness, will fully appear as we shall proceed with the examination of our subject. The theory of a mortal resurrection, thus put forth, will not stand a moment's comparison with the Holy Scriptures; and we solicit the reader's careful attention to the series of articles which we propose to offer on this subject, as containing proof of our assertion.

A DONATION.

BR. STORRS: Inclosed is a check for $20 to pay for 1,000 of tract No. 3, "THE JUDGMENT," for all to send for who have not the means to pay, that they may be scattered, as I have suggested in "A NOTICE." You may give just such notice as you think good, only let the precious truth go forth and sinners be saved.

Yours, in hope of immortality,
E. WOLCOTT.

KEYPORT, N. J., Jan. 19, 1870.

Remarks by the Editor.

It will be seen, by the above, that Br. Wolcott has generously placed within the reach of those disposed to circulate it, at least one thousand of the tract on "The Judgment." Let such as are disposed to scatter them, according to his design, send in their orders to us for them. Read "A Notice," by Br. W., in another part of this paper, to learn his "design" in their distribution. If others, who may be blessed with means, would like to take up some other tract in our Catalogue in like manner, we shall be glad to do all in our power to help on the work. Let us all "work while it is day; for the night cometh in which no man can work."

THE SECRET OUT!

THE secret of Lazarus' under-world life is out at last. We have often wondered why this privileged man didn't write a book. Didn't he go to hades and wander all about its unseen labyrinths four mortal days? Didn't he come back from that mysterious "bourne" from which the great English poet tells us no traveller ever did come back? Must he not then, have known all about the famed "spirit land" so much sung of in these immortal-soul-days? Had not he a chance to solve the vexed question, "Do the dead know anything?" A very few words from his lips would have settled the thing. But alas, his lips were sealed. Lazarus is silent respecting the realm of the dead. That he never did lift the veil that hides the invisible from mortal eyes, is by so orthodox a paper as "The Advance," deemed "rather curious." But how could a man who "knew not anything" while he was in this invisible; a man in whom "device, memory, wisdom and knowledge," was extinct, a man who had "no remembrance" while in hades, how could such a man walk right out of the gates of this "invisible," and tell the world his four days experience of under-ground life? Ah! Lazarus' silence speaks. There is a hitch here, and these good die-and-go-to-heaven folks see it. So Swedenborgianism and Spiritualism, hasten to the rescue of its cherished darling, viz., the immortality of the soul.

Dr. W. H. Holcombe, a physician of Philadelphia, of the "New Jerusalem" school, has at last made this dark subject as clear as mud! It is no longer true as England's Poet Laureate "Tennyson sings,"

"Behold a man raised up by Christ!
The rest remaineth unrevealed;
He told it not; or something sealed,
The lips of that Evangelist;"

for our author in a novel and entertaining "fiction," has made Lazarus tell the "unrevealed" story. So it's all out. "In Both Worlds" is the title of the book, and in this child of "fiction" will be found that part of John's gospel which wasn't written. Of course the medical man knows, and the Evangelist must pass for an old fogy who omitted to tell the whole truth, or who, more likely, didn't know enough to tell it! The whole tribe of immortal-soul-ists, who fail to establish their doctrine from the Bible will take courage. Holcombe to the rescue! Fiction to demonstrate fiction: isn't the thought a happy one? "Thou reasonest well," said the Pagan Cato, of the Pagan Plato, who had written of the soul's immortality at death. So will say the admirers of "In Both Worlds." But what is the chaff to the wheat, brethren? O ye children of folly, Lazarus is yet silent, and the tomb keeps its master secret.

ROLYAT.

The following are the remarks of "The Advance," in noticing the work referred to by "ROLYAT."

"This is a fiction, somewhat novel and quite entertaining. It professes to be a life of Lazarus of Bethany, written by himself (mysteriously recovered, as related in the preface), in which he gives an account not only of his earthly experiences, but also of what occurred during his three day's abode in the spirit world. As the author is a Swedenborgian, of course Lazarus talks Swedenborgianism as to Bible doctrines and the nature of death, resurrection and the coming life. It is rather curious by the way, that Lazarus should never have anticipated the part of Swedenborg as a revelator, and have lifted the veil which hides the invisible, as also Tennyson sings:

Behold a man raised up by Christ!" etc.

A NOTICE.

SEVERAL years ago, we published eight pages of "Scripture Searches" on 1, "The Coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" and the evidences of its nearness; 2. "Saint's Inheritance;" 3. "State of the dead;" 4. "Kingdom of God; Where located? What is it?" 5. "When will the Righteous be rewarded?" 6. "What shall the end be of them who obey not the gospel?" 7. "Great Truths." These are folded in one tract. They contain copious scripture references bearing on these important subjects. We have just published another edition considerably revised. Also an eight page tract—"Signs of the Times," being the substance of a sermon preached at the opening of the N. P. Synod of Ill., Aug. 28, 1861, by the Retiring Moderator. It is a lucid expose of the unbelief of the Church and the world, on the subject of our Lord's return, and clearly designates this time as the end of the age. Originating with Presbyterians it will naturally claim their attention, yet it will be profitable in all places.

Also a two page tract—"Bearing the Cross," by Geo. Storrs, urging the necessity of being crucified unto the world; that we are to suffer for Christ without impatience, and cultivate submission to the divine will in time of trial however fierce or long continued: good for all Christians to read.

To these we have just added a two page tract, "You want an endless life," made up largely of Scripture quotations bearing upon the evils of this day, which are so manifest in "wearing of gold and putting on of apparel," in indulging the lusts of the flesh, in unbelief of Jesus' coming, in professors of Christianity hating one another, etc.

Also a two page tract—"The Kingdom and Reign of Christ;" being the confession of many Baptists in 1660, which shows the faith of that people to have been what ours is to-day in the main on that subject; also, a quotation from that devoted man, Richard Baxter, showing that "Loving Christ's Appearing" is inseparably connected with true christian experience. This leaflet should be circulated among Baptists especially that they may see how far they have wandered from the old paths.

Such little tracts judiciously scattered upon steamboats, in the cars, and market places, may awaken an inquiry in many, and prompt a closer walk with God.

Let those who will take pleasure in scattering them among their neighbors and in their travels, send, and send again, stating how many of each, and we will gladly supply.

If there be any who had rather pay for them the price is 2,000 pages for $1, but one reason of making them so free is, that no means may be drawn from any other good work.

Remarks by the Editor.

We trust that all persons who wish for such works as Br. Wolcott has issued, will accept of his generous offer, and send to him for all they can make use of, immediately.

Our Children.

We copy the following article from "The Advance." Its general character is excellent and should be well considered by parents and all others. We do not indorse every expression in it, especially that which says, God "has promised unconditionally, present salvation to the children of faithful parents." David did not find it so in Absalom's case; and many others have had a bitter experience in this respect. It may be said, David was not a "faithful parent." We ask where the parent is to be found that has not at some time failed in duty? If the salvation of children depends on perfect faithfulness in parents, we fear none will be saved; yet much, very much depends on a faithful discharge of duty by parents, to those little ones whom God has committed to our care and training. Let the following remarks therefore be read and laid to heart.

HOW TO SAVE OUR CHILDREN.

It would be very irksome to say the same things over and over again, if we did not remember that we speak to a different audience; that of those who heard us last year, or the year before, many have gone or changed, and that new faces and new hearts are constantly rising up. And it is a good sign when any inquire how best to save the children, and when parents begin to be conscious of the perils and snares that beset their young feet. We are reminded of a conversation that took place many years ago.

Two mothers were talking, and one was expressing her anxiety for her boys, with apparent consciousness of their dangers, and an earnest wish to keep them from evil. And the other said, "Do you feel so? Why I havn't the least anxiety about mine, not the least." The friend who heard this, remarked long afterward that the children of the careful mother grew up sober and well-principled, while those whose mother was so careless went straight to destruction. And she added "I don't know but it is this very anxiety that saves them. The mother watches as well as prays." It is a good sign when men care. A father says, "What can I do for my boys?" and perhaps he begins to ask the question rather late.

The one point in the care of children, the bringing of them into the kingdom of Christ, is to begin early and keep them in the right way. Train them in the church, in the family, and take it for granted they will go on in the same way. It won't do to fancy they may go wrong, for the sake of turning around and going right. No! The covenant is with Christian parents and their children. And the simple word of God to us is, "only believe" "according to your faith." Those who believe their children can and will be converted early, and who are truly faithful to them, are not disappointed. When there is a failure it is not on the part of God. "He abideth faithful, and he cannot deny himself." He has promised unconditionally, present salvation to the children of faithful parents.

Then also, children will bear watching, not spying out, but good, honest care. Fathers are too easy, too careless. They need to have and keep the confidence of their children, so that they shall never lose the habit of "telling father" everything. Mischief begins very early. We little know what vile and subtile poisons are at work in our schools, in families, among children whose parents would be shocked did they know their vileness. It has been said and we think truly, that if a boy is not ruined before he is sixteen, he has a fair chance to escape. And yet many parents only begin to be anxious for a boy at that age. Too late! too late!

No. How shall we save our boys.

By faith in God. By good wholesome discipline, which shall teach them the habit of submission to rightful authority. By gaining and keeping their confidence. By affectionate watchfulness and care, and faithful warning where it is needed. We cannot expect too much. A man who had several sons once said, "Oh, where there are so many, you cannot expect all to turn out well.' And so he looked upon it as a matter of chance, as if he were calculating chances! and, as it were devoted some of them to destruction. And it happened just as he had expected. Some of them did go wrong.

These things are not matters of chance. God keeps his promises, and if we are faithful there can be no manner of doubt, all will be well. We have watched the course of families, and seen many things which were called "mysterious." How could A. go wrong with such a fond mother? Because his father was not a Christian man. How is it that B. went to ruin? His father was too much absorbed in his profession. He had no time for his boys. And why is C. so "hard," as they call it? His parents were too indulgent; he never learned obedience, his will was not subdued, and he learned to consult his own ease and pleasure. No self-denial and cross-bearing for him. That would be asking too much and so he follows his own way. And there was D., such a nice boy. We surely thought he would come out all right. Alas! his father—or, alas! mayhap his mother—was violent tempered and inconsistent. He prayed very well, but his practice did not agree thereto; no wonder his children doubted his sincerity.

And so the world goes. Yet God ever abideth faithful, and the truth remains. The covenant is with us and with our children—all our children. And the promise of God cannot fail. The consecration of ourselves, and then of all we have; first of all, our children, "That both thou and thy seed may live."

Faith.

A Visit to Campmeeting.

SOME OF MY EXPERIENCE LAST SEPTEMBER.

Myself with Mrs. H.. and baby Verbena, set out early, for we had two miles to walk before reaching the Railway Station. There we took the cars for Springfield, Mass., at which place we soon arrived. We inquired for a conveyance to the camp-ground. My mind at the same time was very active, watching every one I saw. It was something new for me, a Baptist, to be going to camp-meeting. We waited some time before our Van was filled; finally we started for the Hill, with a mixed company of brethren, sisters, dogs, and others, with clouds of dust on all sides. Presently one gentleman began to pipe away on his concertina. This was the signal for others to join in unharmonious strains, poodle howling most piteously at every fresh outburst. It was on the whole most amusing, though I would have liked a little different harmony, accustomed as I have been to good music from childhood. This was my first ride with an Advent company. On either side there were beautiful villas with tastefully arranged grounds, and such pretty flowers—I love flowers—the sight of which well repaid me for any other little annoyance I may have experienced. Then we got on to open plain ground, and the north wind blew cold enough for an overcoat; so we near the camp ground. Now we look this way, now that, to discover some familiar face; but no, all are strangers to us; still we expected soon to meet one dear family, so we alight, pass down the Avenue of pine trees, and see in large letters, "Our Lord Cometh!" I cannot describe my feelings as I caught the sentiment. I knew it had reference to the dear Saviour's return; our Prophet, Priest, and King, so dear to every child of God, no matter to what denomination they may belong. How could we pray any other prayer than "Thy Kingdom come." Surely then when it does come, it will have a King. Be it your and my happiness to be present at the coronation, and if needs be, to help sing a Kingly anthem.

So round the circle we wend our way, making inquiries for friends. Soon we see an old acquaintance; now we feel more at ease. So we ask to be shown the "Life Tent." Soon we behold a large commodious tabernacle, filled with eager listeners, engaged in either worship or telling their experience. So we wait awhile: take another walk round the circle, till we find ourselves once more at the tent door; and feel to breathe more freely. We see Br. Storrs, but he does not know our faces. We intended to have purchased some tracts, but could not, without a good deal of crowding, reach the stand.

We were made sad to hear disputes arising from brethren belonging to our dear Lord. Had it not been for this little unpleasantness, we should have been amply repaid for our visit. Your brother waiting, watching, and hoping for the King in his glory to banish all sorrow, and scatter all gloom.

Eben. Hester.

Note by the Editor.

Our Lord was sometimes grieved at the want of perfect agreement and harmony among the twelve. Too apt they are to be "disputing among themselves who shall be greatest?" It is a grievous evil, but we trust the time will soon come when we shall all "see eye to eye," and perfect harmony will come.

Br. Hester will please accept our thanks for the beautiful lot of note paper—the work of his own hands—which he sent us a few days since. May his and our garments be found as white and pure in the day of the Lord.

Wm. Forester, Dundee, N. Y., writes: I am firm in the faith in union with you in the main. I am poor in this world, but, praise the Lord, I am rich in faith and expect to be till the Master says, It is enough, enter into my kingdom, where everything that hath breath will praise the Lord. Glory be to God forever. I humbly ask the prayers of the people of God.

Letters and Extracts.

From Dr. John Billings.

Br. Storrs: I happened by accident to get hold of the Herald of Jan. 5, 1870, and by it learned that Wm. W. Doughty was inquiring for my post office. I will just say, it is New Rutland, Ill., La Salle Co. I have taken the paper ever since it came into existence till within about one year; since that time I have not had it only as I have been favored with it for the most part of the time through the kindness of a neighbor. I have always paid what I could for its support. But when I could not pay for it, I would not take it; for I thought there were others that had not had the advantages of learning the doctrines it taught as I had, and that if it was to be sent free to anybody, it had better be sent to those just inquiring after light; so I have not had it for a year past. Not because I do not prize the paper highly, but for the reasons above mentioned.

About one year ago last September, I lost my health in consequence of an injury from a fall; so I have been sick ever since. Not having been able to labor, my expenses have been so much that I am deprived of the means to help myself; and to-day have not a dollar on earth to pay for the paper. I prize it highly, and would be glad to have it if I could. If the Lord opens the way I shall send for it the first opportunity.

I don't want you or the brethren to think I have lost my interest in the precious truths it advocates. No; they are all that sustain me in my weary days and nights of sorrow and pain that I have had to pass through this year past. It seems hard for me to be thus housed up and deprived of even the paper in consequence of lack of means; but it is so. Our crops are cut off this year. It is hard times in the West. Money is scarce. If I could work, I could get enough; but I can't and my days are few; so I say, "Pity me O my friends for the hand of God is heavy upon me." My health is in some respects a little better, so I can preach a little. I preach in Rutland, one fourth of the time. Yours in hope.

New Rutland, Ill., Jan. 16, 1870.

We have had $2 on hand some time past to pay for Br. Billings' paper, but did not know his address, not having heard a word from him for a year past; and the letter just received is the first intimation we have had of his whereabouts and his afflictions. We immediately forwarded him the paper from the first of this month, and credited him the two dollars sent for it from a brother in Lynn, Mass.

May our Br. Billings have that grace and support which his circumstances call for; and underneath him may he find the everlasting arms; and may he find the truth of the Apostle's statement that, "all things work together for good to them who love God." Surely he will if he yields himself wholly up to Him who hath redeemed us by His blood, and now ever liveth to intercede for all those who come unto God by Him. He was "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief," and He can be "touched with a feeling of our infirmities." O, to have such a blessed sympathizer in all our trials here! Soon these trials will end in immortality, and eternal life.

From E. S. Sheridan.

Br. Geo. Storrs: A few days ago I received from an unknown friend, two numbers of your very interesting paper, and also one of your tracts in which is the sermon on the subject, "God is love;" which I read with great interest; particularly so, as I am unable to get out to hear any sermons, being one of the afflicted ones, and not able to get out on account of sickness.

The reason that I could not tell from whence the package came, was this; the post office stamp on the wrapper was not plain; so I could not tell what place, or who it was from. Consequently I have come to the conclusion to ask the privilege of returning thanks to the unknown friend through your columns.

And as I am a stranger to to the editor, (and as far as I know) to the readers of his very interesting paper, I will say by way of introduction, that although I am an old man and gray with years, yet it is but a few months since I came to the light, and felt that "God is love," and that he has manifested that love to fallen man in giving his only Son to die for sinners, and redeem them from eternal death, which is the penalty for sin. I can say with the man who had his eye-sight restored by our Saviour, that I cannot tell how I was made to see, "But whereas I was blind, now I see," and I feel to rejoice in the light.

I am not an old soldier, but a babe in Christ. I desire "the sincere milk of the word." Paul says to the Corinthians, "I have fed you with milk and not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able," etc.—1 Cor. iii. 2, 3. It appears at the time referred to, there were envyings and strife, and divisions, on account of questions among the brethren. Christ also tells the apostles "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." It does not appear so strange when we consider the above texts, that the brethren do not see alike on all points; but it does seem lamentable that a little difference of opinion should cause divisions in the body of Christ.

I must acknowledge that some of the sentiments contained in the Herald were averse to my preconceived opinions and that I felt at first to oppose them.

But I learned a lesson of humility from reading an article in your paper, from a worthy contributor, with this heading, "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."

I thought that I could discover one great cause of so many differences of opinion entertained by believers and teachers of the gospel of the kingdom. It is because mankind are too apt to allow themselves to be governed only by their own will, thereby causing envying, strife, etc. I have come to the conclusion to try to overcome my own will, and leave it all with the Father, and say submissively, "Thy will be done."

I believe in the unconscious state of the dead, a literal resurrection and the soon coming of the Saviour, to redeem the earth from the curse, and that the meek shall inherit the earth according to the promise. But I understand the Bible to teach that the wicked are to be raised as well as the righteous.

I would like to have your explanation of a few passages, that I will note below.

"For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth."—John v. 28, 29. "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts xxiv. 15. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. xv. 22.

"This is the first resurrection, blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power."—Rev. xx. 5, 6; xxi. 3. Here it represents the dead as standing before God, and receiving their sentence of a second death. Why receive this sentence, if the wicked dead have already received their punishment in the first death?

A seeker after truth; pray for me, that I fall not out by the way. Yours with love to all the brethren and sisters in Christ.

Three Rivers, Mich., Jan. 15, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

Our aged friend will find his questions answered in our pamphlet "Life from the Dead," and some other works which we send him. They have been so often replied to in the Herald of Life, that it seems unnecessary to repeat them at present. We trust he will find a satisfactory solution of all his inquiries in the works sent.

From Susan Stokes.

Br. Storrs: I send one dollar for a few copies of the "Constitution of Man." I want to hand them round in this dark and benighted village, to let them see that there is No Life out of Christ. He is the Life-giver. It is with a thankful heart to God that I let you know how good God has been to us. I feel to bless His holy name for the truth that shines from his holy word in these last days. I thank Him for the blessed truth of No Life out of Christ.

We have been Advent believers for eight years, but never saw the truth that "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." But, glory to His blessed name, all who get future life must have it through Him.

Last spring we prayed that the Lord would send some of his servants this way so that we could hear the truth of his blessed word. We are the only family that believe that man is mortal in this village. Thank the Lord he is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God; for while our poor feeble prayers were going up to him, He sent us answers of peace, and Br. Bragg came this way, so that we could hear that blessed truth of, No Life out of Christ. We did not see those truths all at first, when Br. Bragg preached them; but prayed the good Lord to lead us into his truth; for which I praise his most holy name. When we saw those glorious truths, we never saw the Bible look so blessed and so good before. We feel thankful that the good Lord sent Br. Bragg this way. He advised us to take the Herald of Life, and we love it for the blessed truths it contains. We do not know what we should do without it. We think it next to the Bible for we have to bear the hard saying of proud professors in these last days. There are two churches in this place, one the Calvinist and the other Freewill Baptist. They preach eternal torment and going to heaven at death. Do you think it is profitable for us to attend these churches?

A Calvinist sister told me a little while ago that she had not had a doubt nor a fear for three years but what she should be saved. She said that if she believed on Christ, it was all that was needed, and we had no need to search out to see whether man was immortal or not, for that never troubled her. I left her and felt grieved to think that she professed to love the Lord Jesus Christ, and does not love his appearing. But I pray that the Lord will lead her mind into the truth as it is in Jesus.

May the good Lord bless you, and spare your life and all that are connected with the Herald of Life office, so as we can hear the blessed truth every week. I mean by the grace of God and faith in his word so to live, that I can have eternal life when the Life-giver comes. We ask the prayers of the faithful children of God, that we may have faith, and endure unto the end. From your sister in the gospel hope of immortality when the Life-giver comes.

Little River, Me., Jan. 17, 1870.

From James L. Boyd.

Beloved Editor: I was reading this evening the Herald for this week (Jan. 19), and on the 3d page, saw the familiar name of Thomas K. Allen, formerly of Philadelphia. Br. Thomas's name and expression on all occasions, recalls to me the old times of '43, and '44, when we were brother pilgrims together in literally going "forth to meet the bridegroom." And it now affords me great pleasure to learn that Br. A.'s testimony—given in the Herald of Life more than a year ago—of his adhesion to Christ being the one only "Source" of life (future) to none but believers in him, has not wavered, but that like David the Psalmist, he "went into the sanctuary," and there saw their end—destruction, with no "let up," to die over again. Paul says, "It is appointed unto men once (not twice) to die." It is good, Br. Storrs, to read the testimonies of God's waiting ones, and we thus realize how much this truth refines them, and clarifies their vision, and gives both edge and force to the "words of truth" while at the same time charity and good will aboundeth to their friends and brethren who are more slowly learning "the way of life more perfectly."

I was also much interested in perusing the initial "Letter" from the pen of Br. Rondthaler, at whose home, then in Emaus, I had once, twenty years ago, the pleasure of enjoying his hospitality, at which time his attention had been arrested and exercised on the destruction of the wicked, as we then viewed it, and the unconscious state of the dead. It is both good and instructive, I repeat, to see the testimonies of these elder brethren. Welcome. In Christ's love.

From Liberty Wetherbee.

Br. Storrs, and the readers of our paper: As I was just reading a letter from that dear sister, Deborah C. Corwin, in Washington, D. C., my heart was made glad, and I asked myself, How came the truth of "No Life out of Christ" in that city, unless Brother Grant preached it there last year? I should love to drop into one of their little prayer meetings.

To-day I went to the Advent Ministerial Conference, which has been in session in this city. This morning a Br. preached a real Life discourse; but he did not know it. His text was, "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." He got the righteous all up at the last day, and went to 1 Cor. xv. for the "order," but left the poor wicked all behind; just what the word of God does.

In the afternoon I heard another Br. preach from Isai. xxviii. 15. He tried hard to prove the wicked had made an agreement with hell, the grave and death, literal, but that God was agoing to break up that bargain and bring all the wicked out of the state of death. But how, he failed to tell the people. O, when will men learn to preach the truth?

The debate that was to come off this month in this city, on the Life views, I fear has failed, our opposers thinking themselves not able to pay their part of the expenses. We took that objection out of the way by offering to pay the bills; but then they "Don't know about it;" and so they have backed out of it, just as we expected. Dr. Watson was chosen to preside as one of the committee. He is a firm believer in the truth—a straight forward brother in Christ.

Samuel White, Iowa, writes: I am an unworthy Life believer. Still I love the truth and its Author. I have been trying to follow its Lord 26 years; half that time with the gracious light your labors gave me; for which I am thankful. If I could get my thoughts and feelings on paper, how I would like to say a word of cheer to you and the family scattered abroad; but, thank our Father, I can speak of you to Him. My advice is, Go forward, all of you. A Spiritualist has been preaching and teaching here from house to house for over a year, defying the "armies" of orthodoxy: they shot at him running, but would not come to close action: so he proclaims himself, "master of the situation." One person told him, if he would challenge me, he would have a chance to get his views before the people, and might get a panacea that would cure his boasting. So he came to see me, and we agreed upon the following as a ground of debate—"Resolved, that the Bible sustains modern Spiritualism and its phenomena." I deny. He would not affirm Spiritualism a better Rule of Faith than the Bible, which he had offered to others. He virtually discards the Bible: that was what moved me. I will say, in all kindness, at all times, what I can in vindication of it; the Truth, the Life, and Chart. I have met three preachers in debate on the Life views; and one Campbellite preacher on immersion as essential. Eight years ago, I took Bible ground, that the "one baptism" is Spirit baptism. Glad was I when you came out on it; it is truth. O that men would learn what belongs to this age. I am 52 years old; always poor and worked hard; had much sickness.

Benjamin Mellor, Rockdale Mills, Pa., writes, I enter on my 71st year; and as an expression of my gratitude to my Almighty preserver, for health and the continued use of all my faculties of body and mind, and above all for His inestimable love in the gift of his Son, my Redeemer and Life-giver, whom I hope soon to see and be changed into the same image, I send ten dollars, the balance of my pledge for Vol. vii. of the Herald of Life.

S. D. Morse, Manchester, N. H., writes: I wish to request the preaching brethren, through the Herald of Life, to inquire of the Lord to know if it is not their duty to come here to preach the word to us. We are starving for the bread of life, and some are growing weak. We have not had any preaching for a long time. The Advent church here has refused to let any one preach in their Hall that will preach No life out of Christ. Now if any of God's ministers feel it a duty to come here, they can send me word, and I will see that they have a place to preach in. We shall be glad to see any of God's humble servants. Your brother, hoping for eternal life through Christ.

Edwin Lyman, Northfield, Mass,, writes: I cannot get along without the Herald of Life. I love its blessed truths. We have been covered up long enough with the rubbish of Romanism. I am glad the Lord has raised up some in these last days who have moral courage enough to stand up for the truth as it is revealed in the word of God. May He bless you with health and strength to send out the truth to a dying world, and be an instrument in his hand in bringing many to a saving knowledge of the truth. Your brother in Christ.

John Snyder, Avalanche, Wis., writes: Amid shifting scenes and dying friends and neighbors, we still keep on our way, contending for the faith delivered to the saints, and future life only through Jesus Christ our Lord, by being redeemed from death and ransomed from the grave, or a glorious change so as not to see death, at his appearing and kingdom. My prayer is, that our God and Father may bless his word and sanctify the people by his truth.

The Restitution.

Beyond these clouded skies, I see
A broad expanse of blue;
Where not a shadow ever flits,
The heavens created new.

The sun and moon with seven-fold light,
Illume those glowing skies:
O not on them can frail man gaze,
Without immortal eyes.

Beyond the thorny paths of earth,
A better land is seen,
Where flowers are fadeless, waters pure,
And fields are ever green.

No graves, no tears, no sickness there,
No sorrow, and no pain;
Earth has its Paradise restored,
And joy and gladness reign.

What glorious scenes by faith we see!
What music fills the air;
Lo! angel bands with flaming wings,
Beckon the weary there.

Prophets and patriarchs, saint and seer,
Have left their dusty bed,
And are alive forevermore
With Christ, their living head.

Ye weary ones, press on, press on;
The night is almost past,
Soon we shall reach our long-sought home
And be at rest at last.

Be not dismayed when foes assail,
Shrink not tho' friends forsake;
Our life is hid with Christ in God,
And that no foe can take.

The Qualifications of the Seed.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

WHAT are the qualifications of the seed of Abraham for the work assigned them in the gospel?

Christ and those that are Christ's, are the seed of Abraham. They will jointly inherit the position, and do the work of the seed. They will reign over all the nations of the earth, and thus, bless them. They will begin this reign when the Lord comes, and raises the righteous dead. Of this reign over the nations there will be no end. My object now, is to show the qualifications of the seed of Abraham, for this great work.

1. Of Christ's moral character.

He loved his Father so, that he always did those things that pleased him.—John viii. 29. He loved the work his Father gave him to do, so that he said, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.—John iv. 34. He loved the world more than he loved his life; for he gave his life for the life of the world.—John vi. 34. He was faithful in all his appointed work.—Heb. iii. 2. He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth.—1 Pet. ii. 22. His business was to bless. He went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.—Acts x. 38. He patiently endured the contradiction of sinners, and was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. He can therefore be touched with the feeling of our infirmity, and succor them that are tempted. He was true to his purpose, although it cost him his life. He blessed, though he was rejected and cursed. Thus he was qualified morally to be a complete Ruler of the world.

His love for the world, his experience in the flesh, and his faithful obedience to God under all its trials, give him all the sympathies in behalf of the true interests of the world, which his position in the kingdom seem to demand. But this fitness of moral character alone, could not qualify him for the work before him as the Seed of Abraham. He was subject to death, He died. The whole object of his mission seemed to be defeated. His physical nature was not adapted to his future work. It must be changed.

2. Of his physical character.

Christ was made the heavenly when he was raised from the dead. He was declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead.—Rom. i. 4. Of himself he said, I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore.—Rev. i. 18. He now hath life in himself.—John v. 26. He was raised up, no more to return to corruption.—Acts xiii. 35. He now ever liveth. He lives by the power of an endless life.—Heb. vii. 16. He is now qualified physically, to do all the work assigned to him in the gospel, and to do it for ever.

3. He was appointed to this work of the Father.

He was to possess the gate of his enemies, and sit upon the throne of his father David. The government was to be upon his shoulder. He was appointed unto this kingdom by his Father. All judgment was committed unto him, and authority to execute judgment and justice in the earth. All power in heaven and earth was given unto him, for the purposes set forth in the gospel of the kingdom. Thus Christ will be thoroughly qualified, morally, physically, and by the appointment of the Father to enter upon his work.

THOSE THAT ARE CHRIST'S.

They were enemies in their minds by wicked works, but now they are reconciled to God.—Col. i. 21. They were children of wrath even as others.—Eph. ii. 3. But they are now the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ.—Gal. iii. 26. They were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel.—Eph. ii. 12. But they are now no longer strangers and foreigners, but citizens with the household of faith.

They have believed the gospel. They have repented of their sins. They have confessed their sins to Him who is just and faithful to forgive them their sins, and to cleanse them from all unrighteousness. They have become members of Christ's body, by being baptised into his name. They love Christ, and the cause that he represents, more than they love father or mother, wife or children, houses or lands, or their own lives. They have denied themselves of ungodliness and worldly lusts, and have lived soberly and righteously and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope. They have made God's purpose their purpose, and God's plan their plan. They have loved the things that God loves, and they hate the things that God hates. They have lived for God, and have made their plans subservient to such a life. They have been faithful in a little, and have been blessings wherever they have lived. They have borne the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance. They have endured trials and temptations, and have overcome that wicked one. They have all purified themselves, even as Christ is pure. In short, they have received the gospel of the kingdom in good and honest hearts, and have understood it, and have obeyed it, and brought forth fruit with patience; some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold.

Such is the character of those who are Christ's. They will be complete in him, who is the head of all principality and power.—Col. ii. 9. Thus will they be qualified morally to do the work of the seed. But most of them have fallen asleep in Christ. They have died without being able to accomplish the work of the seed of Abraham.

They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.—Luke xx. 35, 36.

And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day.—John vi. 40. Their vile bodies will be raised from the grave, and be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body.—Phil. iii. 21. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the living righteous) shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.—1 Cor. xv. 52, 53.

They are sown in corruption, they will be raised in incorruption. They are sown in dishonor, they will be raised in glory; they are sown in weakness, they will be raised in power; they are sown a natural body, they will be raised a spiritual body. The first man was of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As was the earthy such also will be the earthy, and, as is the heavenly, such also will the heavenly be. And as we (christians) have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

From these testimonies we learn that those that are Christ's, will be qualified to be joined with Christ in his work of blessing; they will be raised from the dead, and made the heavenly, and be equal to the angels, so that they can die no more. Their vile bodies will be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. They will be powerful, incorruptible, immortal, and spiritual beings; capable of doing anything that may be required of the Seed of Abraham. They will be completely fitted physically to be the members of the body of Christ in his kingdom.

3. Their appointment.

As the Father appointed unto the Son a kingdom, so Christ will appoint unto them a kingdom. He assured them that it was his Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom. The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess it for ever and ever. Judgment will be given to the saints of the Most High, and the time will come that they shall possess the kingdom. The judgment shall sit, and the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High.—Dan. vii. 18, 22, 27. The nobleman who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return, when he was returned having received the kingdom, called his servants to whom he had given the money; and to one he said, have authority over ten cities; and to another, have authority over five cities, etc.—Luke xix. 12–. Christ said, To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne; and to him I will give power over the nations.—Rev. iii. 21–ii. 26. Those who have been redeemed to God, by the blood of Christ out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, will be made kings and priests unto God, and they shall reign on the earth.—Rev. v. 9, 10,

These scriptures show that all the saints will be appointed to reign jointly with Christ in his kingdom. Thus, "those that are Christ's will be completely qualified to bless the world, in connection with Christ their living head; Christ as the head, and Christians as the members of his body, constitute the Seed of Abraham, who are to bless all the nations of the earth by ruling over them.

Christ has already been raised from the dead, to die no more. He is now the first-fruits of them that sleep in him. He is the head of the seed, or body; the first-born from the dead. As Christ was raised from the dead, so the body of the seed, or the members of his body, must be raised from the dead. When the dead in Christ shall be made alive at his coming, then the Seed of Abraham will be perfected. All that has been done up to this point, has been only preparatory. Beyond this point, the seed are in readiness to commence and prosecute the great work of blessing the nations, as set forth in the gospel preached to Abraham.

In the gospel of the kingdom, the end to be reached is, to bless all the nations of the earth to such an extent, that the kingdom will be put in complete order, so that there shall be no more curse in it.

The instrumentality by which to accomplish this end, is the Seed of Abraham.

In this article, we have endeavored to show the qualification of the seed for such a work.

Have we succeeded? Are the means adapted to the end? Are the qualifications of the Seed sufficient for such a work? Are they well enough disposed toward this object? Is their heart sufficiently in this work? Will their physical nature sustain them in so great an undertaking? Will they have the requisite authority and power to enforce obedience, and secure the final results? We answer: The qualifications are ample, they are full, they are complete.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Dec., 1869.

Geology.

EDITOR OF HERALD: I clipped the following article from the "Family Christian Almanac" for 1870. I thought it might be interesting as well as profitable to some of your readers. It certainly shows the uncertainty of trusting to modern discoveries for knowledge concerning the creation. The teachings of geology especially, should be cautiously received, when we consider that it is the infidel's stronghold, and the science has been pursued and developed to a great extent, in the interest, and by a spirit of infidelity.

WM. N. GLENN.

STOCKTON, Cal., Dec. 1869.

ERRORS OF GEOLOGISTS.—The researches of modern science among the rocky strata of the earth's surface have yielded many seeming facts which infidels have seized with avidity, as weapons against revealed religion. By an adroit admixture of facts with fictions and ingenious speculations, they bring science into apparent conflict with the Bible, and thus strive to overthrow its divine authority. The Bible account of creation, and the unity and origin of the human race—not tens of thousands of years ago—are favorite points of attack; and many even of the friends of the Bible have been somewhat hasty in accepting these scientific novelties, and trying to explain the Bible in harmony with them. The believer's true course is, to rest with unswerving trust on God's word, assured that his works do not contradict it, but that both when rightly understood confirm each other. But while we have no fear of the results of wisely directed scientific inquiry, it is well to expose the folly of those who misinterpret the works of God in their haste to make his word untrue.

The modern theory that the universe at first consisted of matter in a gaseous or nebular state uniformly and everywhere diffused, rests mainly on mere hypothesis, and has been refuted by Sir John Herschel and others. The leading geologists do not agree in their teachings as to the order and periods of events in the earth's construction, nor as to its present state. Their ideas seem as nebulous as the primeval chaos. Some fill our globe with melted matter in furious combustion, but do not agree as to the rate of increase of the heat as we penetrate the earth, nor as to the thickness of its crust. Others fill it with a fearfully compressed gas, which neither bursts the world into fragments, nor escapes at the first volcano, as by all known laws it ought to do.

Among the most important facts relied on by modern-world-builders is the igneus origin of granite, which has been generally believed to be the oldest formation of rocks, as it is lowest, and to have crystalized in its present form from a melted state. But it is now discovered that granite is not always the oldest rock; that it sometimes contains graphite, magnetic iron, and even fossils, which could not be if it had been in a state of fusion by intense heat. It is proved, moreover, in the opinion of many eminent geologists, that all true granite was elaborated with water under great pressure and at a temperature far below melting heat.

Dr. Robert Patterson who has done good service in showing the uncertainties of science, and from whom we have borrowed the facts above stated, has also gathered many interesting facts bearing on the alleged high antiquity of man and of the earth. He says, "It is quite remarkable that our very surface geology should furnish us with numerous recent illustrations of the enormous blunders into which geologists stumble, the moment they leave the realms of fancy and attach themselves to calculable facts. They seem to be like men who dream; or as if their imaginations have become so accustomed to ages and millenniums that they are incapable of sober calculations of years and days. When they venture on such calculations for the future, they are almost invariably disappointed. For instance, when in 1820 the Russian philosopher, Dr. Hamel, and his party were swept along the Grand Plateau of Mont Blanc by an avalanche of snow, carrying three of his guides into a crevasse, where they perished, he alluded to the possibility of the reappearance of their remains by the slow action of the glacier after an interval of some thousands of years. In August, 1861, they were discovered and recognized upon the surface of the glacier. From the correctness of this calculation of a future date, we may infer the accuracy of geological chronology of the unknown past."

"The supposed necessity that vegetable should precede animal life, which gave us such wonderful millions of ages of still life on our globe while the lichen was forming a soil on the granite, etc., is dismissed by Humboldt as a pure fiction."

"Peat bogs in which human remains have been found at the depth of twelve feet, whence an immense antiquity was inferred, have been found to grow a foot in five years. In thirty-six hours a green tree is converted into a fossil in California, and into lignite in a week; while before your eyes you behold the hardest porphyry converted into potter's clay, and the hardest granite so softened by the acidulated atmosphere, that you can crush it with your hand, or cut it with a knife as easily as unbaked bread. I have seen this metamorphic action affecting all the strata of the Napa Valley. Vegetation runs riot amid this excess of carbonic acid. This discovery at once accelerates the formation of the carboniferous plants many millenniums; besides showing the folly of Lyell's calculations of the slow erasion of lavas by streams in Auvergne.

"On the coast of England flints have been found, the stony covering of which has so completely the aspect of ancient rock as to warrant the conclusion that they were the growth of countless ages; but on removing the flinty matrix, you find a coin bearing the head of an Edward, a James, or even a George; or a bolt or an anchor bearing the mark of some existing firm. We have had men counting the successive thin layers of delta and sedimentary deposits as indications of so many floods; but we know now that these give no such traces, as a mass of fine clay deposited in quiet water, will stratify in a few hours, into dozens of layers."

"The most enormous blunders have been made by geologists in calculations of the time requisite for the excavation of river channels by the existing streams, and wonderful computations of the antiquity of human remains found in their banks have been based on these calculations. But the best modern geologists now prove that these river beds were not excavated by the existing rivers, and some of them not by rivers at all, but that they are earthquake chasms."

"Lyell, and a score of other savans, gravely cite the researches of Herner, who bored down 70 feet into the soil of Egypt for bits of brick and pottery, and calculated that the Nile had been depositing that seventy feet of mud over them during the last 30,000 years. The matter was solemnly reported to the British Association and the French institute, and not one of these learned men had common sense enough to put the question in its proper form, viz: How long will a brickbat require to sink seventy feet into a mud bank? The whole valley of the Nile is only a vast mud bank every year during the inundation; and the brickbats probably reached their bed in one season. At any rate, bricks of the reign of Mohammed Ali, have been found deeper than Herner's."

If our scientific world-makers are so credulous and make such egregious blunders in terrestrial things, how can we respect their theories as to heavenly things?

Excitement and Short Life.

THE deadliest foe to man's longevity is an unnatural and unreasonable excitement. Every man is born with a certain stock of vitality which cannot be increased, but which may be husbanded or expended as rapidly as he deems best. Within certain limits he has a choice, to live fast or slow, to live abstemiously or intensely, to draw his little amount of life over a single space, or condense it into a narrow one; but when his stock is exhausted, he has no more. He who lives abstemiously, who avoids all stimulant, takes light exercise, never overtasks himself, feeds his mind and heart on no exciting material, has no debilitating pleasure, lets nothing ruffle his temper, keeps his "account with God and man squared up," is sure barring accidents, to spin out his life to the longest limit which it is possible to attain; while he who lives intensely, who feeds on high-seasoned food, whether material or mental, fatigues his body or brain by hard labor, exposes himself to inflammatory disease, seeks continual excitement, gives loose reign to his passion, frets at every trouble, and enjoys little repose, is burning the candle at both ends and is sure to shorten his days.

Children's Department.

The Little Wanderer.

"WHAT are you doing here you little vagabond? Begone quickly, and never let me catch you here again, unless you want to be sent to prison with your miserable father," said a tall well-dressed boy to a ragged, hungry-looking urchin, who, during a heavy shower, had taken refuge in his father's barn. "Hurry out, or I will help you," he continued; and, suiting action to word, he took hold of the trembling child, and rudely pushed him out of the door.

"Well Cousin Fred, if that's the way you practice what you preach, I think you had better write another essay on the 'Pleasure of Doing Good,'" said a handsome, roguish-looking girl about his own age, who, unobserved by him, had entered the barn and witnessed his rude behavior to the child. "I am thinking, Sir Frederick, that you'll not entertain many angels unawares, if that's the way you treat strangers. But since you refuse to act the part of the good Samaritan, I will leave you to your own reflections, and if possible, do something myself to comfort the child."

"Cousin Grace," replied Fred, "I would advise you to have nothing to do with that boy; he is utterly unworthy of your sympathy. I know all about his whole family. It was his father who was sent to prison last week for stealing."

"Well, must the poor child's teeth be set on edge because his father has eaten sour grapes?" replied his cousin. "I'm ashamed of you, Fred. I really thought you had more humanity, if not Christianity, about you than that."

So saying, she left the place and hastened after the poor child, who was sitting under a tree at a little distance weeping bitterly.

"What's the matter little boy—did he hurt you?" inquired Grace, as she approached the spot. "Come, tell me what troubles you, and perhaps I can help you. Did you ever hear about Jesus who loves little children, and invites them to come to him?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied the boy, smiling through his tears. "Jesus is my only friend; I have no one to love me but him. But I am very hungry and tired, and I was beginning to think that Jesus had left me too, for I have had nothing to eat to-day, and he has promised me my daily bread."

"Poor child!" said Grace, with tears in her own eyes. "Your faith has been severely tried, but Jesus has sent me to relieve you. Come right into the house, and I will give you a nice bowl of bread and milk."

The boy arose, and tremblingly followed Grace to the kitchen, where his wants for that time were bountifully supplied. When he had finished his meal Grace asked him where he was going, and whether it was his father that was sent to prison the week before.

"No, ma'am," replied the boy; "it was the man I lived with. My own papa is dead; he was killed by the Sepoy soldiers in India, at the time of the great rebellion. I don't know whether my mamma is dead or not, for they took me away from her on that dreadful day, and I have never seen her since."

"What dreadful day, little boy?" asked Grace much excited. "Tell me what you mean."

"I mean the time of the rebellion. I was only a little boy then, but I remember all about it. How anxious papa looked when he came home one night, and said to mamma that he feared that there was a terrible time brewing among the native soldiers. And the next morning he kissed mamma and my sister, and his little Bertie, as he called me, and said he might never see us again. Oh! how mamma cried and begged him not to go; but he said that he must stay with his regiment. So he bid us all good-by, and went away, and we never saw him again; for in a little while a gentleman called, and told mamma that the soldiers had killed all their officers, and my papa among the rest; and that she must hurry and go away up the mountain, for the soldiers were coming to burn our house down, and perhaps kill us. So mamma packed up some clothes, and took all her rupees and sewed them up in a sack she wore; but just as we were getting into a palanquin, we heard a great noise, and a band of native soldiers came rushing up to us and dragged me out. Mamma screamed and caught hold of me, but a soldier raised his sword, and told her he would kill me on the spot if she didn't let go of me. Then he ordered the Coolies to move on with the palanquin, and I never saw poor mamma or my sister again. They said they were going to kill me, but my old nurse got me away from them and hid me, and kept me for a long time. Then she took me to a gentleman who said he was going to America and knew mamma's friends; and said if he could find them, he would take me to them, but if not he would put me in the orphan asylum, where I would be taught to read and write. And so he did; and I liked it there, although it was not near so nice as it was in my papa's house in India. I had only learned to read a little, when the man who has been sent to prison came and took me out, and tried to make me steal, and used to beat me because I would not; but I have no home now."

"What did you say your name was, little boy?" eagerly inquired Grace; "for I believe that you are my own little brother."

"Bertie, or Herbert Mitchell; but the man I lived with called me Tom."

At the sound of the name, Grace jumped up and threw her arms around the boy, exclaiming:

"Bertie, Bertie! my long-lost, my darling brother! Do you know me Bertie? Come right up stairs to mother; she has grieved herself almost to death for her lost Bertie; Mother, mother!" she cried, as she sprang up the stairs, "do come here, for our lost Bertie has come back to us."

Her mother, scarcely comprehending what she said, rushed to the door.

"What did you say my daughter?" she asked. But as her eyes fell on the child Grace held by the hand, she shrieked "Bertie!" and fell fainting to the floor.

The proper restoratives being applied, she soon recovered her consciousness, and great was her joy to behold once more her long-lost boy, for such Bertie proved to be. The poor child had suffered much since he was so rudely separated from his mother six years before, but not more than his mother, who had spent years of fruitless search for him, and had begun to yield all hope of seeing him again, and had now come to reside with her sister. But now the long years of trial were past, and their Heavenly Father, who had been so faithfully watching over both, had brought them together again. And Bertie never had reason again, to say he had no home; and nowhere was there to be found a happier family than gathered that night around the family altar.

But Fred confessed that he was never more thoroughly ashamed of himself in all his life before, and tried in every way to atone for his unkindness to the little angel, as Grace laughingly called Bertie, that she entertained unawares.—The Methodist.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

INTERESTING LETTERS.—No. 3.

FROM AMBROSE RONDTHALER.

DEAR BR. P.: "Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord," be with you, and all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE. With this apostolic salutation I begin my third letter to you. May these heart-cheering words be realized by all! Amen.

In this communication you will permit me to confine myself chiefly to the views of a certain German writer. From him and others we learn, that, in Germany too, the minds of men are in motion as regards Life Views. We rejoice to know that such is the case. Joyfully we bid them God-speed.

This German writer is Hermann Plitt, with whose writings you are somewhat acquainted. For the sake of others, however, I would simply say, that this author is the principal Professor of Theology in the Moravian Theological Seminary at Guaderfeld, Germany. In 1863 and 1864 he published a work of two volumes, each containing upward of 400 closely printed pages. This learned work earned for him the title of D. D. As regards myself, and this you well know, I attach but little if any, importance to such titles; and I think that they are rather distasteful to my brother P. Still, it is interesting to know that the author of this work is esteemed in Germany, in which country it is rather more difficult to receive such honorary marks of literary distinction than in our own native land. In justice to the Moravian Church, I would state, that he says in the preface to his first volume, that his work is exclusively the expression of the individual Christian theological conviction of the author. Consequently, none else is responsible for his views. The title of this work is "Evangelische Glaubenslehre," "Evangelical Doctrine of Faith." This book contains many truths; however, to all of the writer's views I cannot subscribe. He believes, among the rest, in the conscious state of the dead, and in doctrines concomitant with this faith. But, apart from what I look upon as erroneous opinions, he has more than tolerably sound views with regard to immortality, and also with respect to the annihilation of the wicked. I have purposely modified the adjective sound, by writing, more than tolerably sound views. You will see, my brother, after you have read my translation, where this author differs from us. I intended to embody his views on the subjects of immortality, and the annihilation of the wicked, in this communication; but, finding that my letter would become entirely too long for the HERALD OF LIFE, in whose columns my letters are kindly received, I concluded to write to you again. A few words more. I promise to give you no garbled extracts. I shall try to be honest in my translation. I know that you are aware how easy it is for a German writer to frame another word from a simple one. This renders it somewhat difficult to translate some sentences into English without paraphrasing. I wish to give not only the sense, but, as much as possible, the very words. This will account for Germanisms in the translation.

Toward the close of the 74th section, which is entitled "Continuance after Death," he says, "Man, as a creature owing his being to God his Maker and Preserver alone, does not bear in himself the metaphysical necessity of an endless continuance; he has that duration only and in as far as God gives it to him. The absolute impossibility of an annihilation of a created being is not to be proved, just because that impossibility actually does not exist. In consonance with the biblical ideas of creation, such a possibility is much rather positively given. True it is, that God will most assuredly never deprive of existence a being whom He, at the first, created in His likeness, and destined for an eternal union with Him after that being has actually become, through faith in Christ, a partaker of that union. But very different is the case of a personal being that has, through absolute sin, rendered the attainment of his eternal destiny impossible. Then the fact, that that being is God's creature, can, to say the least, not exclude the possibility of the deprivation of his existence by the self-same Power that gave it. Else the creature would not be that, which the Bible understands under this term, but an emanation from God Himself; but, then, that being could never have fallen from God, least of all could he fall into the absolute sin of a personal confirmed state of obduracy." And then he says, "The question, whether such an annihilation of an incurably fallen being will actually take place or not, will occupy our attention in a future section." In the following paragraphs he speaks of man's state immediately after death—of the Resurrection and of Judgment—of the Return of Christ; and then, in the 80th and last section of the End of this World and the Hope of the New. In the introduction of this last section he says—"The so-called (I omit the Greek words), Restoration of all, or Universal Salvation, might be regarded as a secretly concealed possibility, and, as such, the subject of Christian hope, but it has not the Bible for it. The Scriptures are not for it, neither in their literal import nor in their connected doctrines. On the contrary, the Bible leaves room for the thought of the annihilation of the damned." From this section, D. V., I shall, in my next, give you his views with regard to this great and momentous matter. You can, of course, see the drift of his views on this subject. Here, my brother, I will leave you for the present, closing with the words of St. Paul, "Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ with sincerity. Amen."

THE DESTINY OF THE UNGODLY.—No. 2.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

HAVING already shown several prominent solutions of the question of the destiny of the ungodly, and admitting the Holy Scriptures to be our only source of information, we may properly proceed with the examination of our subject; therefore we will consider, in the first place,

THE NATURE AND DESTINY OF ADAM.

To make our investigation as brief as may be, we cannot enter into all the details which this subject might include. To understand the nature of Adam we are also made acquainted with the nature of the whole human race. He is the parent of us all. We sprang from him, and, being his posterity, must partake of his nature.

1. The creation of man.—The popular assumption is that Adam was created an immortal being, and therefore the whole human race are immortal; and thus "immortal soul," "never-dying spirit," and many other unscriptural phrases, are the common utterances of christendom. Now, we affirm that this assumption is not sustained by a particle of light given by inspiration, but on the contrary we can trace its rise three thousand years after the creation, amid the darkness of heathen idolatry.

Mr. Constable, in his admirable (English) work on the origin of the "Immortality of the Soul," says: "Before the preaching of the gospel, the highest order of heathen intellect had formed for its satisfaction a theory of the immortality of the soul. While the generality of the heathen philosophers taught that death was for all men eternal sleep, there were 'high spirits of old' that strained their eyes to see, beyond the clouds of time, the dawning of immortality. Unable, as we are able to connect it with God as its source, and with his promise as our assurance, they formed an idea of an immortality, self-existing in the soul itself. Plato, in his Phaedo, has given us the marvellous reading of Socrates, and Cicero has exhibited the argument in his Tusculan Questions. According to it, the soul is possessed of an inherent immortality. It is of necessity eternal. It could have no end; no death. What was true of one soul was true of all souls alike, whether good or bad. They must exist somewhere, be it in Tartarus or Cocytus, in Pyriphlegethon, or the happy abodes of the purified. This sublime philosophical idea passed readily and early into the theology of the Christian church. We find it running throughout the reasonings of Tertullian and Augustine. Heedless of Paul's warning voice against philosophy, they became the feeble apes of Plato. They applied their theology, as he did his philosophy, to all souls alike—to those of reprobate as well as of the redeemed. They taught that the life of the former must be eternal as that of the latter. . . . The foundation of this theory was a mere fancy: that which gave continuity to its parts, but a rope of sand. The essential immortality of the soul was, as Pliny calls it, a figment. Its inherent fallacy will be to us apparent from the fact that it involved the past eternity of the soul as much as a future. Cicero gives it expression when he says of the soul, 'It can neither be born, nor can it die.' Some of the early fathers, shunning the first part of the proposition, eagerly adopted the second. They were just as wrong, only less consistent than the heathen thinkers. Others, judging more truly, rejected all idea of any essential immortality of the soul."

This testimony, coming from a great English mind, is significant. The result of the adoption of the heathen doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul into the church has been most disastrous. Mr. Minton well says: "To a heathen it was little matter whether he believed in the immortality of the soul, or not. Christianity was poisoned by the infusion."

Mr. Watson, the eminent Methodist writer, says: "Some suppose that consciousness is an essential attribute of spirit, and the soul is naturally immortal; the former of which cannot be proved, while the latter is contradicted by the Bible, which makes our immortality a gift dependent on the will of the giver." Again, in his Memoirs, he says: "I have read volumes on the nature of the soul; but I have no scruple in saying, I know nothing about it."

We will invite the reader's attention to one more significant extract. Timothy Dwight, D.D. LL.D., speaking of the "natural immortality of the soul," says: "Whatever has been created can most certainly be annihilated by the power which created it. The continuance of the soul must, therefore, depend absolutely upon the will of God. But that can never be known by man unless he pleases to disclose it. Without revelation, therefore, the immortality of the soul must be entirely uncertain."

Turning from these significant remarks concerning the natural immortality of man, we will examine the Bible account of his creation.

In the graphic account of the creation in the first chapter of Genesis, we find the determination of Jehovah recorded, to make man. "And God said, let us make man in our image, after our own likeness."—Gen. i. 26. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. ii. 7. In this inspired account of man's creation, we have the whole truth regarding his nature; and it does not contain the slightest intimation of an "immortal soul," or "never-dying spirit;" but as positive proof against such an assumption we find Adam driven from the garden of Eden, after his transgression, "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever."—Gen. iii. 22–24.

Some have inferred the immortality of man from the fact of his creation in the divine image; but, as Mr. Hudson truly remarks, in his learned work, "Debt and Grace:" "The creation in the divine likeness no more proves man's absolute immortality, than it proves his eternal pre-existence, his omniscence, or his possession of any other divine attribute." Man was not made immortal, but was made for immortality. "He is to be allied to heaven as no other creature on earth is. He is to be related to the Eternal Being himself. This relation, however, is to be, not in matter but in form; not in essence, but in semblance. . . . . 'Image' is a word taken from sensible things, and denotes likeness in outward form."—(Murphy on Gen. i. 27.)

Again, Mr. Hudson says: "The phrase 'a living soul' is put in express contrast with a 'quickening (life-giving) spirit,' in 1 Cor. xv. 45. The same Hebrew phrase also in Gen. i. 20, 30, and a still stronger phrase in Gen. vii. 22, is applied to brute animals. It manifestly denotes simply a 'living creature.'"

Thomas Conant, the translator of the American Bible Union, and eminent as a scholar, says, in his comment on Gen. ii. 7, "Here seems to be no more implied than is recognized in Isai. ii. 22, where it is said, with probable reference to this passage, 'Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils;' only breath, so frail a principle of life, and so easily extinguished. The Hebrew word (nephesh) here rendered soul, includes all beings that have animal life; and hence it is applied to animals of the sea and land, in chap. i. 20, 21, 24, 30. The English word soul (like the German seele), originally had this extent of meaning, as in verses 20 and 30, in the margin of the common English version. But as the word is now used, it would misrepresent the meaning in those passages."

Dr. Kitto, in his Encyclopaedia of Biblical Literature, renders Gen. ii. 7, thus: "And Jehovah God formed the man (Heb. "the Adam") dust from the ground, and blew into his nostrils the breath of life; and the man became A LIVING ANIMAL." He remarks: "We should be acting unfaithfully, if we were to affirm (that) an immortal spirit (is) contained or implied in this passage."

It seems strange if Adam possessed an immortal entity (which we are told by popular theology survives the body), that no intimation should be given of such a fact in the account of his creation—the very place where we should expect to have it clearly stated. But we believe we have demonstrated the truth, too plainly to be controverted, that Adam was created simply a mortal being, which lived by breathing—created for an immortal existence, but failed to obtain it through disobedience; therefore, he could transmit nothing but a mortal nature to his posterity, and thus in a perishing condition we become the subjects of grace. "We are saved by grace."

P. S.—In our next article we shall examine the trial and fate of Adam.

BLESS the Lord, O my soul! and all that is within me bless his holy name! Glory be to God!

BURNING OF THE WORLD.

BY HON. D. H. CHASE.

LATE numbers of the HERALD indicate an undesirable but honest difference of opinion upon the interesting and important revelations regarding the burning of the world. Dr. Cumming wishes Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Nazareth, Gethsemane and Calvary to be preserved for their historic associations. Archbishop Whately, a noble pioneer in the "Life views," says there is no reason to doubt the literal consuming of the earth by fire. See Lect. ix., p. 254, London edition. But we have better witness than either, even the sure word of prophecy.

Three opinions are held—

1. The fire is not real, but symbolic.

2. It is real, but is not universal, nor intense enough to change the geographic surface.

3. It is real, universal, will change the entire surface, but not annihilate the material of the globe.

We will calmly consider these views. 1. Is fire a symbol or type of something else? An answer can better be given when we know what work the agent symbolized has to accomplish. We all agree that this work is the purifying of the world. Sinners and their works are to be destroyed, and both these are material. They contain no immaterial substance that fire cannot touch.

The antediluvian world was polluted indeed. "All flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." "The wickedness of man was great." The earth was cleansed so thoroughly that modern researches fail to identify the relics of that race or of their works. Did water thus cleanse, or was it the symbol of some other agent? "The windows of heaven were opened, the fountains of the great deep were broken up." The cleansing was effected by real water. Noah was then assured that this agent would not be used again for a like purpose. It answered for purifying the world in view of the further probation and sinfulness of the race, but when probation and sin must end forever, and the world become the dwelling-place of righteousness, a more thorough, searching, purifying agent is predicted and provided; even fire.

The world was repeopled by the eight. New revelations, greater light, more abounding grace are lavished. Christ comes from heaven and taught as never man taught. He was crucified, arose from death, commissioned and inspired his apostles and returned to heaven. The gospel is preached, a church gathered, the nucleus of a kingdom prepared. Despite every effort the race waxes worse and worse, the man of sin is revealed; abounding iniquity has brought another crisis; divine interposition is needful.

Christ returns from heaven, attended by the holy angels; he raises the sleeping saints, changes to immortality the living saints, punishes his enemies and takes his place on the "Throne of David" as King of kings and Lord of lords. Through his saints he rules over "the left of the nations." His glorious reign fills the millennial era, extending "from the river to the ends of the earth;" "from sea to sea." The nation that dares rebel, has no rain, and perishes. If Egypt rebel, that has no rain, it shall be destroyed by pestilence. The true subjects of His kingdom will increase beyond all precedent. The righteous, the meek, the peacemakers will inherit the earth.

But the millennial age is closing; satan is loosed, rebellion is rampant. The rebels grow up on the breadth of the earth, vastly outnumbering the saints, whose camp they "encompass round about." The rebels are destroyed by fire from God out of heaven.

Another throne now appears,

"The Great White Throne;" while Christ's Throne, the "Throne of David," disappears. Christ "delivers up the kingdom to God, even the Father and is himself subject unto Him, that God may be all in all."

The final judgment of the world has come. The earth and air ("heaven") have been polluted in every part. Even the floor of the ocean, miles deep beneath the blue surface is one vast cemetery. The deep mines and caves hold the dead. What powerful agent shall reach and purify? This problem is solved, an example has been wrought. "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." This fire was real and its work so thorough that the people, their cities and the very plain, have disappeared, leaving no vestige. Does it seem fair to consider Peter as mingling literal with figurative language, when he says, "the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished, but the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store reserved unto fire?" Or was Christ's language half literal and half figurative when he spoke the language of the Judge, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," etc., and "depart ye cursed into everlasting fire?" If one part be literal, why not the other?

Destructionists constantly teach that the wicked are to be "burned up, root and branch," reduced to "ashes." They are the "chaff," the "tares," the "dry branches," the "carcasses" to be consumed in Gehenna. It really seems as though literal fire were the appointed agent, and its work to be so thorough as to change the face of the world. Listen now to the "Word." "And I saw a GREAT WHITE THRONE, and Him that sat upon it, from whose face heaven and earth fled away, and there was no place found for them." "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up." "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." The subjects of "Death and Hades were cast into the Lake of Fire." "Seeing, then, that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness."

The new heavens and earth. Old things have passed away, all things have become new. "Behold I make all things new." "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness." "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away; and there was no more sea." The identity of the old places, sacred and profaned, seems lost forever.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Jan. 24, 1870.

HOW "THEY WRAP IT UP."

ABOUT fourteen years ago, I preached the first gospel sermon ever preached in South Livermore. Soon after, my son and a few others hired preaching there part of the time, and soon a respectable society grew up into the faith once delivered to the saints. But unfortunately for them, blind leaders of the blind came among them, and they have fallen into the ditch.

I listened to one of their preachers who took for his text, 1 Cor. xv. 22, 23. His object was to prove a resurrection for all men. He said the all in Adam were all mankind; and that they all died; and the same all were in Christ, and would be made alive by a resurrection of the dead. He made but very little use of the 23d verse of his text, "But every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." I followed him and said first, that all the requirements of God, and all his dealings with men, were intended for the good of the creature man; to which he gave his hearty, Amen; before he knew which side I was coming out on. Then said I, what good will it do the wicked to kill them twice? He was afterward very careful how he said Amen, to anything I said. I went on to show that if the all in Adam were the whole human family, and the same all were in Christ, all will be saved, and Universalism is true. I showed too, the order in the 23d verse, Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming were the two orders, and no third order for the wicked; but after the two orders comes the end. He also made a great use of John v. 28, 29. I afterward met him in private conversation, and on this text and context, he readily admitted that in the 24th and 25th verses, the theme of the Saviour was a resurrection from moral death, and I think he was convinced that it was the same in the 28th and 29th verses.

But concerning the text: the all in Adam, and the all in Christ. The original words of the text are translated correctly; but the words admit of a different transposition so as to read—For as all in Adam die, so all in Christ shall be made alive. But as it now reads, there is no evidence that the all in Adam are the same all in Christ more than there is that the all in Boston are the same all in New York. And it seems to me that those who are too ignorant to see it are too ignorant to teach others.

Some of the people I am speaking of, have another "in the ditch" argument, to prove the resurrection of all men, that I never heard of before; that is, "Every eye shall see him;" and of course every one who ever had an eye, if dead, must be raised to see him. Admit it, and then what? Every one who has ever had an eye, has had a knee and a tongue also; and it is written,—Isa. xlv. 23, "That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." And Rom. xiv. 11, "As I live saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me and every tongue shall confess to God." See also Phil. ii. 10, 11. "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." Universalism again.

If every eye is raised, every knee and tongue must be, and when every knee bows to him, and every tongue confesses him to the glory of God the Father, all will be saved. It is a poor religion that connot stand without being supported by what we believe to be a false theory. But it is a hard case for them. Universalism is true, or the wicked dead will not be raised.

The error lies in the misunderstanding of prophecy. Prophecy in its fulfilment has reference to the people at the time and place of its fulfilment; for instance, "And before him shall be gathered all nations." What all nations? All that exist "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory." See Matt. xxv. 31, 32. "Every eye shall see him." What every eye? Every eye of all the nations that are gathered before him. But all prophecy is not fulfilled at one time: for example, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father," is not fulfilled until all the wicked are destroyed. See Matt. xiii. 40–49. Every knee shall bow to him, and every tongue shall confess him, is every knee and tongue after all the wicked are destroyed.

This is an important phase of prophecy, and ought to be critically observed by all Bible readers. The future seeing eye of the prophet looks ahead and sees a time and its event, and a people of that future time whom the event concerns, and no others unless the prophecy so affirms.

I offered to discuss the question of the reliving of all men; but some of the leaders of the affirmative thought not best. There seemed a shrinking from a public investigation of the subject. But I discuss it in every private family where I go, and I feel sure that the truth is gaining a little, enough to encourage me to persevere.

Z. CAMPBELL.

TURNER, Maine, Jan. 22, 1870.

TRULY ALARMING.

CHICAGO now numbering three hundred thousand souls, has won the terrible title of the Paradise of murderers. Truly it is as apostate Jerusalem, or as Sodom. We are told that just before the deluge the earth was "filled with violence" hence we conclude it was an age of crime and murder. And our Lord informs us that Noah's times are to be acted over again in the age of the coming of the Son of Man. The lust for murder is rife everywhere, but Chicago must carry the bloody palm. The Chicago "Tribune" says, "Never was Chicago so crime-ridden as just now. A black cloud of terror seems to hang over the city, and our law-abiding citizens with one accord as if their feelings were connected by some subtile sympathy, apprehend the danger, and cast about them for a remedy. Crime is fearfully on the increase and assumes a bolder aspect with every succeeding deed. Criminals are literally in possession of the city, and move and act according to their own sweet will. A score of burglaries is a poor night's work; a half-dozen cases of garroting in the course of an evening is scarcely worthy of comment, and nothing short of a Pantin horror would startle our citizens just now, so inured have they become to the sight of wickedness and crime." The "Pantin horror" here alluded to, was the murder of a whole family of eight persons not long since near the city of Paris in France. We are told that the number of deaths in Chicago during the year 1868, was six thousand four hundred and sixty-four. Of this number no less than two hundred and sixty-four, or one death in every twenty-five was by violence. Just think of it; every twenty-fifth person that died, was shot, stabbed, or in some way killed by the hand of man! Such being the statistics of homicide alone, what then must be the general aggregate of crime in Chicago? It is fearful to think of it. And sad to perceive that the restraints of law and Christianity combined seem powerless to arrest the growing evil. New York is a wicked city, but were its annual murders (as compared with the population) equal to those of Chicago, they would reach the horrible number of seven hundred! Chicago needs a relentless Vigilance Committee, or a great earthquake such as shook the West in 1811 and 1812, or—The day of Judgment. Possibly she will have all three of these and that soon.

ROLYAT.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

THERE are wonderful examples in Scripture of the power of prayer. Nothing seems to be too great, too hard, or too difficult for prayer to do. It has obtained things that seemed impossible and out of reach. It has won victories over fire, air, earth and water. Prayer opened the Red Sea. Prayer brought water from the Rock, and bread from heaven. Prayer made the sun stand still. Prayer brought fire from the sky on Elijah's sacrifice. Prayer turned the counsel of Ahithopel into foolishness. Prayer overthrew the army of Sennacherib. Prayer has healed the sick. Prayer has raised the dead. Prayer has procured the conversion of souls. "The child of many prayers," said an old Christian to Augustine's mother, "shall never perish."

Prayer, pains, and faith can do anything. Nothing seems impossible when a man has the spirit of adoption. So long as Abraham asked mercy for Sodom, the Lord went on giving. He never ceased to give till Abraham ceased to pray.—J. C. Ryle.

THE FEET AND TOES.

AN exchange furnishes the following lucid thoughts upon a subject which has been befogged by some recent writers:

A writer asks: "How many powers the feet [of the image] denominate?"

In reply I quote from Dan. ii. 44—" Whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay and part of iron, THE [fourth] KINGDOM SHALL BE DIVIDED." As Daniel does not tell me how many kingdoms the feet represent of course I do not know. They represent the divided state of the previously intact fourth [in consecutive order] kingdom.

The second question is, "When did they [the kings, whatever their number, denoted by the feet and toes] come into power."

One answer I will give is this: As the image covers every hour of history, without break or chasm, therefore where the intact phase of the fourth kingdom ended, the divided state began. From history I give the answer, that most of the barbarian hordes that overran the fourth kingdom did so in the early part of the fifth century.

The third question is, "Does or does not this interpretation, of Daniel, signify just how many characters or grand monarchies there will be in existence, as well as the length of time."

Daniel gives the number of the "grand monarchies" as four, succeeding one another, the last one having two phases, also succeeding one another; first a united, and after that a dismembered state. As to time nothing is said, in the chapter in question, except that the whole four span all time between Nebuchadnezzar and the kingdom of God.

I am represented to say that "we are in the the days of the feet kingdoms." Well, what of it. I did say so, and say so still, for this simple reason, that as the united phase of the fourth kingdom is numbered with the things of the past, and as the next phase is the dismembered, represented by the feet and toes, and necessarily being under some portion of the image, we are, and can only be, under the feet. The feet and toes cover all time, from the end of the united phase, until the kingdom of God.

"If so, (says our interrogator), we have been for thirteen hundred years," under the feet kingdoms. Well, what of it, if it was twice as long? we shall remain under them until the kingdom of God.

Our investigator now leaves questions and gives us his idea how the matter stands. "The case simply stands thus—the fourth kingdom became divided as Daniel said [good authority], and has been so ever since, and will be until"—until when? Daniel says, and I agree, until the kingdom of God. What does our questioner say? "until the fulfilment of the eleventh little horn." Now what is the use of parting company with Daniel? Our questioner again—"About that time, the fulfilment of the eleventh little horn, the organization of the feet kingdoms will take place." Now brother, if you are, as you say, "fully satisfied [as I am], that the kingdom covers the whole length of time," and that "the kingdom became divided as Daniel said," and further, "that the feet kingdoms will not be organized until A. D. 1885,"—pray what part of the image covers the thirteen hundred years between the division of the fourth kingdom, and the organization of the feet kingdoms? This is our question to hosts of commentators, who insist on some more complex exposition than Daniel's.

I am invited to read the seventh of Daniel. What do I find there? I find "that the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom on earth;" that the ten horns out of it are ten kings that shall arise;" that "another shall rise after them, that shall be diverse from the first, and shall subdue three kings," etc., all of which corroborates what I have said respecting the image, which I will represent as follow.

The legs and the fourth beast are the fourth kingdom in its integrity. The feet and toes are the fourth kingdom dismembered as follows: ten horns, ten kings; eleventh horn, one king; eleventh horn subdues three of the ten.

From the above scheme it may be seen at a glance how absurd it is, to insist that the ten toes represent ten kings or kingdoms, for they cover all the dismembered condition of the fourth kingdom down to the kingdom of God; not merely the ten horn period occupied by the eleventh horn; but also the period when only seven of the ten kingdoms were left, the eleventh having subdued three. Daniel then is vindicated in not asserting that the ten toes are ten kings. Again, we may see at another glance how absurd it is to assert and insist that the ten kingdoms exist at the coming of Christ, when three of the ten have been subdued by the eleventh. The three subdued kingdoms never being restored it is simply absurd to expect ten divisions of the fourth kingdom at the coming of Christ.—Gospel Banner.

THE PRINCE OF THE POWER OF THE AIR.

AN INQUIRY.

"Please give us your views on Eph. ii. 2, 3—'The prince of the power of the air.' Is it a correct translation? Has he any reference to a personal being in the expression? Is it wrath personified? 'The wrath of man.'" A. BOYNTON.

WE presume the text is correctly enough translated. That the Apostle had reference to the heathen notion, which many of the Jews also imbibed, is doubtless true. That notion was substantially this: "Evil spirits filled the whole air, arranged in troops and under regular subordination to a prince, their leader and head." In addressing converted heathen, and speaking of their previous condition and the present condition of their unconverted countrymen, Paul makes use of the heathen notion to illustrate their condition who were disobedient, and the past condition of those who were now believers; and no more indorses the truth of their notions of the air being filled with evil beings, with a leader called "the prince," or leader of this imaginary host, than he indorsed the heathen notion that they were "the offspring of God," when he told those idolaters, "Your own poets have said, for we are also His offspring;" and added, "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God," etc.—Acts xvii. 28, 29. Were they at the same time, ruled by a prince called in these days "the devil," and the offspring of God, i. e., His children? Surely no man in a sound mind, will assume such a position.

The Apostle then in Eph. ii. 2, 3, does not indorse the heathen fable of the air being filled with evil spirits, but merely refers to that fable to illustrate his subject, that unconverted men are ruled and actuated by the principle of evil, from which government the believers at Ephesus had been delivered by becoming the servants of Christ. The spirit of disobedience rules in all men who refuse or neglect subjection to the authority of God; and such "walk according to the course of this world," which constitutes them "children of wrath;" i. e., subjects of death eternal; to perish "like sheep laid in the grave."—Psa. xlix. "Death shall feed on them," and, "they shall never see light:" they "shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Prov. xxi. 16. Thus "the wrath of God abideth on them."—John iii. 36. Hence they are called by the Apostle —Eph. ii. 3, "children of wrath," because they shall not have a resurrection from the dead; as our Lord calls others, "The children of God, being (or because they are) the children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 36.

While on this subject, we may as well consider the words of the Apostle, Eph. vi. 11, and onward. "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil"—diabolou. This word is from diaballo, which signifies, "to traduce, a slanderer, a calumniator, a backbiter, a spy." The Apostle goes on to define what he means by "the devil." He says—"For we wrestle not [only] against flesh and blood, [our own animal nature], but [also] against principalities, [also] against powers, [also] against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

In this quotation we have retained, in brackets, the words "also," and "only," which our translation omits in all the places where we have inserted them. They are essential to the sense of the text; and their omission makes it speak falsely; for it makes the Apostle say, that we do "not wrestle against flesh and blood;" whereas he, elsewhere, affirms the contrary; for he says, "I keep my body under, and bring it into subjection," etc., 1 Cor. ix. 27.

The text Eph. vi. 11, gives the enemies to be encountered all under the expressive name, diabolou. The Apostle then proceeds to state them in particular; and the several particulars combined show what the devil is, against whose "wiles"—"deceits, frauds, tricks, stratagems," etc.,—they were to defend themselves. These are stated to be "not only flesh and blood, but also against principalities;" i. e., chief rulers in earthly governments: "also against powers;" i. e., inferior rulers, who derive their power from those above them: "also against the rulers of the darkness of this world," or age; i. e., heathen, Jews, and others, ignorant of the truth: "against spiritual wickedness in high places;" i. e., the most sublime places—dignitaries in the nominal church, who are themselves ignorant of the truth and yet undertake to "lord it over God's heritage." All of which enemies have been encountered by sincere Christians in every century since the days of the Apostles. These enemies are what Paul calls the diabolou, "the devil:" the combined powers of wickedness and promoters of hatred to the truth and its advocates. These devils may well be called "legion," for they be "many."

Men have fought an imaginary spirit-devil, and failed to encounter the real and tangible ones, against whom, alone, armor is provided. Happy will it be for Christians when they learn where the real battle is to be fought, and cease to waste their strength by "beating the air" to look after the devil and evil spirits. Let them who would "fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life," cease to hunt after devils and evil spirits in "the air," and turn the weapons of war against tangible devils around them, so clearly designated by the Apostle. Then they will not "labor in vain nor spend their strength for nought:" let them no longer "beat the air," but take unto them "the whole armor of God," so that they may stand successfully against the adversaries of truth and holiness.

LIGHT WANTED.

I FIND in Jer. xix. 10, the following language: "Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee, and shalt say unto them, 'Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, even so will I break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again: and they shall bury them in Tophet till there be no place to bury. Thus will I do unto this place saith the Lord, and to the inhabitants thereof, and make this city as Tophet.'"

Now, Br. Storrs, will you or Br. Grim, or Br. Thorne, or any other, give me light on the language in italics. Light is all I want, and I will be thankful to any one who will give it me.

Your Br., seeking the truth,

F. C. DOWNS.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24, 1870.

We confess ourself unable to give any other light than what history affords: that shows us the threatening has been accomplished to its fullest extent; and it is beyond the power of man to restore that people or that city, just as truly as it is beyond the power of man to restore the dead to life: yet if God wills to do either the one or the other, there is nothing impossible with Him. The only question here is, Has God said He will cause "Jerusalem to be inhabited again in its own place, even in Jerusalem?"—See Zech. xii. 6.

Connect this testimony with Jer. xxxi. 38–40, "Behold the days come, saith the LORD, that the city shall be built to the LORD . . . and it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more forever."

We know nothing of Br. Downs' difficulty; but the text must be construed in harmony with the general testimony of prophecy. The judgment proclaimed in that prophecy has long since been inflicted. The prophecies of its restoration, rebuilding, and being re-inhabited will as certainly be fulfilled as the judgment was. Both the judgment and the restoration are the work of God; and without His direct agency no human power could accomplish either.

A GRATIFICATION.

I AM much pleased with Br. A. Rondthaler's "Interesting Letters," and hope we may have some more of them. It really does one good to find such men as Judge Halsted, Ambrose Rondthaler, Lee, of North Carolina, etc., and I might say, Br. McAllister, taking hold of the work; for a man who can write such an article as "Faith, Hope and Charity," should be a contributor as often as his health will permit.

Some of us who first went into the forest as pioneers were content to bark the trees so that we could only get room to plant, while others were busy rolling the timber together and burning it out of the way; and now, thank our heavenly Father, there are those coming into the work who are able to embellish as well as clear up.

It has been said that not many of the learned and able ones have taken hold of "Life Only in Christ," as we are pleased to call it; but we begin to see and feel that abler hands than ours, are soon to take the field, and then some of us who have been digging against great odds, to find the truth, may stand aside and listen while those more fitted for the work may take the field. Thank you Br. Rondthaler, McAllister, Lee and Halsted, for the able assistance you have rendered the cause. May you all be blessed in the stand you have taken, is the earnest prayer of your brother,

HINTS ON HEBREWS. IX. 27.

BY JACOB GRIM.

"And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment."—Heb. ix. 27.

THERE has been a great deal said on the above text, and our opponents are constantly urging it in proof of a judgment after death. I have thought for some time past of writing an article on the subject, but have waited in hope that some Br. would take up the subject, and give the HERALD the true meaning of the text.

I was pleased with an article from the pen of W. S. Campbell, a few months ago, on the Breastplate of judgment, and was in hope that he would have finished the subject; but he closed a little too soon, without as we thought, finishing the subject. Now it does not need revelation to tell us we all have to die. All nature informs us of that fact; we may look on our right hand and on our left; the animal and the vegetable kingdoms declare that fact. Yes, all nature is dying, and proclaims that truth. But says one "that is not what Paul wishes to teach; it is the judgment after death, for Paul says that such a judgment is appointed for all men." That is just the question before us, and the truth of which we desire to understand.

We think the last verse of the chapter contains the key that unlocks the whole question. Paul begins this chapter with the first covenant and its ordinances; and tells us there were cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy seat. "Now (says Paul) when these things were first ordained, or appointed, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service," appointed for the occasion. "But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. The Holy Ghost thus signifying that the way into the holiest of all, was not yet made manifest while as the first tabernacle was yet standing." Now whatever this judgment relates to, it relates to the subject of which Paul in this chapter is treating. Some say I make a great deal of the law of Moses, and seem to force everything within its folds; and I might say that some of my Brn. ignore the first covenant as though it was given to the children of Israel for their amusement; whereas Jesus said it was of so much importance, "that heaven and earth should pass away, before one jot or one tittle of it should fail." But the question before us is, What does Paul mean by the language used in our text? When I refer back to the shadows of which Paul is speaking, I find a breastplate of judgment the High Priest was to wear. "And the High Priest was to bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart continually."—Exodus xxviii. 30. Shadows may sometimes lead us astray; we may suppose them to point to one thing when they are made by an entirely different substance. But in this case we have both shadow and substance; and our duty is to compare them. We find in Lev. xvi., "that the High Priest was to make an atonement for himself, for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel."

In speaking of this shadow Paul says, "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the High Priest entereth into the holy place every year with the blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the completion of the ages (Diaglott) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once (a year) to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without a sin offering unto salvation." The Syriac renders it, "A second time without sins will he appear, for the life of them who expect him."

Now to sum up our conclusion, we have in the type or shadow under the law, an appointment for the High Priest to make an atonement once a year, and it is to be "an everlasting statute unto the children of Israel for all their sins once a year, as the Lord commanded Moses." We find the high Priest going into the Holy of Holies once every year, to offer the sacrifice provided for himself first; and we find the people waiting outside of the tabernacle. The high Priest is absent from their sight, but the Lord has provided the means for them to know that the high priest is still alive; he has bells fastened to the skirts of his garment that the people may hear while waiting in suspense for the judgment. If the atonement is made, the sacrifice is accepted, and the people live; and the high priest comes out, and the people see the breastplate of judgment, which is the ensign of God's acceptance of the sacrifice instead of the people.

The priest and the people die by proxy in the animals provided for them. So Christ was once offered like the sin offering, under the appointment to bear the sins of many (the many under the law.) And he has entered into the Holy of Holies, and the people are waiting; and the Apostle says the judgment is, "he will appear the second time without a sin offering for the life of them that look for him." He now wears the breastplate of judgment as our high priest. "And as it is appointed unto men once to die" under the first covenant, under the penal law of that covenant, and it was to continue for an everlasting statute; and the Apostle says, that, under that covenant "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." But they were through the blood of bulls and goats passed over from year to year. Christ, in the end or completion of the Jewish age, put an end to this everlasting statute of Lev. xvi. 34, by the sacrifice of himself, instead of the people; and the judgment is, that God is satisfied and has abolished the statute, and put an end to the yearly sacrifice, by accepting the one great sacrifice of his Son. So Christ was once offered (not every year), to bear the sins of many (the Israel under covenant); and Paul says in Rom. iii. 25, that "God hath set forth Jesus to be a Mercy seat, by his own blood."

We think then, that Heb. ix. 27, contains an ellipsis, and should be read the same as verse 25. Thus, And as it is appointed unto men once, (a year) to die under the statute Lev. xvi. 34, and after this (appointment) the judgment. The judgment consists in knowing whether God was going to accept of the animal, or demand the people; which could not be ascertained until they saw the high priest with his breastplate of judgment.

We have thrown out these remarks that some of our Brn. may embellish them.

EARLY LIFE BELIEVERS.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

I SPAKE recently of one of the old, firm believers in and defender of the doctrine of "LIFE IN CHRIST only." Now I will mention another.

Br. HENRY ANDREWS, who died some seven years since, was well known in this place, (Southington, Conn.,) and the surrounding region, as one whose life was exemplary and his faith consistent, being a believer in the immediate coming of Christ, and the future life of the righteous only, in the resurrection and by the resurrection, which the Lord Jesus shall effect at the last day. He was a man whom all held to be a good man and a Christian, and long an Advent believer of the true stamp; receiving the doctrine of Immortality as it is in the word, by the teachings of Br. Storrs and others, and the real doctrine of life, for such it is, almost as soon as it was brought to view. His name and his works remain precious in the estimation of the good and faithful still, and will, no doubt, till the end, certainly, if any faith is still left in the great truths which he embraced. I love to think of such men! Men who died in the faith, having been an ornament to it while living.

The faith of Life in Christ only still lives in Southington, and I find some in this State, where I little expected to. I was led to say, "the Lord was in this place and I knew it not," where I was preaching last week.

THE DEVIL: SATAN.

BY A. BOYNTON.

THAT there is a personal spirit-devil has become a question of serious doubt with us, and we think much to our advantage too. The workings of sin in ourselves or others, we can account for on rational principles, so we have no need to go outside the man for a foreign foe. Man's constitution and condition, if rightly understood, we think would explain all the wonderful phenomena attributable to a spirit-demon. We would suggest a thought: Did not this devil doctrine originate among the heathen idolaters who deified almost everything, making gods of all grades and qualities; (for proof of which see, "A concise account of the Heathen Deities," etc., in the tables of "Webster's counting-house dictionary"); and has not this fancied belief grown until real devils are the result? Does not the Apostle condemn this belief,—1 Cor. x. 19, 20? "What say I then; that the idol is anything, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is anything? But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils;" (which exist only in imagination.) Was it not the prevalence of this false doctrine which made Christ and his apostles use such language as they did respecting demons? They did not seek the overthrow of error always in a direct attack, but taught those everlasting principles which would, if carried out, sweep error from the earth.

A few examples by way of illustration. "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—James i. 14, 15.

Here is a Scripture rule so full, so plain, all may understand. "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof."—Rom. vi. 12. Sin is the de-evil, or devil we are warned against. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness."—Rom. vi. 16. Here we find sin personified. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."—Rom. viii. 7. Mark the force and strength of this language! Any need of an outside force to draw man into sin? "Whosoever committeth sin, is the servant of sin," says Jesus.—John viii. 34. "Every man is the author of his own sins;" said a worthy presiding Elder, and a sounder truth was never uttered. How natural to personify evil; and how easily the carnal mind substitutes a reality may be seen in the chapter last quoted.

If our view on this subject be the correct one, do not our dear brethren, champions in battling Spiritualism, err greatly in attributing so much to his Satanic majesty, or his angels? They erect men of straw; then demolish them. The word tells us who sends, what is sent, and why it is sent. See 2 Thess. ii. 11.

THE AGE TO COME.

BY T. W. VAUGHAN.

DEAR FRIENDS AND BRETHREN IN THE FAITH: The coming age, or the Kingdom of God, is a subject of such importance to us that we naturally feel a strong desire to have "all see eye to eye," with respect to its order and arrangement; and I have long wished to see the subject ventilated. Its most important features, viz: the coming of our King, the resurrection of his faithful ones, the translation of the living, the establishment of the seat of empire, the complete overthrowing of the present order of rule, I believe we all agree in, and can join together, as we see the day so near, but on some points we do not make progress as we could wish. Permit me, therefore, to examine some of these questions.

We all allow that "all the wicked will God destroy." But we do not all agree as to the character of this proscribed class, and we shall do well to learn God's description. As we turn to "Moses and the Prophets," we find no class recognized as the wicked, but those who have broken God's covenant; and our Lord and his followers must have understood the same rule of responsibility. And now who are the covenant breakers? Surely none but those who have personally subscribed to it; as none but such could be held responsible under it. In taking this view of it we can see why the ancient church were so often visited by such condign punishment from those "whose carcasses fell in the wilderness," until "Zion was ploughed as a field;" and the future judgment and punishment must fall upon the apostate churches only. "To destroy, therefore, those who have destroyed the earth" (viz: false teachers and rulers, who claim official distinction by virtue of a pretended claim as a covenant class), will be a matter of necessity, as well as policy, previous to reorganizing society under the regime of Zion's King.

The restoration of the twelve tribes, Judah and Israel, or the Jews and Saxon races, will be found next in order. After purifying them by cutting off "all the proud and all that do wickedly" from among them.

These nations, thus sifted, "and with a new heart," or a new purpose to direct their resistless power and energy, with all the modern appliances of force, commerce, agriculture, mechanics, arts and sciences, will be sent forth to the nations with the olive branch of peace, under the direction of a perfect executive court, with Jesus as its head, and an immortal cabinet of tried ones, who are "faithful and true," and competent to carry out the promise of Abraham, viz: "to be a blessing to all the families of the earth." God's promise to Israel and Judah of enlargement can never fail.

The question has often been asked, "Will those made immortal by the coming of our Lord, intermingle with the nations as teachers, magistrates, directors, or administrators among the people?" I answer, by no means; their office is peculiar, and also local. "They shall be kings and priests unto God."—Rev. v. 10; iii. 21; iii. 12. Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30.

They will reside in the holy portion, "a place of delight," on the north of the world's capital.—Ezek. xlv. 1–5; Psa. xlviii. 1–3. Here will be erected "thrones of judgment," communicating by telegraph with the innumerable subdivisions of the nations; and in the midst of the throne of the "Great King." Within this city, Zion, mortal men (with few exceptions), will never be allowed to enter; and its walls will exclude prying eyes.—Ezek. xliv. 9–14; Rev. iii. 12 and 21.

As the future age is to be one of probation and progress, in which moral development and faith will be the test of character, in order to secure life eternal, the above arrangement would seem necessary, that erring man may still have a right to choose his way, whether it be for life or death; for should he be confronted with the perpetual presence of the glorified race, he could hardly be held responsible for his course of action. As those who have been "born of the Spirit" (John iii. 8), are enabled to "annihilate space," and become invisible (John xx. 14, 15–19–26: xxi. 4–7; Luke xxiv. 13, 31–36; Mark xvi. 12–14), they will doubtless visit their respective kingdoms occasionally, without being recognized; thus securing to their subjects a perfect administration of justice and judgment through their deputies, rewarding the obedient and punishing the disobedient.

Now to return to the twelve tribes of Israel. I find that some of our brethren object to the literal construction of those numerous prophecies respecting those "great and precious promises." I must still say, the more the subject is agitated the more forcible becomes the evidence that those prophecies must be accepted in their most literal significance.

What the kingdom of God was in its introduction, under Solomon, it undoubtedly will be in its full development under David's better Son, without any chance for a relapse.

We hear quotations from Paul of "Spiritual Israel," and of "the seed of Abraham by faith;" but this is a repetition of the orthodox argument against the literal rule of interpretation of those historic prophecies, whose future fulfilment must be looked for in all its amplitude, with as much certainty as the return of the seasons, or of successive night and day.

And now, dear brethren, "search the Scriptures," "which are able to make thee wise unto life eternal through faith in the coming of our glorious LIFE-GIVER."

PENT WATER, Mich., Jan., 1870.

Letters and Extracts.

From J. G. Schaff.

Br. Storrs: I have a few items to communicate to you. Myself and Rev. J. Philip Bishop, have for a good many years been members in good standing of the Penn. An. Conf. of the United Brethren in Christ. Br. B. has held the office of P. E. and a number of other prominent positions in the Conf., and church. (Of myself I say nothing.) He is about 40 years old, and myself about 35. He heard you preach a sermon in Philadelphia, about 15 years ago; since which time he has clearly seen the truth that there is no future life out of Christ. It is only within a few years past, that I have seen the same. Holding these views we have been preaching the positive side of the gospel; and when referring to the doom of the wicked, using only the language of the Bible, without attacking the usual unwarranted construction put on the words "death," etc. We did indeed observe (for we take your paper) some time ago, that you advised persons holding different sentiments from the religious organizations to which they may belong, to separate themselves. In this we held a different opinion, choosing to preach in the synagogues till virtually put out. Privately we advocated with more or less distinctness and frequency, that we understood the term death, when applied to the doom of the wicked, literally. This waked up all the intolerance of the priests; and at a meeting of the above-named body, at Newville, Cumberland Co., Pa., a committee of "Inquiry," was appointed to which our names were referred. Pending the discussion of the question of reference, we demanded by what law the inquiry would be conducted; but no law was named. After the reference, we offered a resolution instructing the "Committee" not to require answers to any questions except such as should be prepared "in the language of the Bible, or the discipline." This of course was voted down, even after they had attached to it an amendment that the book named in the discipline be used. An effort was made to get in an amendment that the construction put on the Bible, etc., of the church be used in the examination; but it looked too Romish. We went before the august committee, and in our replies stated that we should not reply to the question whether we believed that the future everlasting punishment of the wicked consisted "not in conscious torment" (as they ridiculing put it), "but in the extinction of being;" but that privately we have taught that it consisted in everlasting destruction or, as the Apostle says, "the wages of sin is death," and that these words are to be received literally. Upon this the committee reported that we should promise to keep silent about the matter and review the whole subject during the year, and be examined on the same, next year; or, if not, to be left without appointments. Under these circumstances we withdrew, with certificates of good moral character.

The field seems to be ripe for the harvest in this great valley, but there are indeed few laborers. We intend to preach some, but must devote most of our time to some employment to support our families. Will believers everywhere pray for us in this trial and persecution for the truth's sake? The address of Br. Bishop is Mechanicsburg, Pa. Mine, Chambersburg, Pa.

Chambersburg, Pa., Jan. 26, 1870.

From J. Philip Bishop.

Br. Storrs: Unto you greeting. Before this reaches you, I expect you will have heard from the Rev. J. G. Schaff, of Chambersburg, Pa., relative to the fact that he and your humble servant were forced to sever their connection with the Pa. Annual Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, at its late session in Newville, Pa. We were arraigned under this charge: "Not believing in the everlasting conscious torment of the wicked." If we had promised silence, we could have retained our standing, and have good appointments from the Conference. But we could not deny the word of the Lord nor refuse to bear testimony for Jesus. No, not for a house full of silver and gold. We are out of employment, of course, but we have clear consciences, and can rejoice in the light of life in Christ Jesus. We suffer in opposition and persecution.

I will be happy to hear from the brethren of like precious faith, scattered throughout the land. Something could now be done in this valley if we could devote our time to the work. We will have, however, to turn to other engagements, in order to procure a livelihood for ourselves and families. We have sacrificed our living. Some few have already believed, and one subscriber for the Herald of Life I send you. If you have any tracts you wish distributed, to effect, I think we can do it for you. I will be happy to hear from and more so to see you. Adieu.

Your Br., in the hope of life in Jesus, by the resurrection.

Mechanicsburg, Pa., Jan. 28, 1870.

From J. W. McCagg.

Br. Storrs: The "Troy Praying Band" held meetings in our place from the evening of the 8th until the morning of the 17th, and the Lord has wonderfully blessed their efforts. I must say I never had such tangible, abiding faith as in those few days. You well know I could not indorse their doctrine; but in the work of the Spirit I can go with them heart and hand. I was at much of a stand to know what course to take, and prayed the good Lord to use me just as He saw fit. I was his now, and by his grace was determined not to know any thing but his will concerning me. I am not so much in favor of these sensation revivals as many, but God's work I must acknowledge. So would you, as you always mean to do. Many have found a Saviour; but I fear their ignorance of God's word may cause them to stumble after the excitement goes down.

I bless God and praise His holy Name that I am founded upon an intelligent understanding of His holy word. I do not depend upon the "Troy Band" for my daily life. No: I have the witness within me. I am not looking for heaven when I die; but I am looking for a glorious resurrection of the dead when Jesus comes. This faith comes from God's, not man's promise. Oh how good it is to trust the good Lord. He will lead us through green pastures and by the side of still waters.

My soul is full of love to God this day, and I feel to shout, "Glory to God," who has redeemed me by the precious blood of Jesus. Is not this enough for one poor mortal? We are nearing our anchoring ground. Soon the trials of this life will be over, and then we can trust all in the hands of our good Father, who doeth all things well. Oh how I long for sympathy in our doctrine; but the churches have shut up all places from our teachers; and there seems to be no way, at present, to get the subject before the people. I thank God he has kept me free from contamination, while I have mingled with my brethren of other faiths. I am a great lover of religious meetings; and by going among them I have sustained a good Christian character, notwithstanding my conflicting doctrinal views. May the good Lord keep me to the end for His Name's Sake. Amen.

My best wishes for your success and prosperity in spreading the way of Life among the people. Yours, looking for Jesus.

Warsaw, N. Y., Jan. 23, 1870.

From Eld. S. L. Walter.

Br. Storrs: I am well, and at home again, after an absence of about ten weeks in Wayne, Jefferson, and Marion Counties, preaching the word of life only through Christ. I had many interesting meetings. And thank the Lord, many embraced the truth. They were men of sound minds that searched the Scriptures to see if what we preached was there; and some Universalists gave up their doctrine, and said they saw it was wrong. At one place an old man of strong mind and an honest heart after hearing for himself, (he could not read), said, he always thought that it was a lie that God was going to burn men in hell; but now he knew it was. I found some in Keenville, that had received the truth from Br. Smith, who attended the meeting that Br. W. S. Campbell and myself held, two or three years ago, in Lebanon. So the seed is springing up. Praise the Lord. I did not forget the Herald. Four or five would have taken the paper but had not the means. They said they will have, and will take the paper. I gave away papers and tracts, and sold some of the "Six Sermons," and "Life only in Christ," bound. They gave me more than it cost to go and come, in money and produce, which was as good as money. My buggy was full, and the people thought I was a pedlar, and asked me what I had to sell. I had a very tedious journey home, between rain snow and cold; but had a good time on the way, talking of God's plans and purposes. Yours in hope of Life.

Bunker Hill, Ill., Jan. 19, 1870.

From E. M. Curtis.

Br. Storrs: I bless God for the light that shines on my pathway at the present time. What a blessed gospel to see the character of God manifest toward the sons of men, that when they were condemned to death, a way was provided for them, that they might escape the penalty, which was death. We are all under that sentence. How shall we be delivered from it? By obedience to God; by keeping the law of Life, which makes us free from the law of sin and death. I rejoice in the hope of a future life. I find by the gospel I have got to be in Christ to be worthy of life in the future. I feel we cannot do too much for the cause of Christ; for I believe the King is soon to come and give life and immortality to all worthy of life; the rest to be as those in the wilderness, bitten by the fiery flying serpent. So are all the race, stung by sin, and under the sentence of death. No way of escape. But through Christ, if we get into him, our Life-giver, we have hope of a future life. But out of him we eternally perish; not tormented. Glory to God for the peace and joy the gospel hope brings to my heart. I once believed the torment doctrine, but God's word has shined on my path and showed me the true light. No future life out of Christ. I feel bold to declare it to the world, that this is the only gospel hope. Paul says, "I declare unto you the gospel." The gospel proclaims a resurrection from among the dead, or change if alive, when he who is our help shall appear. I am looking for the blessed appearing of our King to give life and immortality to all that are worthy of it. May God keep my heart pure, so that when Jesus comes I may appear with him in glory.

Bristol, Conn., Jan. 27. 1870.

From Z. B. Chase.

Br. Storrs: I feel like writing to you since reading your paper, for the very reason that it bears such a good spirit. I have, for the last five years, been with the "Crisis" folks, although not yoked up with them, for I never have believed in church organization.

I thank God I stand a free man in Christ. I have been attending the Ministerial Conference in this city. It is the first one I ever have had the privilege of attending, and it will be the last.

I have never embraced the "No Life views," so called, but when I hear preachers and professors use harsh and hard words, it touches my heart. It is not right; it is not Christ-like. I have preached down sectarian walls for over three years; and as long as I live I ever shall, if it severs every earthly tie. I know in whom I trust. If God is for us, he is more than all who can be against us.

I do not labor so much as I should for lack of means. I have to support a family with day's work, hire rent, buy wood, and in fact everything we have except cold water. I have consecrated myself and all to the service of God, and can say, "Here, Lord, I give myself away; it is all that I can do."

A word more and I close. I do not see how the wicked dead will be raised, if the dead are to be raised incorruptible. They must be raised mortal, and that I cannot find. There I leave it. God grant that I may never fight the truth, but love it as I may understand it. Your brother, searching for truth.

Bangor, Me., Jan. 15, 1870.

From Nancy R. Orcutt.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Sweet rest promised to the child of God, who by patient continuance in well doing seeketh for glory, honor, and immortality; to those who endure hardness as good soldiers; who run, and do not get weary, walk and not faint. Some time, when the way seems long and dreary, when storm after storm rises o'er the lone way, how sweet are the words of Jesus; how they sink down into the heart, cheering us on the pilgrimage way. "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." How many, to-day, wanderers from God, in the broad road of folly, knowing nothing of the peace in believing, of joy in the Holy Spirit; how many, I say, are perishing while Jesus invites them to come! O, why will you die? Choose life that you may live. All that a man hath will he give for this poor, short life; while eternal life, in a world of glory, is offered you without money and without price; and yet it will cost all you have; friends, yes, everything; but God will be all in all to you; for his promise is sure, "He that forsaketh father and mother, house and lands, for my sake and the kingdom, shall receive an hundred fold in this life, with persecutions," etc. Then you have got to suffer persecutions; yes, that is part of the promise. He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But our afflictions here will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Dear reader, if your peace is not made with God, make no delay; now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation: repent, believe, make God your choice, and he will never leave nor forsake you. To those who believe, how precious is the hope set before us in the gospel of a soon coming Saviour, to gather his Israel from out this sin-cursed earth, to give them an inheritance in the promised land. I mean to be there. Brother, sister, will you be there? It is for us, if we are faithful to God.

Holden, Me., Jan. 20, 1870.

From Mrs. S. N. Colby.

Br. Storrs: I have taken the Herald of Life six months; have no disposition to discontinue it. I prize it next to my Bible. I love the truths it teaches. I have learned to love the dear brethren and sisters that write for it, and when Jesus comes I expect to meet them in the kingdom.

Last spring Br. M. C. Herriman came into the place and gave me some tracts and the Herald to read, and it led me to read my Bible more, and as light broke into my mind, it seemed like a new book. What harmony there is in the word of God. Oh that all God's dear children might see the truth. I meet with opposition, but, blessed be the Lord forever, I have his word, and his word will stand, and He has promised to be with us clear through to the end. His promises are sure. I confide in them and take courage, knowing in whom I trust; although I would not convey the impression that I am a full believer in the life doctrine, for there are some texts of Scripture that I don't quite understand, but I receive new light every week. My heart is open to receive the truth, as it is made plain. Dear Brother, pray for me that my courage may not fail. I would like to take the Herald for a year, but as I have but one dollar, I will take it for six months, hoping to do better at the end of that time. Your sister seeking for the truth.

Salisbury, N. H. Jan. 18, 1870.

From Emeline Wood.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, scattered abroad; how my heart was made to rejoice in going about yesterday looking after the afflicted ones, and my joy was full in seeing them all getting better. The dear Sr. Husted that I said I found in the second story of a house, said to me, "I wish I could write and tell the dear ones that our Father has answered their prayers for me." I never felt so like praising God as I did yesterday. Sr. Husted said, "How glad I am to see you; last week one day, I was lifted right on my feet by a power that I never felt in my life." Her right hand is getting so well that she can almost straighten it, and says, "Tell them I will soon write them a letter in the Herald myself; tell them how much I thank them for their prayers in my behalf." Oh how she will praise God for it. She thinks her husband would be converted through your prayers; it may be the means of saving all of them. Br. Hager will walk out soon. How can I praise God enough for his loving kindness to the children of men? My heart overflows with gratitude to God and his dear Son, for raising up such a cloud of witnesses for his truth. Truly God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. Just look back to the handful under the "Chestnut tree," and see now the cloud of witnesses, and how he sanctifies us in the belief of the truth. All things are possible to them that believe. I think we honor him when we trust his word, and do as Jacob said, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1870.

P. S.—A Herald of Life, belonging to some one in Albany, came to me with the wrapper off. Call on me at No. 1 Plain St. continued, and you can have it.

James Harling, Chicago, Ills., writes: Brother in the blessed Hope; it affords me great pleasure to give an order for a "Life only in Christ," and six months Herald of Life to me, and twelve months to another. Truly God is good to Israel in these last days. I realize a great liberty since I gave all theology (of the Roman caste) up, and simply believe the word. I having been an atheist, and a brother of mine having died an infidel, I could never heartily believe that awful discrimination that theologians contend for; but the solid vein of truth recorded in the word, that he will die out of memory instead of coming up for me to see, hear his cries and agonies, I assure you deepens my adoration of my heavenly Father to realize it, and since I find that wrath, in full, is death. That awful cup that intoxicates man with a feeling like the two apostles, "Let us command fire to consume them;" that delight that some seem to ask, "But will murderers only die?" Poor Man. Oh the reality of having a Supreme being to judge. The Lord give me more of "His Spirit." I say, that awful cup I thrust away. We have quite a lively interest awakened at our chapel on the "Life" question. Truth will tell. I delight in freedom. I want all to see light. My tongue cannot stop, because it brings Jesus to the foreground, "as the altogether lovely." May the Lord give you yet more wisdom, that your last days be the greatest boon to the believers and lovers of "Life." Yours, in Jesus.

James Carless, Toronto, Canada, writes: I have been ill, on and off, for four or five years; during which time have been wonderfully supported by the Redeemer, our Life-giver, to whom be glory forever and ever: Amen. The latter part of '68 was obliged to resign my situation as Depositary of the Upper Canada Bible and Tract Societies, which I had held nearly thirty years. On the fourth of the present month, January, I completed my eightieth year. I can truly say, Goodness and mercy have followed me since first I drew the vital breath—but "Jesus lives." Glory to God. My dear wife is in her 73d year. We have been traveling the same road nearly 41 years. I am, dear brother, yours in the Lord, looking for that "Blessed Hope."

Eld. D. O. Hopkins, North Foster, R. I., writes: I am giving the Herald of Life to those persons who, I think, will read and investigate the matter for themselves. By so doing I have got one subscriber for the paper, and hope to get more. I have been preaching this winter in East Killingly, Conn., where I find some of the most bitter enemies to the Life views we have. The cry raised, "Nobody was ever converted under the doctrine, nor can be." But, thanks to our blessed Life-giver, by the help of the good Lord I have been able to prove the cry false. Several have already embraced the Life views, or Life only in Christ; and three have been hopefully converted; others are seeking the Lord. Yet we have to encounter great opposition and bitter persecution and evil reports; nevertheless the truth is gaining ground.

Hattie Clapp, Springfield, Mass., writes: It is two years since I embraced the Life views. I do not wish to hear any sermon preached unless it has Life from the dead, and Life only in Christ in it. I bless God that he has opened my eyes to see the truth, and enlightened me so that I understand his word. I never saw the great love of God as I do now. I know I love his blessed truth better than any thing else. I am trying to be faithful and live so that I may be accounted worthy to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Yours, in hope of eternal life through Christ.

J. W. Maffit, Webster City, Iowa, writes: Mr. Newton, in the Herald of Life, Jan. 5, comes down on chewing and smoking tobacco. I like his style; but I wish he had closed with Dr. Trask's tobacco cure, that you printed in the Herald about one year ago. There are fourteen persons, to my knowledge, who have not used tobacco since they read that receipt in the Herald of Life.

I am a poor hand to tell a story, but I will tell you one about our lamented Br. J. Marsh. He met an Infidel in the streets of Rochester, N. Y., one day, with whom he had often talked about the coming of Christ. The man asked Br. Marsh what he thought Jesus Christ would say to him if he (Jesus) should come and find him (Marsh) with that pipe in his mouth? Br. Marsh never smoked after that.

Selfish Praying.—"O, sir," said a leanhearted believer to his pastor, "I have been praying a whole year that I might enjoy the comforts of religion, and get no answer to my prayers." "Go home now and pray, 'Father, glorify thyself,'" was the reply. Selfish prayer contains no nutriment.

Let us read, mark, and learn.

Obituary.

Richardson.—Fell asleep in Jesus, at Rahway, N. J., on Friday, January 21st, Elvira Hinman, wife of Philo Richardson, in the 57th year of her age. Sister Richardson had long been a believer in Jesus, and bore her long illness with a fortitude and resignation which speaks well for her Christian character. We spoke at the funeral of the blessedness of those who die in the Lord; having a hope of living again when our Lord returns from heaven. That is the hope of the gospel. The hope of "going to heaven at death" being a baseless one; having no foundation in the Bible; yet true Christians, dying in the Lord, will know no time from the point where they close their eyes in death and their awaking in glory, whether it be one hour or ten thousand years; time with the dead is annihilated; so that the moment of the saint's awaking in the resurrection, is the same to them as the moment they fall asleep; and the whole family of the redeemed, from Abel to the last saint that dies, will awake and arise at the same "moment, at the sound of the last trump," and the descent of their Lord and Life-giver from heaven. In this hope our sister Richardson fell asleep. She has left a husband and four daughters to mourn her absence; her only son having died thirteen months previous to his mother. May our Covenant God so overrule these trying events to the survivors, as to make them a means of their sanctification, that they may all meet at the rising in glory, at the last day.

Cadwell.—It has become my painful duty to record the death of our Br. Ruben Cadwell, who died on the 23d inst., being a few days over 70 years of age, after an illness of a few days, in which his sufferings were great; yet in the midst of them all he could rejoice in hope of the glory of God, and in prospect of a speedy resurrection to eternal life in the kingdom of God. He was a daily searcher of the Scriptures, and in reading found that man was mortal, and that eternal life is the gift of God, to be bestowed by a resurrection at the last day, and that the wages of sin is death. He also embraced the doctrine of Christ's personal reign on the throne of His father David, and that the earth is to be the eternal abode of the saints. Our brother has fallen under the power of death, where he will remain until the trump of God shall sound to awake all those who sleep in Jesus. Br. Cadwell has left a wife and Christian friends to mourn his loss; but not as those who have no hope.

Shall I meet thee, my brother, in Eden restored
To purity, loveliness, beauty, and bloom?
Where God and the Lamb shall be ever adored,
And joyfulness flourish unsullied by gloom.

James H. Jacobs.

Freetown, N. Y., Jan. 27, 1870.

Br. Cadwell's residence was Cortland, N. Y. He was one of the earliest friends of the Herald of Life, and gave liberally to its support. Personally, we had no acquaintance with him, having never seen him. The reports of his benevolence have often reached us. But he sleeps, we trust, in Jesus.

Huntly.—Br. Storrs: By request I write to inform you of the death of Charles P. Huntly, son of James R. and Mary A. Huntly, who died November 16, 1869; aged 24 years, 4 months, 19 days. He was a seafaring man, and was on his way home from Savannah, where he took the "Swamp and Chill fever." He was sick on board the vessel ten days before their arrival at Boston; after which they removed him to the Chelsea Hospital, where he lived but three days.

I cannot inform you what the state of this young man's mind was at the time of his death, but his parents tell me they have been "Life believers" for some eighteen or twenty years past, and have instructed their children to believe the same. Mr. and Mrs. Huntly are anxious to have the death of their son put in the Herald of Life, and asked me to write to you for that purpose. Some of their relatives are subscribers for the paper. Your sister in hope of life, when the Life-giver comes. Mary Mansfield.

The Fruit of Tribulation.

There is a strange contrast often between the substance that nourishes the root and the perfected flower. The Apostle Paul tells us that "tribulation worketh patience; and patience experience; and experience hope," revealing to us how the life having its roots in those things which are sad and repelling, under Divine influence, may grow and blossom into hope. Let us mark the stages of this growth.

The seed cast into the earth proves the power of the life within, by its struggle to break through the evil that covers it. It must lift the dirt in order to get into the sunshine. When tribulation comes we shall prove the power of the Christ life within us, by the efforts which we make to rise into the light which faith causes to shine upon the soul. Sorrow, trial, when it overwhelms men and leaves them in darkness which lies upon them a burden of woe, soon crushes out the life. What matters it if the pulses still beat. So the clock ticks until the weights run down. Is that life? Patience is the earliest growth of the life which struggling out of tribulation is to culminate in hope. We are to seek this first. The Lord's prayer teaches us this. "Thy will be done," comes before we even ask for daily bread. We shall not come into this state of soul without effort. Patience is not mere listlessness, a sinking into a state of helplessness like the beast which finding its burden heavy, lies down and will be urged no further.

Patience reveals itself in the smile of peace which ripples over the face of the invalid whose every nerve is keen and alive to suffering. That smile, that quietness, is of the soul. Those lines of pain, the tight shut mouth for a moment, is of the body. Patience is the heavenward look, which the sorrow-stricken heart lifts up through its tears, saying, "Father, not my will but thine be done." Patience strengthens trust, and the soul no longer drooping earthward, looks up and opens to heavenly influences; then it is that the life enters into blessed experiences on every side. Who shall tell what hopes have budded and blossomed out of these Christ-given experiences? Full of fragrance and beauty, these hopes unlike earth-born flowers, shall never fade. Those who have come up through great tribulation are only transplanted into that brighter world where there is no more sorrow.—A Connecticut pastor.

To Correspondents.

Persons ordering works from our office should give the name, definitely, of the work wanted, except in case of those under the head of "Campaign Documents;" then designate those wanted by the figure at the left hand. Suppose you wish an assortment of the Campaign Documents; instead of writing the name of each, give the No. For example, say, Send me 10 cop. No. 1. 10 cop. No. 5. 7 cop. No. 8; in like manner with any No. wanted. In this way you save words and avoid confusion. A person writes us to send him, among others, 14 "Letter to a Clergyman." We send him 14 of them, and find he wanted but one. If he had said, Send me No. 14, the mistake would not have occurred.

No works should be sent for, to this office, not in our published list. We have no time to devote to procuring works outside of our office.

Our trying to love an object, is like our trying to laugh when we are not pleased; the more we try the less shall we succeed. The trying part of the process implies it is a thing we do not prefer.

"A Quiet Mind."

I have a treasure which I prize;
 Its like I cannot find:
There's nothing like it on the earth;
 'Tis this—a quiet mind.

But 'tis not that I'm stupified,
 Or senseless, dull, or blind;
'Tis God's own peace within my heart,
 Which forms my quiet mind.

I found this treasure at the cross;
 And there, to every kind
Of weary, heavy-laden souls,
 Christ gives a quiet mind.

My Saviour's death and risen life,
 To give it were designed;
His love the never-failing spring
 Of this my quiet mind.

The love of God within my breast,
 My heart to Him doth bind.
This is the peace of heaven on earth—
 This is my quiet mind.

I've many a cross to take up now,
 And many left behind;
But present troubles move me not,
 Nor shake my quiet mind.

And what may be tomorrow's cross,
 I never seek to find;
My Saviour says, "Leave that to me,"
 And keep a quiet mind.

And well I know the Lord hath said,
 To make my heart resigned,
That mercy still shall follow those
 Who have this quiet mind.

I meet with pride of wit and wealth,
 And scorn, and looks unkind;
It matters not—I envy none,
 While I've a quiet mind.

I'm waiting now, to see my Lord,
 So patient and so kind,
I want to thank him face to face,
 For this, my quiet mind.

Common Salvation.

BY J. S. POTTER.

"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints."

In this text some of our brethren think they see two salvations. One for all men! called common, and the other for the righteous, called special. Now I will quote a few Scripture texts, to show how the word "common" is used in other parts of the Bible.

"If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men, then the Lord hath not sent me."—Num. xvi. 29. "There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men."—Eccl. vi. 1. "And all that believed were together, and had all things common." "But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean."—Acts x. 14. "So they took the money, and did as they were taught; and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day."—Matt. xxviii. 15. "It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you," etc.—1 Cor. v. 1. I think I have given a fair sample of the word common, to show the bearing of the same word in the text. Now I will ask, did the apostle Jude write any other letter to the church, beside this one chapter, that the above text is taken from, which is called the General Epistle of Jude? or, did he preach a different gospel to that of his Brother James, and the rest of the apostles? If so, how came he to write after this manner—"Jude the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ and called." Query. If Jude preached two kinds of salvation, and the "common salvation" is the one that he told the church they "should earnestly contend for," which kind did these sanctified and preserved ones belong to?

Again, vs. 20–23, "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. And of some have compassion, making a difference; and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garments spotted by the flesh." Here we have in Jude's writing, "holy faith," "eternal life," and "pulling" sinners "out of the fire." Why pull them out of the fire, if his "common salvation" will bring them back from the dead? I think when men will examine this subject without prejudice, they will see that Jude's "common salvation" brings holy faith; and holy faith will bring eternal life.

We will try the apostle Paul's "common faith" alongside of Jude's "common salvation," and see how they will compare. "To Titus mine own son after the common faith." Now if the common salvation belongs to the wicked, so does the common faith belong to them also. Let us put this new gospel together and see how it will look.

The wicked have common faith:
The righteous have special faith.
The wicked have common salvation:
The righteous have special salvation.
The wicked are justified by common faith:
The righteous are justified by special faith.
The wicked will be raised from the dead:
The righteous will be raised from the dead.
The wicked will be born again, without being begotten:
The righteous will be born again, by having been begotten.
The wicked will have a future life:
The righteous will have a future life.
The wicked will have a common future life.
The righteous will have a special future life.

"Marvel not at this," that I have let the wicked take the lead in this new gospel plan, for the reason there are so many earnestly contending for just such a faith, and I fear they will "rack their brain to get round the truth" of "No Life out of Christ." We read, "without faith it is impossible to please God;" but in this new gospel they all please God, for they all have faith.

I will cite the reader to a few Scriptures that treat on salvation and faith, that he may see who they apply to. "But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation."—Isai. xlv. 17. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."—Rom. ii. 13. "That they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." 2 Tim. ii. 10. "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"—Heb. i. 14. "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Pet. i. 5. "And that from a child thou hast known the Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2 Tim. iii. 15. "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" —Heb. ii. 3. Escape what? Why, death. "The wages of sin is death."—Paul. "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—James.

"Salvation is far from the wicked; for they seek not thy statutes."—Psa. cxix. 155. I think this last text is fatal to the universal salvation scheme. But, says one, "Give us the text where it says, Christ is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe, and you will see that there will be a resurrection of all mankind." I cannot do that, for there is no such text in the Bible. But I will turn to the one that many think refers to Christ as being the Saviour of all men, and you will see how it reads. "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe."—1 Tim. iv. 10. "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the commandment of God our Saviour."—1 Tim. i. 1. "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour, who will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth."—1 Tim. ii. 3, 4. Here we see that God is the Saviour of all men, in that he has provided a way whereby all might be saved, and that is through Jesus Christ his Son; but it is of no benefit to the unbeliever. It only benefits the believer, and becomes a special salvation to him.

In conclusion I would say, there is but one salvation revealed in the Holy Scriptures, of truth for the fallen sons and daughters of Adam; and that is offered to all the world, on the condition of repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; or, in the words of inspiration, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved [or, have life]; but he that believeth not shall be damned" [i. e., condemned to death as a finality].

"Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith: to God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ forever. Amen." —Rom. xvi. 25–27.

EAST BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 1, 1870.

Expectation May be Realized.

To those brethren that think Rome will literally sink during the session of the Œcumenical Council in that city, and to all others that look for the Lord's return from heaven, I take great pleasure in addressing, with a view to bring out all the light that can be had on this subject, as I think that it is very important.

The object of this council, as I learn from the secular press, is to ratify the syllabus of the Pope, and to declare the Pope infallible, and thereby become articles of faith. The other questions that will come before this Council are of minor importance compared with the question of infallibility, which will be declared without doubt in my humble opinion. This I think will fulfil the prophecy of Rev. xi. 7; "And when they shall have finished their testimony (the fulfilment of this prophecy), the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit (spiritualism), shall make war against them and shall overcome them, and kill them." Therefore the "law and testimony" is made null and void, as regards that sect of people. (Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins.—Rev. xviii. 4.) Is not this the "Man of Sin," fully made manifest? "For except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the Son of perdition who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped so that he as God," etc.—2 Thess. ii. 3, 4. Hear what this man of Sin (the Pope), says in his opening allocution—"That the church need not be afraid now, as it is now stronger than Heaven." ("I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow."—Rev. xviii. 7.) Some may think that the Man of Sin is "Spiritualism;" or the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. Admitting this to be a fact, does it not fully reveal Spiritualism, the very capsheaf? and is not the cardinal doctrine of the Roman church, spiritism in the fullest sense? When you see this dogma declared, take your Bible and turn to Rev. xi. and read from the 8th to the 13th verses; and in the 13th verse please take notice of that "Earthquake" spoken of which I think is literal. In fact where the word earthquake occurs in the Bible, it should be taken in a literal sense, and not symbolical.

Perhaps it is not generally understood that there is to be an international fair held in Rome sometime in February of this year, for an exhibition of the paraphernalia of the church; clearly demonstrated in Rev. xviii. 12, 13. This circumstance with the other spoken of, brings us to the conclusion that the Lord is nearer than some think. I would also call the reader's attention to the fact that we are living in a fast age, and this fair is not likely to last five, ten, or twenty years as some think.

Therefore we have great reason to "rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh." He which testifieth these things, saith, "Surely I come quickly, amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus." Yours in Christ, STEPHEN PELL.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Jan. 17, 1870.

From Eld. S. L. Walter.

BR. STORRS: My stay here has been protracted by the desire manifested to hear of this new doctrine, far and near. I ought and would if I could stay among them for a year. I left home on the 3d of November, and arrived on the 6th. I have preached in Marion and Jefferson counties, and the doctrine of Life only in Christ, or, the righteous only will live again from the dead, has stirred the great deep all around the country, from which we have heard. A Br. of the Methodist church says, "That the ministers all take me for their text." They say "The wicked dead will be raised to life." And when asked for one text in proof, they can't give it, but say they can find many; yet they are not forthcoming. I preached in the Baptist church from 1 Cor. xv. 22, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." I tried to show the necessity of a resurrection; the certainty and the nature of it. At the close, I asked Eld. L. Osborne of the Baptist church, to close, but he declined, and said he would preach from the same text on the morrow evening. I then dismissed them. A company of us rode about six miles to hear him. He said, "I understand the old man is present, (meaning me), and I am glad of it." He admitted that I had "proved the necessity of the resurrection." He said, I "quoted that man was made a little lower than the angels, but the Scriptures do not say so. But we see Jesus who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death;" and he could not see that Paul said only two verses before, "Thou madest him (man) a little lower than the angels." He remarked that we "said 'man had no soul;' but he has, 1 Thess. v. 23, proved it; and that man was a soul entity, and not that man was made a living soul;" as the Lord hath said. He said, "They say, that 'spirit means breath;' but it does not." And this in the face of what James says, ii. 26, "the body without the breath, (margin) is dead," and Job xxvii. 3, "The spirit of God is in my nostrils;" or the breath which God gave him;—xvii. 1. "My breath is corrupt," or "spirit is spent." The above texts ought to satisfy an honest enquirer after truth. He affirmed that, "all men must be raised to life in order to be judged, so that they may receive according to the deeds done in the body."

They can't see that the Lord, "will judge the quick and the dead," as we read—Acts x. 42; 2 Tim. iv. 1; 1 Pet. iv. 4; "Who shall give account to him that is ready (not to raise the dead, but) to judge quick and dead. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." So we see that God will judge the dead. Hence they may very properly be said to stand before the Judge, who will raise up the believer, and leave the unbeliever in death. Hence they cannot "see life," nor see Christ as he hath said, "the world shall not see me."

In speaking of "the order of the resurrection, Christ the first fruits, they that are his at his coming 3d order. Here he was surprised; and then quoting, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," he defined "even so," to mean "the all referred to as dying in Adam were the all who got life through Christ, because all meant all;" but he could not see that Paul was not saying one word about the wicked, but the righteous who died because they were in Adam, were made alive because they were in Christ." Also, he said, by "the wicked rising was meant they go down, down." He quoted Dan. xii. 2; Acts xxiv. 15; and a Dutch minister, quoted John v. 28, 29, for him, for he could not. He then told the people that "we could not find one text that said the wicked should not be raised;" and this after, as I believe, he had read these texts; Isa. xxvi. 14, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased they shall not rise," etc.; also, Isa. xliii. 17; Prov. x. 25; xxi. 16; Jer. li. 39, 57; Ezek. xiii. 23. He quoted, "Corruption shall not inherit incorruption." "Man's body was corruptible and could not be made incorruptible; and so the body could not be raised, because corruptible." He did not see the difference between inheriting incorruption and being raised incorruptible. God gives life.

He then denied the resurrection; and stated distinctly, that "it was Christ that got the victory over death, and sang 'O death, where is thy sting,'" etc.; when the Apostle says, "Thanks be to God who giveth us (not Christ) the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." I would ask when will they cease to pervert the truth of God to establish their fable, and wrest the Scriptures to their own distruction?

Finally he said "the wicked would be raised as Samuel was." That is true, for he never was raised by the witch of Endor. And then he gathered them by "the three unclean spirits," etc.; and finally by satan when loosed; he should deceive them and gather them, a thousand years after the first resurrection; and fire came down from heaven and devoured them; his "immortal souls," according to his theology. So he came out a Destructionist; just what he learned from the HERALD OF LIFE, which he subscribed for when he lived at Grafton, Ill.

And this heterogenous mass from a man that said, God had called him to preach; which I cannot believe, for the Lord wants men that teach his word, and not the doctrines of men when they are not in harmony with the Scriptures of truth.

I would say, that many embraced the truth of Life only in Jesus, and the wages of sin is death. Men that had taken refuge from the God dishonoring doctrine of eternal torments in Universalism came out and acknowledged that Death is the penalty of the law, and that was just. Yours in hope of Life.

KEENVILLE, Ill., Dec. 26, 1869.

The Two Covenants.

BY A. BOYNTON.

[Concluded.]

We were writing more particularly of the new covenant, and proposed in this article to notice where this was written, how it was written, and for what purpose.

Paul tells us, in Heb. viii. 10, and x. 16, "I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them." He also treats on this subject in 2 Cor. iii., which please examine carefully. We quote the 3d verse. "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone but in fleshly tables of the heart." David saith of the righteous, "The law of God is in his heart."—Psa. xxxvii. 31. Ezek. xi. 19, speaking of this work says, "And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh."

No one will claim a strictly literal fulfilment of the above, but all concede a change of heart is spoken of—a change in the will, mind, affections wrought by the Spirit, called, "The renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Tit. iii. 5. This divine work is further spoken of in Eph. iv. 22–24. "That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of your minds; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." This new covenant law is called the "Law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus."—Rom. viii. 2. i. e., it gives the believer an assurance of life future through or by the LIFE-GIVER, Jesus.

The old covenant pertained to the old or natural man; and its blessings and curses were mainly of an earthly, temporal nature; while the new relates itself to the renewed man; its objective work being to transplant the Adam man into the Christ, or second Adam man.

Transplant we say, yet by a change of his moral nature and also of his earthly or corruptible nature, yet a preservation of his individuality or identity. So Job seems to have understood the matter when he says, "And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh (resurrected immortal flesh) shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another."—Job xix. 27.

The book commonly called the "New Testament," is the embodiment of the new covenant, and especially do the Epistles of Paul, elucidate this subject in its general application to the true church (or, Israel) of God, who are the "elect of God" taken "out of every nation under heavn;" known as the children of Abraham, as Isaac was; i. e., the children of promise. See Gal. iv.

Much more might be written on this interesting subject, but as our purpose was more to "call to remembrance," we have studied brevity.

One thing more and we close. The rule we adopt in scriptural research is, come to the Lord in all simplicity and Godly sincerity and expect his Spirit to shine on the word, and thus lead us into the truth. God's commentary is the Holy Spirit; the expositions of the best of men are but as a "briar and thorn hedge," comparatively. Honor God by adopting the true light which brings "peace by believing, and joy in the Holy Spirit," and secures an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y.

Be Kind in Little Things.

The sunshine of life is made up of very little beams that are bright all the time. In the nursery, on the play-ground, and in the school-room, there is room all the time for little acts of kindness that cost nothing, but are worth more than gold or silver. To give up something where giving up will prevent unhappiness; to yield, when persisting will chafe and fret others; to go a little around rather than come against another; to take an ill word or a cross look, rather than resent or return it; these are the ways in which clouds and storms are kept off, and a pleasant, smiling sunshine secured, even in the humble home, among very poor people, as in families in higher stations. Much that we term the miseries of life, would be avoided by adopting this rule of conduct.

Children's Department.

Gentle Words.

The sun may warm the grass to life,
 The dew the drooping flower,
The eyes grow bright and watch the light
 Of Autumn's opening hour—
But words that breathe of tenderness,
 And smiles we know are true,
Are warmer than the summer time,
 And brighter than the dew.

Angry Words.

Poison drops of care and sorrow,
 Bitter poison drops are they,
Weaving for the coming morrow
 Sad memorials of to-day.

Angry words! Oh, let them never
 From the tongue forbidden slip;
May the heart's best impulse ever
 Check them ere they soil the lip.

Truthful and Obedient.

"Charlie! Charlie!" Clear and sweet as a note struck from a silver bell, the voice rippled over the common.

"That's mother," cried one of the boys, and he instantly threw down his bat, and picked up his jacket and cap.

"Don't go yet!" "Have it out!" "Finish this game!" "Try it again!" cried the players, in noisy chorus.

"I must go—right off—this very minute. I told her I'd come whenever she called."

"Make believe you didn't hear!" they all exclaimed.

"But I did hear!"

"She don't know you did."

"But I know it, and—"

"Let him go," said a bystander. "You can't do anything with him. He's tied to his mother's apron-strings."

"That's so!" said Charlie; "and it's to what every boy ought to be tied; and in a hard knot, too."

"But I wouldn't be such a baby as to run the minute she called," said one.

"I don't call it babyish to keep one's word to his mother," answered the obedient boy, a beautiful light glowing in his blue eyes. "I call that manly; and the boy who don't keep his word to her will never keep it to any one else—you see if he does!" and he hurried away to his cottage home.

Thirty years have passed since those boys played ball on the common. Charles Grey is now a prosperous business man in a large city and his mercantile friends say of him, that "his word is as good as a bond." We asked him once how he acquired such a reputation.

"I never broke my word when a boy, no matter how great the temptation, and the habit formed then, has clung to me through life."—Child's Delight.

Little Things and Little People.

It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge that no life is great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible characters to admire or copy.

Little things and little people have often brought great things to pass. The large world in which we exist, is made up of little particles as small as the sand on the sea-shore. The vast sea is composed of small drops of water. The little busy bees, how much honey they gather! Do not be discouraged because you are little. A little star shines brightly in the sky on a dark night, and may be the means of saving many a poor sailor from shipwreck; and a little Christian may do a great deal of good if he or she will try. There is nothing like trying.—Dr. Chalmers.

Incident of A Child.

A little boy about eight years old, having jumped off the car from the rear platform, ran forwards to get on in front, and by accident slipped and fell so that the heavily loaded car passed over his leg crushing it in a frightful manner. In the first excitement of feeling the passengers, horrified at witnessing such a scene, cried out, "Hang the conductor—he ought to be hung;" when the little fellow though quivering with agony, exclaimed, "Don't hurt him; I was to blame." Poor child! Brave, just, thoughtful of others, even in the sudden presence of death. While he was lying on some straw by the roadside, previous to being taken to the hospital, a little girl picked up his cap, and, having ascertained his name and residence, ran with it to his home. His mother opened the door, when the child exclaimed, "Here is the cap of the little boy who has just been run over by the railroad car." What words to reach a mother's ear! What wonder that with frantic speed she should have rushed to the fatal spot, thence to track him by his blood to the hospital. There she was at first denied access to her boy, lest her excessive agitation should hasten his death. A few moments, and the mother's love so stilled the surging anguish of her heart that, with the calmness of despair, she was admitted to the presence of her darling child, only to find him conscious of his danger and ready to obey the sudden summons. "Jesus is with me, mother," he said; "I must die, but Jesus is with me."—Sunday School Times.

God's Method of Help.—God did not take up the three Hebrews out of the furnace of fire, but he came down and walked with them. He did not remove Daniel from the den of lions; but he sent his angel to close the mouths of the beasts. He did not in answer to the prayer of Paul, remove the thorn in the flesh, but he gave him a sufficiency of grace to sustain him.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

INTERESTING LETTERS.—No. 4.

DEAR BR. P.: In my letter of the 20th inst., I promised, the Lord permitting, to continue the translation from Plitt's Evangelical Doctrine of Faith. I shall, as I said in my last, not give you any garbled extract. Occasionally I may omit some unnecessary words and one or two sentences, which, however, will not change the author's meaning.

After saying, as I told you in my last, that the Bible does not teach the doctrine of universal salvation, but, on the contrary, gives room to the thought of the annihilation of the wicked, there follow several pages, which it would be needless to translate. At the close of these pages he expresses himself in stronger language than before. He says, "We must acknowledge that the Bible is not for, but against the prospect of a final salvation of all." He then proceeds to say—"Under these circumstances, the only question that can be asked is the following: Will not divine grace at last, at some time or other, deprive a creature that is absolutely depraved and lost through his own absolute obstinacy, of his ruined existence, or rather will not a gracious God liberate him from the same, since he has that existence only as a sufferer of misery? In other words: Since there is no prospect of the restoration of the damned, and since that restoration, according to the Bible, will never happen, Christian hope would love to hold fast the possibility of their annihilation. And on good grounds we dare say, that the biblical idea of death, especially in its full intensity as the second death (which in another place he calls absolute and eternal death), although it is not a mere negation of being, still comprehends in it also non-existence, and still more, essential non-existence, just as, on the contrary, the idea of life, although it goes far beyond mere existence, still, at the same time, always takes in, and presupposes continued being. Just as, on the one hand, life as eternal, is perfected in an endless, happy and glorious existence, so, on the other hand, it would seem as if finished death must be fulfilled in the removal, not only of all happiness and glory, but, at last, also in the very deprivation of its being. Thus according to Rev. xx. 14, "Death and Hades will be cast into the lake of fire." This might be explained in this sense, and thus, at last, the whole fulfillment will take the place of that of which Paul speaks, 1 Cor. xv. 26, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." To this neither Matt. xii. 32, nor 1 John v. 12 are opposed. Much rather, on the contrary, is the last passage in perfect consonance with the just mentioned ideas. Even Matt. xxv. 46, and 2 Thess. i. 9, read in this light, would not oppose such an end, in the same measure, as they would universal salvation; for then, in the idea of Kolasis aionios, as the life-destroying absolute judgment of wrath, there would be also, at last, an annihilation of existence, just as in Zoe aionios, as the highest unfolding of life, is contained the assurance of an endless existence. The same holds good with regard to the less positive expressions in Rom. ii. 5, etc., 1 Cor. xi. 32, John v. 28. The expression with regard to Judas, Matt. xxvi. 24, John xvii. 12 finds its full truth, but not only as respects him, but, as quite naturally, with reference to all sinners to death. It would have been better for them not to have been born, than to have so fearfully and wholly missed the object of their being. The rest of the prophetic, typical and concrete drastic passages, such as Mark ix. 44, etc., and the apocalyptic, especially Rev. xiv. 9 are, it is true, in their literal import, not more favorable to final annihilation than to universal salvation, because they speak of eternal suffering. But here certainly we are authorized to separate the prophetic ideal expression from the dogmatic exact, to distinguish the figurative from the real; and we preserve the essential character of the prophetic thought, really, unequally more faithfully, if we consider the end as annihilation, than if we look upon it as Restoration of all, or Universal Salvation. And then, too, some Pauline passages, which in their literalness favor Universal Salvation, would, in accordance with the essential thought, much more retain their right, than if we simply adhered, according to the doctrine of the church, to endless suffering. For then, through annihilation, at last a state once comes, when, it is true, not all created personal beings will have become happy, but still only happy ones will exist, in all of whom God will be all."

I might translate more from this section, but, I think, enough has been given. At the close of this paragraph, on the last page of his work, Plitt sums up the whole. I shall not here translate "verbatim and literatim," but give you the sense. Viewed in the light in which he sees it, he thinks, that the idea of the annihilation of the damned ought to have its place in a system of theology, both exegetically and dogmatically speculatively. He says, the threatening of endless suffering is vain and fruitless! However, he adds, in preaching, we ought simply to adhere to the idea of Eternal Damnation. This maintains its essential truth amid all circumstances; and then he closes with a powerful exhortation to work out our salvation with fear and trembling.

Brother, I have done. However, before I close, I must make a few remarks. I have written to you as my friend. We do not think alike—but I regard you as a Christian. As my friend, and as my Christian friend, you have never condemned me for the views I hold. On the contrary, you have diligently searched whether these things are so or not. Publicity, you know, I do not like; and, therefore, I might have, in part, confined my views to our rooms, where we have often met. I might have been silent too, because the truths, which I hold, are so ably, so plainly and so clearly stated in the HERALD OF LIFE, and of the coming kingdom, and, especially, in the Six Sermons, by George Storrs, and in other publications by the same author. But there are some Moravians not living in this place, with whom I am acquainted, and who hold the same views that I do, and I know that it is not uninteresting to them to hear, occasionally, from their friend, through the HERALD OF LIFE. And then, again, there are Moravians and members of other denominations of Christians, whom I know, in the State of New York, where I preached four years, and in Maryland, where I had charge of a congregation about six years, and at Emmaus, Pa., where I labored almost seven years, and at York, Pa., my native place, and where, in later times, I lived four years, and at Nazareth, Pa., where I spent my youthful days—and there are friends and acquaintances in Ohio and New Jersey, where my lot was cast for a time. Some of these have heard that I hold very strange views—views in opposition to the Bible. Many of these people I love and esteem—and I thought that, perhaps, some few letters in the HERALD OF LIFE would tell them what these strange views are. Besides, I take the HERALD OF LIFE, and in that excellent paper, believers in "Life only in Christ," often speak one to another; and I consider it my duty to speak at times to them too. And then, there are "Life only in Christ" believers, who give liberally toward the dissemination of the truth; and should not I try to do a little, even if it be in an humble way? And here I think it not out of place, publicly to return my sincere thanks to Br. Storrs, for kindly admitting my articles into the HERALD OF LIFE. The Lord continue to bless him. Amen.

One word more. It is sometimes said, that "Life only in Christ" believers are constantly dwelling on doctrines, but very seldom say any thing of experimental religion. With regard to this matter I have my own views. However, in order to satisfy some, who at times advance this objection, I will tell my experience. It is contained in the last of the following lines:

> "And when I'm to die,
> Receive me, I'll cry,
> For Jesus hath loved me I cannot tell why."

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Jan. 22, 1870.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

BY L. C. THORNE.

"Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And every one that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we are incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I not as one that beateth the air."—1 Cor. ix. 24-26.

IT may be somewhat difficult to conceive of language more replete with earnest exhortation to soldiers of the cross than the above expressions of Paul, the ever-faithful apostle to the Gentiles. With him it was not enough that followers of Christ should receive the truth; they must show forth its power, must let it shine out in all its richness and beauty through lives of consistency and godliness. It was not enough that they should work; they must seek to act intelligently; they must systematize their labors, and study to direct their efforts to the accomplishment of the greatest possible good.

To the Corinthian church, Paul's allusion, by way of both comparison and contrast, to the games of foot-racing and boxing, then much practiced at Corinth, conveyed a world of meaning. It suggested assiduous care, resolution, self-denial and perseverance both in the strife itself and in preparing for the contest. Says the poet:

> "A youth who hopes the Olympic prize to gain,
> All arts must try, and every toil sustain;
> The extremes of heat and cold must often prove;
> And shun the weakening joys of wine and love."

The race to which Paul cites his brethren, once entered upon, there must be the utmost care in the expenditure of strength; no false steps taken; no stopping in the way, nor erratic flights; no looking behind, but a steadfast earnestness in pressing "forward to the mark of the prize."

Contestants in the game of boxing were said to "beat the air" when their opponents, by nimble movements of the body, eluded their blows, and it not unfrequently happened that the striker, missing his aim, fell to the ground. It was, therefore, ruinous to a contestant to be compelled by reason of improper training, ignorance of the art, or of superior agility on the part of an antagonist to "beat the air" by waste of blood; it was laboring for nought.

There is a striking similarity between the efforts of those taking part in these games, and the struggle of those who rightly wage the Christian warfare, but a marked contrast in this, that in the former all must of necessity strive in a degree of uncertainty, since only one could obtain the crown, and that a corruptible one; while in the latter, all may obtain an "incorruptible crown." In the former, many enter the lists; but, however careful and thorough their preparation, however intrepid their demeanor, and valiant their struggles, however strenuous their exertion, the most of them must retire from the field disappointed and, perhaps, disgraced. Not thus the Christian race. In that, all who strive may win the prize—life from the dead. This, in the boundless love of God, has been made possible. Some may run faster, may mount higher than others; they may attain, finally, unto greater degrees of glory in the kingdom of God, but perseverance unto the end insures to each possession of the glorious prize. Watchful care and well-directed and steady efforts throughout this struggle are essential to success. We must be ever watching ourselves. Our temptations, in their various guises and disguises, spring from our fleshly nature, and are strengthened by carnal mindedness. Hence we should seek to thoroughly understand ourselves—know all our weaknesses, our salient points, and against these endeavor to establish, by aid of the Spirit, impregnable spiritual fortifications. If this be not done we shall, unlike Paul, run uncertainly, and "as one that beateth the air." Just in proportion as we walk not after the Spirit we trust in our own strength, and consequently we run into error, and are in imminent danger of falling away utterly. Our runnings hither and thither will be mis-runs, our doings will be mis-doings, because of mis-directed efforts, and we shall feel an uncertainty as to how we stand with God and with our Lord Jesus Christ. If, however, we sincerely and earnestly seek divine guidance; if we yield obedience to the Spirit, which Jesus promised to send His people, and does send and are subjects of its enlightening influence, we have dealt a powerful blow, and have hit the foe squarely. We are in a position to say with Paul, "I keep under my body." We have not, however, vanquished the enemy, but have simply so far disabled him as, by aid of Divine grace, to control him—keep him under, that so the spiritual nature may triumph. We shall never get entirely rid of him until the final change is wrought at the "last day," for a great deal of the old Adam clings to the most eminent of Christians; and he who flatters himself that the adversary is stripped of all power for further harm, has been decoyed into a feeling of false security dangerous in the extreme. We would not be understood as saying that there are no enemies to fear outside of self. On the contrary, their name is legion; but they cannot approach us to our injury, except as they appeal to some quality of our carnal nature. So the same work which affords us security against dangers from self, protects us from the wiles of others.

But there are other ways in which Christians lose ground, by wasting their strength in false strokes and beating the air. It is claimed by some Greek scholars, and we presume properly so, that the word translated "uncertainly," in Paul's expression, "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly," signifies also ignorantly. O, what a vast amount of precious Christian strength is wasted in useless labor through ignorance of the truth. Men labor zealously throughout a whole Christian life in vindication of what they suppose to be truth, defending what they have received on no better authority than bare human assertion, when a few months of careful, thoughtful and prayerful search in God's great repository of truth, the Bible, would result in such an overturning of their man-made theology, and consequently such an illumination of their understanding, with true gospel light as would enable them to accomplish more to the glory of God and to the honor of Christ, in one year of studious effort than by a whole life time of hard labor, which, while much of it may be directed to the building up of what is noble, good and true, a large proportion is, though ignorantly, devoted to the dissemination of God-dishonoring, soul-cursing error. Such rear superstructures that look beautiful to them, but instead of being composed of precious truths, like unto "gold, silver, precious stones," they consist of such destructible material as "wood, hay, stubble," and will be burned up in the great day of purification, but they themselves may "be saved, yet so as by fire."

Who has not seen men, seeking to establish certain doctrines, wax eloquent in dilation of an array of assumptions, and noted their ill-concealed chagrin when compelled at last to the admission that no texts can be found in all the Bible that assert them? With the obvious fact before them, that no Scripture truth is more plainly taught than that evil will not only continue, but increase until the coming of Christ, how many, for instance, seemingly agonize in prayer for the speedy conversion of the world? What fruitless effort! These and kindred ones are well-nigh inexcusable, but very prevalent modes of "beating the air." Many, very many misruns are made and mis-strokes given in preaching and in prayer, under the idea that the enemy has received a stunning blow, and that a good work has been done, when, in fact, strength has been spent for worse than nought, and the diffusion of error assisted.

If, like Paul, we would "run not as uncertainly," and "fight not as one that beateth the air," we must strive to possess the "sword of the Spirit"—truth, the weapon which he so effectively used. They who are content with little truth have but a short weapon at best, and perhaps a dull one at that, and hence must contend at great disadvantage; but they who grow in the knowledge of gospel truth, holding it in righteousness, grow in grace, and wield weapons of everlasting power, for the pulling down of the strongholds of error and sin. Then, too, many mis-strokes are made and much ground lost, through inconsistencies in the Christian warfare. This arises mostly from ignorance of self, and so of failing to "keep under" our "body"—subjecting the lusts of the flesh. Men sometimes, by their knowledge of truth, and eminent ability in the presentation of it, lead many to love God and their fellow-men, to rejoice in the truth, and to engage heartily in disinterested efforts to promote it, and then, by thoughtless displays of selfishness and pride, repel those they have won, and chill the love they have kindled. Too often is it, also, that Christians who touchingly and eloquently plead for an exercise of Christian kindness, and for the necessity of forbearing one another in love, more than neutralize the result of their labors in this direction, by treating with marked unkindness and disdain some who happen to differ with them.

If they who contend for earthly prizes spare no pains, object to no self-denial, but accept hardship, and exert to the utmost their skill and endurance, to secure fading garlands, or empty titles, how much more should we, who seek an incorruptible crown, and "an inheritance undefiled, and which fadeth not away," deny self, and avoid whatever may hinder us or prove a stumbling block to others. How much more should we be steadfast in labor, and guard against a waste of precious time and strength in the propagation of the traditions of men, rather than of revealed truth. How eagerly we ought to avail ourselves of every means whereby we may grow in the knowledge of and obedience to the truth, and thus ever promote a development of that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord.

Persecutions, afflictions, trials of various kinds are inevitable to the Christian warfare; but these are "but for a moment," and will work "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Who continually thus labor will not, having preached to others, themselves become cast-away. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., 1870.

CALLED TO SUFFERING.

IT certainly seems that some people have more than their share of suffering. And it is not in appearance only that it is so, if we judge by relative merit. Some whose whole lives have been singularly pure are the subjects of unintermitted affliction, while others not at all distinguished for piety are comparatively exempt. There are those who scarcely draw a healthful breath from year to year, who never know an unclouded day, when no dark sorrow is not in their sky, but who, born unto trouble, do indeed fulfil their sad destiny. Imagine loving wives who are invalids well-nigh from the time of their marriage, and who have to contend not only with the violence of physical pain, but the keener mental anguish which is only too apt to be suggested to a sensitive nature, that she may be a burden to her husband. When such are also mothers, and see their offspring growing up around them, and are unable to render the tender care, the thorough help, which a mother's love prompts for her children, how bitter is the portion! Examples could be enumerated indefinitely, just such as are to be found in every neighborhood.

We can only explain the question by the consideration that some of God's people are called to suffering. This is their particular vocation—to exemplify the power of divine grace in affliction. Religion needs for its commendation to the world all sorts of illustration. It is significant that He who is the great Exemplar was the suffering Saviour. He was a doer, but pre-eminently a sufferer. If pain be the great joiner of human hearts, then does every suffering soul find in the passion of the Redeemer that fellowship of sorrow which cements all loving disciples to him. It touches and relieves us that he was touched with the feeling of our infirmity. Every heart knows its own bitterness, and a stranger intermeddleth not therewith; but He is no stranger, but a Friend and Brother, the Sympathizer in our griefs, who was on all points tempted as we are, yet without sin. His own sweet, tender nature, perfected through suffering, comes with its universal experience and looks with loving eyes into ours, and speaks in loving words to our inmost feeling, so as not to be misunderstood. Like his is the mission of his disciples. All cannot have the universal experience which he had, but to his followers is divided the gift of proving the sufficiency of his grace in the manifold and differing departments of human exposure and conflict.

Important as the manifestation of the power of religion, in every department of the Christian life, is to the exemplification of its suitableness for mankind, it may be safely assured that in none is it more needed than in the province of submission to the divine will under the allotments of privation and inaction. There is something in an active service which has attractions for most minds. Motion, work, especially in the successful accomplishment of an object, though it may be attended with difficulty, is agreeable in the very tumult of the passions which are excited, so that the soul, self-forgetful, is borne on by a force it scarcely can comprehend, and of which it has occasion to take but little note. Thus, labor may not only be a relief from trouble by the occupation which it affords to the thoughts, but a real luxury to the heart which is instinct with ardent emotions. All the heroic elements of the soul are stirred in the excitement of action, and the more arduous and perilous, the more they are stirred; hence the many are ready to run in the paths of achievement, where, as in an arena, they are ever under the powerful stimulus of the popular eye. But to lie down and be still, and that too, not because one chooses to do so, but because one cannot help one's self, is quite another exercise for the mind. Here all the adventitious aids of support are withdrawn, and the soul is thrown back upon itself, and must depend upon its own resources; and capable of and panting for action, it is obliged to be laid aside as comparatively useless in the great struggle of good and evil—such is a trial of faith which the few who are called to endure know how hard it is. To have to be a silent spectator of the battles and victories of brethren, when the soul burns for the thickest of the fight, is no sweet cup for the earnest Christian. Yet thus it is appointed year after year to some of Christ's bravest soldiers. To them it is given to illustrate the power of divine grace in the winning of triumphs which are far greater than those which are plucked from the onsets of contending foes, in the calm victories which are gained over self. To conquer one's self, to attain the highest of achievements in the absolute acquiescence of the human will in the divine will—this is the work which is left to such an one. Here the perfect career of Jesus, ever deepening, as we may suppose, in its human aspect, finally culminated: "Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt."

We acknowledge a great drawing to those patient and beautiful souls whose vocation is suffering. They are found not only in the sick-room, but also in the work-room, and even in the fashionable parlor. They are not confined to any class or station. They are in Christian homes and wicked houses. Their suffering is as often the anguish which is inflicted by cold neglect or bitter wrong-doing, as by the hot fever of disease. And they are not the complaining; no parade is made of their sorrow; their grief is silent; and noiselessly they move among their companions. The hair, it may be, is prematurely gray, the forehead unduly blanched and marked with the prints of care, the eyes have a deep, pensive look, and the lips are slightly more compressed than the age would justify—all showing to the close observer unwonted earnestness and tension of spirit; but beyond this, nothing—to every friend agreeable, to every duty attentive, to the feelings of all considerate. Of such are the angels unawares who are moving about our sinful world, shining as lights in dark places, and bringing benedictions upon thousands, where else would be curses.—The Methodist.

A DARK PROSPECT.

AT the anniversary meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in New York last month, Bishop Simpson remarked:

"Eighteen hundred years has the Church been endeavoring to convert the world, and as yet but one third of it has been nominally Christianized. If we take the inhabitants of the globe to be, say between ten and eleven hundred millions, possibly from three hundred to three hundred and fifty millions are nominal Christians, and some seven hundred millions are yet even nominally out of the pale of Christianity. The work that the whole Church has accomplished in all its branches has been the conversion of only one third of this world. And now, if we look at the future, though we fondly anticipate the near approach of the world's conversion, yet at the same ratio shall we look to the distance of three thousand six hundred years before this world shall be converted. This will be true unless more shall be accomplished in the next years than have been accomplished in the past. . . . If we get through with the world's conversion in a thousand years, we must add seven hundred thousand every year; and yet, I am sorry to say, that for the last fifty years the Christian churches have not had seven hundred thousand additions from the heathen world. Now, when we take this view, anxious as we are for the conversion of the world, it would seem to be at a great distance from us; and I most frankly say that unless we, as Christians, do more than we have been doing, none of us shall see the dawn of the glorious millennium. The little children in our arms shall grow up to be old men and die, and the world will be unconverted, unless we do more than has ever yet been done."

This is indeed a dark prospect, but the bishop is hopeful: hear him again:

"I think we have no cause to fear the ultimate conversion of the world. God has promised it, and events are hastening to it."

It is said to the praise of Abraham, that when difficulties increased "he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God," and thus he "against hope believed in hope." It is indeed noble to quietly rest on Jehovah's promises in the darkest hours; and if God has really promised the conversion of the world by the preaching of the gospel of Christ, we have no doubt it will be accomplished, but has He done it? The bishop affirms He has, but in the long speech he made never quotes a solitary text of Scripture in support of the assertion. When the passages are brought forward on which he rests his hope it will be time enough to examine them; and till it is shown by fair exegesis that they teach such a doctrine, we must continue, with Martin Luther, to regard it as "a falsehood, forged by Satan, that he might darken sound doctrine, that we might not rightly understand it."—Com. on John x. 11-16. When we find the angel's revelation to Daniel extending from the days of Medo-Persia to the resurrection (Dan. xith chap. and xii. 1-4); our Lord's great prophecy on the mount of Olives spanning the gospel age (Matt. xxivth and xxvth chaps.); his "parable of the tares of the field," as explained by himself, reaching to "the end of the world" (Matt. xiiith), Paul's prophecy of the great apostacy covering the entire time from his own days to the destruction of the man of sin by the brightness of Christ's coming (2 Thess. ii. 1-8); and not an intimation of the world's conversion given, but on the contrary, a mixed state of society and the domination of sin and Satan throughout the entire period distinctly taught; and when we find the history of the world thus far in perfect keeping with these predictions, we conclude with John Knox, the champion of the Scottish reformation, that "there is no final rest to the whole body till the Head return to judgment," and with Lord Napier of the sixteenth century, that "zeal to God, and charity to our neighbors shall [continue to] grow cold, and self-love shall abound among all people, whereby the most part shall neglect and despise God, and follow their avarice, self-love, and partial affections—for undoubtedly to the world's end these vices shall ever increase." Read 1 Tim. iv. 1-3; 2 Tim. iii. and iv. 1-3; 1 Thess. v. 1-3; James v. 1-8; 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4; 1 John ii. 18; Jude 17-21, and see if the apostles were not of the same opinion.—Advent Herald.

THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD'S PRAYER.

IT is beautiful. The form of the petition breathes a filial spirit—"Father:" a catholic spirit—"our Father: a reverential spirit—"Hallowed be Thy name:" a missionary spirit—"Thy kingdom come:" an obedient spirit—"Thy will be done in earth:" a dependent spirit—"Give us this day our daily bread:" a forgiving spirit—"and forgive us our sins as we forgive those who trespass against us:" a cautious spirit—"Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil:" a confiding spirit, and a spirit of adoration—"For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever and ever, amen."—Selected by JAMES H. JACOBS.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrie. in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,

NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

"WHAT SHALL HE GAIN?"

BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

"WHAT shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Reader, if you are worldly wise, and are anxious to manage your affairs so as to secure the greatest gain, let me ask you to ponder these words, spoken by him who "spake as never man spake."

Sometimes in our experience we meet those who, seeking life through Christ, are sensible that they must "leave all" for him; forsaking friends and prospects of success in worldly matters. For a moment they cast accounts —this life, its ease, means of making money, etc., etc., along side of "peace in believing, joy in the Holy Ghost, the hundred fold in this life," and the "eternal weight of glory" in the endless life to come. Then if reason speaks she will say,—Farewell vain world with all your glittering toys, farewell. I will make Jesus my friend, follow him and obtain the "true riches," laying up for myself treasure "where moth and rust doth not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal."

O, if any such one should read these lines, let me urge you to make the exchange. Give this poor feeble life to the Lord by spending it in his service, and he will give you eternal life with a vast inheritance in the world to come. Fear not for the present. He will provide. His people are "soldiers," and every one has his rations; thank the Lord. He has promised to "give to him that asketh;" and praise his holy name, we find the promise sure. Said Christ to his disciples when he sent them out without purse or scrip, "Lacked ye anything?" And they said "Nay Lord." Ah! methinks every toiling follower of such a kind Saviour, can reply, "Nay Lord, my wants are well supplied."

Let us trust such a God as ours. He is truly a father and faithful friend. And then his wisdom is so great! He guides us safely. He deals with us so tenderly. We can find no other such friend. May we be faithful in his service, faithful to the end. Amen.

WESTFIELD, Mass., Jan., 1870.

FROM J. S. HANNAH.

BR. STORRS: I have been talking about the glorious truths as taught in the Bible; such as no immortality out of Christ, and the non-living of the wicked dead, until I have got the whole neighborhood in an uproar. The Methodist preacher has attacked me, and in the place of argument, has charged me with being an infidel; and the fact is I am looked upon as a confirmed heretic and hardly fit to live in a Christian community. But while some are raging others are reading and searching to see if these things are so, and inquiring of me for reading matter on the subject. In fact the leaven is working, and the people are becoming anxious on the subject. I have a bound copy of the "Bible Examiner," which I keep loaned out most of the time; and desire more works for the same purpose. With my best wishes for your continued good health and prosperity, I remain yours in hope of life through Christ.

PENNSGROVE, N. J., Jan. 30, 1870.

JARED HOADLEY, Niles, Mich., writes: Whenever opportunity presents, to extend the circulation of the HERALD OF LIFE I shall embrace it, believing I shall be doing no more than my duty. I can understand that the cause of truth is greatly indebted to it for bringing within the comprehension of all, a true understanding of divine revelation and of the duty of man. I have been held in subjection to error and unbelief, through the best part of my life, in consequence of wrong impressions on my mind, whereas, if I had seen as I now see, and understood as I now understand, better things might have been expected of me.

THE TRACT ON "THE JUDGMENT."

WE have several orders on hand for this tract. We have none at this time to supply; but are expecting an edition in a few days, when the orders will be filled. The thousand Br. E. Wolcott paid for will soon all be on the wing, and they seem to be just what is wanted at this time; for great confusion prevails on the doctrine of the Judgment. That doctrine fairly and Scripturally settled, settles the whole question of Life and Immortality.

Who will take up some other of the works, and have them sent out gratuitously? Let the scattering of Campaign Documents go on. Much has been done, and a spirit of inquiry is awakened that should be fed with materials such as is to be found in the works in our list.

OBITUARY.

STOWELL.—Died at Granby, Mass., Jan. 27, of typhoid fever, CARRIE ESTELLA, daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth D. STOWELL, aged 21 years and six months—after seven weeks of dreadful suffering. We have laid our darling down to rest. Her young friends half filled her grave with flowers and evergreens. We left her sweetly sleeping and returned to our lonely home. From the first of her illness she had the impression it was her last sickness; yet she could sweetly sing,

"We shall sleep, but not forever:
There will be a glorious dawn."

Her last prayer was, "Father, if possible, relieve me of this terrible suffering; if not, give me patience to bear it." Her physician remarked, he never saw so much patience in suffering.

ELIZABETH D. STOWELL.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 9, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

WE ought perhaps, to say something to our friends and subscribers in relation to the pecuniary concerns of this paper. We had the full amount of pledges at our last anniversary; and had all our subscribers paid for their papers, strictly in advance, as heretofore, and as our terms demand, there would now be no occasion to fear as to our going through the volume unembarrassed. Owing to the difficulty many were under in obtaining money last fall, we continued the paper to all who had paid in full for the two previous volumes, though they had not met the terms of advance payment on this; thus giving them time to meet the claims of the paper. Up to this time, there are nearly three hundred who have not remitted payment on the present volume. We appeal to them, whether we shall, or ought to continue to send the paper without a remittance toward sustaining the expenses of publishing it. If nothing is received from such, after a week or two, we shall feel compelled to leave their names off the list of subscribers; but we hope better things of them, though we thus speak.

Will not our friends everywhere see if they cannot increase our subscription list by adding a few hundred subscribers immediately? We make the following liberal offer: For one dollar we will send the remainder of this volume to any new subscriber; commencing with the first number after the money is received. There are now thirty numbers more to be issued to complete the volume; and the sooner the dollar comes, the more numbers the subscriber will get for it. Now, just try and see how many of you will send us at least one new subscriber on this generous offer; or send the dollar and make the paper a present to some friend or acquaintance who will read it. In this way you will help to scatter abroad light on the most glorious theme that ever occupied the mind of man—the Love of God to dying men.

THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

LIKE some other governmental transactions, of the present times, the Post Office Department seems to act on the principle that all its transactions are to be performed to help themselves, and not to accommodate the people. The most scandalous neglect, in relation to newspapers, is practiced somewhere, from week to week. Our paper, for some time past, has been placed in the Post Office, in this city, on Wednesday morning; and yet places within twenty miles of the city the paper is not received till Friday or Saturday; even in Brooklyn, only across the river, this is often the case; while farther off, many complain their papers come to hand several days later than formerly; and some a whole week later than heretofore. Under such mismanagement, no wonder we hear complaints of papers not coming at all. The wonder is that any ever reach them. Still, do not fail to call at your Post Office, and see that they are not detained there. When you finally fail to get any number, please inform us, and we will do the best we can to supply it. Any No. is worth more than the postage on your letter.

PERIODICALS RECEIVED.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for February is received. Rich and interesting as usual. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., at $3.50 per annum.

GOOD HEALTH for February is received. It is "A Journal of Physical and Mental Culture." Published by Alexander Moore, No. 21 Franklin St., Boston, Mass. Terms $2 per year. It appears to be ably conducted, and filled with valuable information.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL has been received, both for January and February. It is a spirited and beautifully executed monthly, designed to amuse and instruct boys and girls. Published by Alfred L. Sewell & Co., Chicago, Ill. Terms $1 per year.

"BURNING OF THE WORLD."

THE above subject has called forth several articles for the consideration of our readers. So far as our feelings are concerned, we have no choice in the matter whether the world is to be literally burned or not. With us, it is a question of fact. If it be a fact, at what time is the event to occur? With reference to this point, there are two opinions. The first is that it will take place immediately at or after the second advent of Christ, now nigh at hand. This view is so out of harmony with prophecy on the subject of Christ's reign on the earth, and over the nations, that many intelligent men reject it as irreconcilable with the general tenor of the prophecies, and place it at the end of a thousand years' reign of Christ after his return from heaven.

Among those that take this latter view is our highly esteemed Br. D. H. Chase, of Middletown, Conn. It is pleasant to have one so intelligent to set his side of the question so clearly and candidly before us. Yet we are compelled to differ from him both as to the fact of the literal burning of the world, and if it is to be burned, as to the time of that event. His article in our last issue we trust has been carefully and candidly read; and our brother's opinion would have as great weight with us as that of any other man within our knowledge. Science has been his study and employment for many years; and he has been a most successful teacher in fitting young men for college. In general views of Scripture truth we are, probably, tolerably agreed. While we go on with our remarks we hope the reader will keep his eyes on Br. Chase's article of last week.

We remark in the first place, that the book of Revelation is the main fortress to sustain all doubtful theories: but for that Book, many of the theories of the present day would find no substantial foundation in the Bible. Immortal-soulists, Eternal-tormentists, and a multitude of other theories, when driven from all other Bible support, resort to the symbols of Revelation to uphold their positions; and it happens that they find it necessary to abandon the symbolic character of that Book and quote the language as if it were literal. We do not say that any one does this with design to mislead; but it is done to sustain theories which otherwise could not stand before the clear statements of the other inspired writings.

In the next place, the main texts claimed as literal in their statements of the burning of the world, are found in 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10, 12. These are relied on, because Peter speaks of the flood of water in the days of Noah, and says, "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished," etc. But Peter is not speaking of any change that took place in the earth's surface; or of the world as a globe, or that any change in its geography took place. He says, explicitly chap. ii. 5, that God brought "the flood upon the world of the ungodly." It was the world of ungodly men that was destroyed; and not earth's geographical surface; that was left unchanged, for all the Bible teaches to the contrary.

But even in this overthrow of "all flesh," some were left in the flesh, and survived to fill the earth with men and beasts. Thus, if our friends insist upon the destruction of men by literal fire, they ought not to claim any more to be accomplished by it than by the water. Hence, the earth's surface will remain unchanged, and some men will be left of the nations in the flesh; and such is the testimony of many of the inspired writers, if we understand them.

But again: After speaking of the burning day, Peter says, "Nevertheless we according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth," etc. Had Peter any other "promise," than that of the prophecy of Isa. lxv. 17, 18? If so, where is the promise found? If there is no other known promise when Peter wrote, are we not bound to take Isaiah's explanation of the promise as the truth in the case? God saith, by Isaiah, "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind; but be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create: for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy," etc.

To us it seems manifest that, the re-establishment of Jerusalem as the throne of empire for the government of this world, and God's chosen King sitting on His "holy hill of Zion," (Psa. ii. 6), and that "King reigning and prospering, executing justice and judgment in the earth," (Jer. xxiii. 5), and "the law going forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem," etc., (Micah iv. 2.) Such an establishment of the governing power of this world, and the overthrow and utter destruction of the present governing powers of earth, fully meets Peter's burning day—properly represented by the elements melting with fervent heat, and the "perdition of ungodly men"—and truly meets his strong figurative language, which so many have construed into a literal fire, and a literal burning of the world.

Peter's language has no bolder figures than that of the old prophets who prophesied of judgments on surrounding nations and on the people and land of Israel; none of which was fulfilled in a strictly literal sense. Take for example, the prophecy of the overthrow and destruction of Idumea or Edom,—Isa. xxxiv. Mark the language: "All the hosts of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as a leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree; for my sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse to judgment," etc. Please read the whole chapter and you will see that the judgment on Idumea, which was Edom, is expressed in as strong language as that by Peter, and yet it was a local judgment, affecting mainly one nation and people, by which their "princes and nobles" (verse 12) were so completely cut off and destroyed that their government was at an end.

So when Christ returns from heaven, (not a thousand years after), God will make such an overthrow and destruction of the great men who have ruled and cursed the earth, whether in Church or State, that the inhabitants of earth who are left will see in the revolution what Peter describes in figurative language, as Isaiah did the overthrow of Edom's rulers and government. The governments of this world are incurably corrupt; and God will soon bring this corrupt system of government to an end; symbolized by "the elements melting with fervent heat;" the whole course of human legislation and administration will, to use the figure, be on fire; and such a dissolving of human inventions as shall end them, as if destroyed by raging flames of fire.

But, blessed be God, this dissolving of human inventions and corrupt governments, and destruction of corrupt rulers, is to be succeeded by a new heavens and new earth—a new government, in which legislation and laws will be appointed and administered for the good of the people ruled; and justice and judgment will be executed in the earth. This will constitute new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, as Peter saith.

Our excellent Br. Chase foresees this excellent reign, but puts off the burning of the world till a thousand years after it begins. This is inexplicable to us; for he admits,

> Despite every effort the race waxes worse and worse, the man of sin is revealed; abounding iniquity has brought another crisis; divine interposition is needful.

If this is so at this present time, and the world is to be literally burned, this would seem to be the time for that event. But no; prophecy will not permit it now, our brother allows; hence he must find another time for the burning day; and before it takes place he says,

> Christ returns from heaven, attended by the holy angels: he raises the sleeping saints, changes to immortality the living saints, punishes his enemies and takes his place on the "Throne of David" as King of kings and Lord of lords. Through his saints he rules over "the left of the nations." His glorious reign fills the millennial era, extending "from the river to the ends of the earth;" "from sea to sea." The nation that dares rebel, has no rain, and perishes. If Egypt rebel, that has no rain, it shall be destroyed by pestilence. The true subjects of His kingdom will increase beyond all precedent. The righteous, the meek, the peacemakers will inherit the earth. But the millennial age is closing; satan is loosed; rebellion is rampant. The rebels go up on the breadth of the earth, vastly outnumbering the saints, whose camp they "encompass round about." The rebels are destroyed by fire from God out of heaven.

Truly this is a wonderful event in the history of our world, if the conclusions are correct. The world at the present time is awfully corrupt under human rulers; yet the burning of the world is put off, and the world is made a Paradise under the reign of Christ. Just as all things are going on gloriously, satan is let loose, and in a short time "rebellion is rampant," and "fire from God out of heaven" destroys all "the rebels." So they were not destroyed by the world on fire; i. e., the fire did not come out of the bowels of the earth, but "out of heaven;" i. e., down from above. Well then, what use of burning the world after this, seeing all "the rebels" had already been destroyed by fire which came "out of heaven?" What use of a day of judgment after the rebels had been executed? There must be some mistake about the interpretation given to Rev. xx.; and the trouble evidently is, the expositors attempt to make the symbols literal; which, of all interpretations put upon this chapter, is the most liable to lead astray from the truth.

To find the doctrine of a thousand years reign of Christ and his immortal saints, after His second advent, to be followed by the day of judgment and the burning of the mundane system, called "the world," from the solitary chapter of Rev. xx., is what we dare not undertake in the face of a multitude of prophecies to the contrary, and not one in plain language to sustain it. Christ shall "judge the quick and dead at His appearing and kingdom," (2 Tim. iv. 1), and not a thousand years after.

Some eminent writers on prophecy have placed Rev. xx. 7 to 10, in a parenthesis, thus connecting the sixth and eleventh verses, and so throwing the whole transaction in the parenthetical verses back of the second advent, or before it, which agrees with Dan. vii. 9–14, which makes the "sitting of the judgment," by "the Ancient of days," to take place at the close of the reign of "the fourth beast," whose "body is destroyed and given to the burning flame;" and immediately following this, the "Son of man" had "given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve and obey him;" and "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Hence, as the world is His kingdom, it will not be burned by a literal fire. "It shall stand forever."—Dan. ii. 44. "Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever. The zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this." —Isa. ix. 7. No literal burning of the world here—there is no room for such an event.

The testimony of Gabriel may be added in confirmation of this, thus: "The Lord God shall give unto Him (Jesus) the throne of his father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke i. 32, 33. Here is no room for "burning the world."

But it is needless to multiply testimony, as the work would be to transfer near one half the Bible to our columns. The kingdoms of this world are to be given to Christ; and whatever renovation the world is to undergo, it will not be burned in the sense of making it uninhabitable for men in the flesh; and we consider the attempt often made to do away with the force of the promise of God, made to Noah and his posterity, no more to destroy all flesh as He had done, as a mistaken view of the promise. It is construed to signify that He would no more destroy all flesh by water; while He did intend to destroy, at a distant day, all flesh in like manner by fire. Among men we should count such a promise, with such a mental reservation, duplicity or hypocrisy.

Let us look at it. To give Noah and his posterity assurance that the cultivation of the earth should no more be interrupted as it had been by the destruction of all flesh, God said, "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake;" (the reason); "for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth;" (now mark): "neither will I again smite any more every living thing, as I have done."—Gen. viii. 21.

That this promise was a pledge not to destroy all flesh again by water, none dispute; and to us, it is equally clear that it was a promise not to destroy it by any other element. That is clearly embraced in these words—"I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake." If that does not cover the whole ground, and as truly guard against the curse of a universal fire as it does against water, we confess ourself mistaken, and would not know how to take any promise of the Bible, lest we might be deceived. A mental reservation is, to us, the worst kind of deception; unsettling all faith, because we do not know on what to rely. The man is pronounced blessed who "speaketh the truth in his heart." Such "shall abide in God's tabernacle" and "dwell in His holy hill."—Psa. xv. 1, 2. If duplicity is condemned in men, can we believe that the Fountain of Truth would say, "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake," and yet intend to curse it more fearfully, and by a more terrible element than He had employed before?

We do not believe any one would charge God thus designedly: but it certainly looks like such a charge to maintain the universal burning of this world, so as, for the time, to make it uninhabitable. We disclaim any intention of accusing any one—and certainly not our beloved Br. Chase—of knowingly and willingly intimating any such thing. We believe him too pure minded, and too sincerely searching for truth to do it.

Our own faith has long been settled, that whatever Peter intended to teach, he did not intend to teach the literal burning of the world. But supposing he did intend to teach that; the burning would come at the time of the second advent, and not a thousand years after. Yet we are satisfied he did not and could not intend to teach that, as it would be to set at naught a multitude of the plainest prophecies of the Bible. It was common with the Hebrews to set forth terrible judgments on wicked nations and rulers with high drawn figures; and fire especially was one of the strongest to denote destroying judgments. But our space forbids our enlarging on this subject at this time.

THE ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.

MUCH is said about this council, now sitting in the City of Rome. We, however, have said but little, because we really think there is little to be said. It has, to our mind, established two facts: First, it has made it evident that its name is "MYSTERY," for the world cannot find out what it is doing or designs to do. Second, it is clearly entitled to the name "BABYLON," for it seems to be a "confusion of tongues;" the members not being able to understand each others language, notwithstanding they have all been taught to speak Latin as a bond of union; yet they talk it so unlike that they are not understood among themselves.

These two facts point out the Romish Church as the GREAT HARLOT of Revelation. She is the "MOTHER," also of other "HARLOTS." Whenever and wherever professional ministers undertake by Councils, Synods, Conferences, etc., to legislate for the body, the Church of Christ, or to promulgate their decisions in regard to what that church shall do, or shall not do, they become "Daughters of the Mother," at Rome: it is an attempt at legislation without authority from Christ and against His express injunction: thus, "Ye know that they which are accounted worthy to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you," etc.—Mark x. 42, 43. Luke's record reads thus, "The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them, are called benefactors; but ye shall not be so," etc.—Luke xxii. 25, 26.

This law of Christ is violated by Rome and all other organized bodies of ministers who determine what the body of Christ shall or shall not do. Many professed Protestants laugh at the idea of the Pope's claiming infallibility, or of the council claiming it for him; but how much less do Protestants claim for themselves when their Synods, Presbyteries, Conferences, etc., fulminate their decrees and resolutions, dictating to the body of Christ what they may or may not believe? and what they may or may not do?

"The Body of Christ" includes every one who is in Christ by faith, or by the work of God's Spirit forming Christ in them. It is not known by any external organization. All these human organizations, called churches, etc., exclude many of the body of Christ from being of them, simply because of the fancied infallibility of the leaders among them, who usurp the place of Christ to determine who shall be among them.

In all these bodies, calling themselves churches, are to be found members of the "body of Christ;" but their union with those organizations did not make them so; they were so before any union with those bodies, or in spite of their union with them. All persons believing in Christ, in any one place, are the Church of Christ in that place; and all such believers should assemble together, as they have opportunity, at the most convenient place, and own no head but Christ, and have no rule of government but the word of God, and admit of no authoritative teacher but the Spirit of God connected with the word, and none are to be allowed to exercise lordship over the others in matters of faith or ceremonies: each individual is responsible to the Head of the Church, and to Him alone. If one trespasses against another, the Head of the Church has marked out the course to be pursued, so plain in Matt. xviii., that no one need stumble in the matter; and there is no need of Councils, Synods, Conferences etc., to decide what shall be done or how it shall be done. It is these combinations or organizations that have rent the true Church of Christ, and created hatred and strife; each seeking to see "who shall be greatest."

When Romanism meets its doom, it will be found that all these other organizations, as such, will meet a like doom; only, they receive as "daughters," not having gone to the same excess, but have acted on the same principles.

The "Christian Union" has an article, by "Rev. Geo. B. Cheever, D.D.," taking off the folly of this infallibility matter of Rome; but it will apply with slight alteration to all ministerial assemblies, who waste time and money to legislate for the Church of Christ, or pass resolutions which they intend to be virtually law for the body of Christ. If the following may be called ridicule, it seems that such dealing with some, who fancy themselves the keepers of other men's faith and practice, is the best method to show them their folly, as they appear incapable of estimating sound reason and the Scriptures on the subject. Dr. Cheever says:

"It is the drollest thing on earth to see the stir in the Romish world in regard to the Pope's infallibility. How is it to be known that he is infallible? By the vote of a congregation of men, not one of whom could get his own word taken without bondsmen, for the sum of five thousand dollars? By the vote of a congregation of men who have themselves to be first convinced by evidence outside the Pope, and of course outside themselves, if it be not the mere reverberation of their own affirmations, as of echoes among the mountains.

"Let us form an insurance company; call it the Œcumenical Insurance Company, if you please, or any other name that suits you. You swear that I am worth five hundred thousand dollars, and I will do the same for you, and we will do the same for the others, and then we will all make affidavit that our concern is worth five hundred thousand million, and the president is infallible. We do not any of us know him to be infallible, and he does not know himself, else he would not ask anybody; and some do not believe him any more infallible than the rest of us. But the moment we all say that he is infallible, then he is. Our saying in council is the same as the saying of the mass; it creates infallibility, as that creates a God. It is a mass-meeting, whereby two negatives make an affirmative; two uncertainties, one absolute truth. It is the mass, the wafer, the priest's word, and Behold your god!

"But the infinite drollery of the thing is the gravity with which it is announced that the proposition will not be brought before the council, unless it be known beforehand that the Council will certainly decide in favor of the Pope's infallibility.

"Now if the Pope be infallible, he ought to be able to say whether the Council will so decide, and he ought to make this known, and so put an end to their perplexity and his own. His Infallibility is perplexed whether to bring the question of his infallibility before the Council, because His Infallibility is uncertain which way the Council may decide, and the attribute of his infallibility will be greatly injured, cut down, and mortified, if they should decide against it, or even decide doubtfully, or even say that they don't know. The question, therefore, will not be hazarded if His Infallibility remains in doubt as to the decision of the Council.

"But if His Infallibility is infallible and sure, then let His Infallibility inform the Council and the world of the fact of his being infallible, and the Council will infallibly decide accordingly. All they want is evidence; but the evidence of infallibility can in the nature of things be furnished only by that which is infallible, or by him who is so. For that which is in itself fallible cannot give credible testimony as to the infallibility of another person or thing—cannot give revelation of such infallibility. One hundred liars cannot prove concerning the one hundred and first that he is infallible, and expect on that announcement to have his word in turn taken by all the world that the one hundred are infallible in whatsoever they may affirm as the result of their deliberations under him.

"If the Pope ask the Council to say that he is infallible, and the Council say that he is, what then? If they refuse to say that he is, what then? If they doubt whether to deliberate, what then? If the Pope be not infallible, what of the Church?"

Zion's Herald.

The Bibliotheca Sacra opens with an able essay on "The Incarnation," by Prof. Reubelt, of Indiana University. The Professor gives a synopsis of the history of the doctrine, condemns many modes of stating it, and gives his own, which is such as, in some of its points, would please The Herald of Life. He contends that the Logos abandoned His divinity, which He had before the Incarnation, and resumed it after the resurrection. That in the flesh He was not truly, personally, completely Divine. He lacked omniscience and omnipotence. This he seeks to prove by the text, "Knoweth no man; no, not the Son, but the Father," and His petitions for power, etc. But how the Logos could lay aside His Divine attributes, is of course insoluble. His Divine nature, he thinks, remained, but in subordination. The argument is more interesting than conclusive.

We are glad to see our old friend does not forget us. But when he says, that "some of" Prof. Reubelt's "points would please The Herald of Life," we are not sure that he is correct. They might please some of our readers without pleasing the Editor of this paper. So far as "Zion's Herald" has stated Prof. Reubelt's views, we see nothing to be specially pleased with. He seems to us like one "beating the air;" talking of a matter of which he and all others are ignorant. The testimony of Jesus is, "No man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father."—Luke x. 22. Here we are content to leave the subject; believing that "God manifested himself in the flesh" of Jesus Christ. Why will not theologians be content to let the words of the Son of God be the end of all disputes on a question about which they all show nothing but ignorance, and "blow scholastic bubbles," to blind their own eyes, and keep up a war which has lasted for eighteen centuries, with no result but to disturb the peace of the church; breeding hatred, strife and bloodshed?

Such has been the influence of this unwarrantable controversy, as to "Who the Son is." There is really but one "mystery" in the whole Gospel scheme—"God manifest in the flesh." The fact is plain enough; but the manner, the how, is hidden from mortal minds; and the more they seek to explain it the deeper their darkness is; and it is a just judgment from God that it should be so for their presumption in prying into a subject which is not revealed, and that Christ has pronounced inscrutable.

We accept Christ as the "only begotten Son" of God; who came into the world to be "the Light of the world, and the Life of men."—John viii. 12, compared with John vi. 33, 35, 50, 51. Accepting Him, as such, does not imply that we have or can have a perfect knowledge of who He is; but it does imply that we have a perfect confidence in the Father's wisdom and knowledge in appointing Jesus, and "anointing him with the Holy Spirit and with power" (Acts x. 38) to enlighten men, save them from sin, and to deliver them from death by raising up, those who believe on Him, at the last day, and bestowing on them eternal life.

Such was and is the mission of Jesus the Christ, the Anointed of God; and all who believe in Him, and embrace Him as their Life-giver and Lord, will find He is their "Resurrection and Life." It is enough for us to know, "He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by him."—Heb. vii. 25. Let us, therefore, leave all this strife about "Who the Son is," and embrace Him as God's appointed Life-giver.

A Sign there's no Mistaking.

The Annihilation of the Wicked.—This doctrine, according to the Methodist Home Journal, is taking root and spreading among thinking men, both in and out of that church and both in and out of its ministry, with a growth that is obvious and threatening. It is asserted that the question whether the Scriptures promise perpetual existence to any but the good must soon have a thorough rehearing in that denomination.

Br. Storrs: Enclosed I hand you a slip cut from the "Ledger" of yesterday, touching the question of the "destruction of the wicked," which I thought you might not have seen. It shows that the seed "sown in weakness" is taking root, springing up, and bringing forth fruit. I trust the good Lord will still attend the promulgation of "No Life out of Christ" with heavenly grace, until the fable of inherent life shall be driven from the so-called Christian church.

I am, as ever, yours in hope,

David W. White.

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 4, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

After the above was given out to the compositor, a note was received from Br. Grim, relating to the same matter, saying, "Straws show which way the wind is blowing." That is true; and we trust the chaff will be blown away, and the wheat remain.

The Right Course.

We copy with pleasure the following article from the "World's Crisis" of the 2nd inst. It is written by an old veteran in the cause of Love, Br. L. Boutell. It adds to our satisfaction that the Editor of the "Crisis" has indorsed it, and we join with him in commending it to all the professed "followers of Christ." Read carefully Br. Boutell's remarks, and Br. Grant's indorsement at the close.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

"Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God."—Rom. xv. 7.

The church of Christ is a unit, from the fact that they are baptized by one Spirit, into one body, and that body is the church or Christ's body. "We are all the children of God by faith." So says Paul; and, as there is but one true and living faith, so the children of faith are one. In his last pathetic prayer, Jesus prayed that his children might be "one," even as he and the Father were one. Why then all these divisions and subdivisions; the mangling of the body of Christ? Because the words of this text are not heeded. The disciples are not ready to receive one another, as Christ hath received them; hence differences have arisen, and they have substituted tests of fellowship, unauthorized by the great head of the church. Thus the wicked work of dividing the living body has been going on, till they are almost numberless.

The question now arises, What can and shall be done? In the first place, stop making or help making any more divisions. How can it be done? I answer, by receiving one another as Christ hath received us. If this rule had been followed out, the church would have presented itself an unbroken body. But there have been innovations upon this golden rule, by bringing our opinions of Bible into a formula, then taking that as the standard for church building, so that those, and only those who can subscribe to it are, or can be, members of "one body." Now what is the test of fellowship?—Can you subscribe to our articles of faith? So you see a variety of foundations for church building, by putting the peculiarities of good men's opinions of Bible into their creeds, substituting as many tests as there are creeds, all contrary to the doctrine of Christ and his apostles; for Paul says, "Mark them that cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine ye have learned, and avoid them." But did the gospel contemplate this oneness of the church, that they should be one? Yes. Says Jesus, "That the world may know that thou hast sent me." This was to be the most convincing argument that our religion was of heavenly origin.

But can Christians, with opinions varying from each other, stand on the same foundation? They can most surely, because they take the Bible to be an infallible rule of faith and practice. Standing on that, they are to receive one another, even with all their differences, and to love one another, and to have good will and fellowship; and by doing it, they will fellowship Christ their Saviour; but by witholding, they withold fellowship for the dear Saviour. How blessed it would be to see the directions of the gospel lived out in this wicked and adulterous generation.

Our prosperity depends upon our carrying out this scriptural programme. All in whose hearts the love of God has been shed abroad, by the Holy Ghost given them, are brethren; they are our brethren. And while we are led by the Spirit of God, we shall love as brethren, and treat them as members of the same family. There must be, there will be, no saying, Stand off, "I am holier than thou."

This I understand to be the true position, and this our true direction for future operations, if we would prosper. Not let down the standard, but lift it up, and be filled with the Spirit, and have your faith grow exceedingly; taking all along with you possible. Be as liberal and kind as the grace of God will make you, contending "for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," and all will harmonize with the oneness of saints, and will unite all in the bond of gospel fellowship and love.

L. Boutell.

Br. Grant's Indorsement.

Do not fail to read with care the article on "Christian Union," by Br. Boutell. The subject is a very important one, and demands the hearty co-operation of every follower of Christ. Brn. and Srs., let us come up to the true standard of "christian union." Points of doctrine should never separate those who truly love Jesus. Let us cultivate Christian sympathy and union with all who follow Christ. If we have more light and truth than others, let us manifest the better spirit, and win others by our extra kindness into the same happy position we profess to enjoy. Let elbows be down, hands extended, hearts open, and full of love to God and man.

Inquiries.

Br. Storrs: I wish to ask a few questions on the Church. Does it exist in an organized form? If so, where is it? If it does not exist in such form, how can the children of men get into it and be saved? As some think it does exist, and others that it does not, can the Church be organized and have the Head, off in a far country? I think there is much darkness on the subject, for all sects think they are the Church.

James H. Jacobs.

Freetown, N. Y.

Our Br. will perhaps find an answer to the most of his queries in our article on the "Œcumenical Council." It is perfectly manifest to us that no organization on earth is the Church of Christ, and that there is no Scripture authority for any of them. Christ's Church is known by its fruits; and not by any organizations, ceremonies, or outward show. The true members of Christ's body, are the "light of the world:" not by making Creeds, Articles of Faith, or Declarations of Sentiments, nor organizations; but, saith the Saviour, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. v. 16. Such are of the "body of Christ"—they are the true church; known, not by connection with any visible organization, but by their Christ-likeness. Our Lord organized no churches, in the sense that the term organization is understood in these days. Love was the bond of union among His followers. The business of organizations, as carried on among professed Christians, has no authority from Christ or his apostles; it is a work too clearly selfish and for sectarian purposes, to claim Divine authority. But we forbear further remarks here. The evil will exist till Christ's return from heaven; then the true organization will take place, and the true materials be gathered out from the rubbish that sectarianism has heaped upon the gold, silver, and precious jewels of Christ their Lord.

An Interesting Communication.

Br. Storrs: I have just received a letter from England, from a dear friend and former Sabbath School companion, a part of which I will transcribe, thinking it will be interesting to you, and the readers of the Herald of Life.

You will remember that in the summer of 1868, I paid a short visit to my native land, after an absence of 20 years, and carried with me about $5 worth of your tracts and campaign documents, which I distributed on the steamer and among my relatives and friends in England; and I am happy to inform you that the seed has taken root and is bearing fruit. My dear friend writes to apologize for his long delay—assures me that he has not forgotten me, and acknowledges the reason of his long silence, to use his own words, is "Simply this. I have been looking at those pamphlets—I have read them and re-read them, and I must say that the more I read them the better I like them; especially the one on the Atonement—this is my excuse for not writing sooner. I had intended going over them again in connection with the Scriptures, and giving you my opinion of them in this letter; but I find I cannot do it and write you this year, for this reason; I was talking to a friend of mine on the subjects in hand, and consented to lend him the pamphlets for his perusal, and he was so taken with them that he took French leave to lend them again and again, to others of his friends and by that means I have been kept from my purpose; but I hope soon to have them at home again. I feel like one halting between two opinions, and cannot fully settle my mind as to which way I shall decide. I want to take Paul's advice,—Rom. xiv. 5, 'Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.' I can go as far as this, that there are no books that I ever read with so much interest as those you left me. Can you send me the work called Bible vs. Tradition and say in which way I can send you the money?"

In a P. S. he informs me, that he has learned that he can get the above work in London, and concludes by wishing me to send him occasionally a copy of the Herald of Life. I have already sent him the Herald of the last two weeks, and propose to send it every week after reading it myself, and the following pamphlets: Constitution of Man—God is Love—The Living Soul—Devil; Satan, etc., and Man's Destiny; which I think will about complete his list of the Campaign documents. I shall take pleasure in communicating to you the result of my friend's further investigations; and conclude, praying that God may accompany his own truth by the influences of his blessed Spirit, to the scattering of the refuge of lies by which our dear friends have been so long bound; and may the time, the glorious time soon arrive when we shall all see eye to eye in the blessed kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Yours in hope of eternal life.

Thomas Johnson.

Newark, N. J., Jan. 30, 1870.

From Wm. H. Spencer.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1870.

Br. Storrs: It seems a long time since I last wrote you, and I hope you will pardon the seeming omission. You and the dear Herald are constantly remembered. Oh how rich the Herald is, laden every week with the precious truth which has been graciously committed to us, and breathing such a spirit of love and devotion from our dear brethren and sisters. May we never cease to love the truth of "Life only through Christ;" and may we ever be animated with apostolic earnestness and devotion in its promulgation.

I often look back upon the day, when, amid blinding tears, we parted in the Herald office. I beheld those silvered locks, and thought very possibly the change would come ere we should meet again. The future was veiled; and perhaps it was well that I could not penetrate it. Though queries thick and fast followed each other, yet my precious Master presented himself in all His loveliness; and upon Him I could rest, feeling satisfied that the future was impenetrable to me. Were I destined to fall asleep to await the resurrection trumpet, in Jesus I feel that all is well. But I often feel an inward desire to be one of that number who shall remain unto His coming, and behold Him descend the pathway of the skies in the royal chariots of heaven, surrounded by that angelic host, whose number was "ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands," who celebrated His ascension, "Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."

"My longing heart cries out, oh, come!
Creation groans for thee!
Oh come and bring thy people home—
Bring immortality."

I am wandering far from what I intended to write you. When I wrote you last I thought surely that in my next letter I should be able to report much improvement in health, but again I feel that I am destined to disappointment. However, I feel that my general health has improved since I left New York, but the experience of the past two months leads me to believe that my lung difficulty will be no better until we have settled weather. During the latter part of last week I felt so well I thought I had got the upper hand of the disease; but yesterday and to-day I have been as bad as ever. This is doubtless the result of a cold which I have in some manner caught, and which has settled upon my lungs.

Later.—Feb. 3. So much time has elapsed since I commenced this letter, that I am obliged to finish it under another date. I am now feeling much better than when I commenced this letter, and could I recover from the soreness and oppressive pain in my lungs, I should feel pretty well. But in all things it is our duty to give thanks, for surely the Lord is good and His mercies endure forever. Praise His holy name!

I have been placed under great obligation to the brethren during my ill-health, for their continued remembrance of me. May the dear Master bless them; and I am sure He will. Many, whose names have become household words, I have never seen; but I can remember them at the throne of grace, in blissful anticipation of the glorious meeting by and by.

"Then from the craggy mountains
The sacred shout shall fly,
And shady vales and fountains
Shall echo the reply:
High tower and lowly dwelling
Shall send the chorus round
All hallelujahs swelling
In one triumphant sound,"
Our Lord has come!

The thought of the resurrection morning fills my heart with untold joy.

Much that I should like to write I must now omit. I have felt for some time that I would have to relinquish my trade and seek some business that would be more favorable for my health and yield a support for my family. But the Lord will open the way in this direction in His own good time and way.

May the Lord bless you for your article on the Holy Spirit; and also may the Lord bless the efforts of our dear Br. Wolcott to spread the truth, as indicated in his "Notice" in the Herald.

I was much interested in the article on "The Errors of Geology," as it contained the substance of an article which I had promised to write. I may, therefore, be excused from fulfilling it.

May the Lord bless and sustain you in your labors of love, is the prayer of your Br., waiting for the return of Christ.

From S. Cooper.

Br. Storrs: 'Mid the vicissitudes and changing scenes of human affairs we are found in this place, far from the line of travel of our Life brethren, whose calls and visits, at our former place we have appreciated, and which we shall miss somewhat here. But the Herald of Life is regularly and most gladly received, and perused with interest, believing its position the most in harmony with Divine truth, of any publication before the world. Your article in the last issue, upon the aid of the Holy Spirit, I have read with much satisfaction, as it touches a very important point; one full of interest to the believer, and upon which he delights to reflect, as upon it hangs his only hope. Without it he never would come to Jesus, could not know the love of God in Christ Jesus, nor would the word become a light to his feet or a lamp to his path. Silver and gold is not compared to it; its price is above rubies. Oh how ought we to "covet earnestly" its indwelling and instruction. Jesus has promised that "he (the Spirit) will guide you into all truth, and show you things to come;" and I cannot for a moment believe this wholly confined to the apostolic age, even the showing of things to come. There has been an interest awakened, and a small society of Adventists gathered here under the labors of Br. Potter, who is not a Life believer (i. e., with us), and I know of none about here. Br. P. knowing my faith, easily found an opportunity to preach against the non-resurrection of the wicked in his first discourse, the second day after my reaching this place, when he frankly acknowledged that the xv. of Cor. had nothing to do with the wicked; not even the 22d verse, which he quoted, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." So far so good. I hope he will not so closely close his eyes but what he will be able to see, by and by, that the plan of redemption nowhere embraces the unbeliever.

I understand Br. P. claims the non-resurrection destroys men's accountability. I would like to see from him or any one else, a written article attempting to base an argument upon that ground, well defining what he wishes to be understood by accountability. I think the truth might be made to shine more clearly by it, by showing its falsity. Others have stepped upon that platform. By whom it was laid I know not. But as I wish to be a consistent "peace-maker," I do not feel like pressing my views only when assailed or inquired of as to the reason of my hope, or meet with a candid reasoner; 'tis then there is hope of success. May the Lord prosper every right issue and effort. Shall lend the Herald to such as will receive it. Inclosed you will find five dollars to apply on my subscription.

One word more. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit," etc. Are those "things" the inspired word? If so, must man become a spiritual man before he can understand that which was written for his instruction? Surely no spirit can be trusted for a moment that is not in harmony with the word.

Woodstock Valley, Conn., Jan. 30, 1870.

From Maria M. Weaver.

Dear Pilgrims: Another year has opened to us. How shall we best improve the months before us? By living hour by hour; yea, moment by moment as becometh those that profess to be "new creatures in Christ Jesus." Making resolutions that we cannot keep is not the way to live; but keeping the vows we made in the past, when we promised to "leave all" and follow Christ. Ah! it has been hard to do it, sometimes. Father, mother, brother, sister, friends, neighbors, school-mates, all, all, for Christ and his gospel. Well do I remember the "resolution" I made, by God's help, to follow the Lord, not knowing but it might cost me home as well as friends, and send me, a little asthmatic girl of fifteen years, to seek shelter where God would provide it. But, heaven helping, I confessed faith in the Son of God and His promises. Although mocked and made to feel that I had chosen unpopular society, home was spared to me, and as for friends, I would not exchange the new ones, given me in the Lord, for the old ones who still mock at his coming. "Thus far the Lord has led me."

Dear Sr. Beach, we pray for you. The great Physician will deal skilfully with you. He knows your frame. He loves his patient, and will do for you according to infinite wisdom. Fear not. The grave looks dark: yet there's a shout of victory over it by and by. May we learn submission. It is my prayer, not submission to death, but to God. What is the grave in the mind of God? Can it devour his chosen ones? Never. It is but a shadow before him, under which his beloved sleep. No matter if it is the land of the enemy; God will turn it into good purposes—rest for weary, careworn souls; a hiding-place for the frail ones, while strong ones toil on.

We are again among entire strangers, but are rejoicing in hope of the "gospel" being "the power of God unto salvation" to a few who almost "believe." We trust that the investigation of the Life views now going on in this place will result in great good; but will not boast, only in the Lord. The subject is very new and attractive to some here. Said one, after meeting last night, "To die and be forgotten is punishment enough." It is, to those who have appreciative views of Life. We hope to send a new subscriber before long.

Let us all be "sober and hope to the end." Pray for me.

Your Sr., in Hope of Life.

Post Office, Westfield, Mass., Jan. 16, 1870.

Polly G. Pitts, Fredericksburg, Iowa, under date of Jan. 25, writes: I have a communication from Br. Z. Campbell, dated Sept. 1, 1869, which by some mistake did not come into my hands till a few days since. He will forgive for not responding to it when he knows this fact. I always prize a communication from any of our dear brothers or sisters, though I have never seen them face to face. It makes me feel that I live in their mind, as they do in mine; and that we have fellowship one with another. I wish to thank Br. Campbell through the Herald of Life for his kind communication, and for his brotherly counsel and advice, and for his care and earnest desire to defend the truth. We may not all see everything alike; but I feel that essentially we have been baptized by one Spirit, into one body. O, I bless the Lord for it. And,

"'Mid scenes of confusion, and creature complaints,
How dear to my soul is communion with saints;
And to find at the banquet of mercy there is room,
And to feel that dear Jesus will gather us home.

O these poor earthen vessels! how little they can bear of the blessed Spirit's influence. O, will it not be glorious, brother, when we put on immortality, and can bear to be filled with the Spirit of God? May we all hold up the Herald of Life as a banner; and when one standard-bearer falls asleep in Jesus, may another be ready to take his post.

PEACE.

"Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them."

GREAT peace have they that love thy law,
And naught shall them offend;
And o'er the heart, like holy awe,
This peace from God descends.

The peace of God that passeth thought,
O, may it fill my heart;
The peace of Christ I long have sought,
O may it ne'er depart;

The peace that like a river runs,
To fertilize and bless,
From God the fountain-head it comes,
And gives sweet joy and rest.

Its righteousness, like waves of sea,
Rolls o'er the happy soul,
Till joy surpassing speech there be—
'Tis joy beyond control.

BY ABEL LARKIN.

I HAVE read with much interest and some curiosity, the article of Br. Green as published in the HERALD of Jan. 5th, headed "ANTICHRIST." He seems to request correction if he is wrong on an important point. And as I am inclined to take some exceptions, should be glad to give the reasons; and in turn receive correction if wrong; and accord to him, as I hope he may to me, a pure, earnest desire to know important truth.

First then, Is the "hindering power," of Paul, the "Antichrist" of 2 John 7, as given in the article; even if we admit the Man of Sin is the Papacy, and that antichrist culminated in the incarnate doctrine advocated by Apollinaris and his party? And for which the Emperor Theodosius called a council at Ephesus in 431 to accept or reject, but in consequence of the equal division failed to decide. Then at the same place in 449 another council was called and confirmed that doctrine. But the emperor suddenly demised, and another council was called two years after at Chalcedon, having 630 bishops. This council, in 451, reversed the decision of the latter; and condemned what they had confirmed, and confirmed what they had condemned as genuine, i. e., Christ in one person but in two natures. This was soon after established by an Imperial law, making the disbelief of this doctrine a penal offence.

Now suppose the majority vote at this council, and the Imperial power that sustained the act of it, had been applied in confirming and establishing the act or creed of the other council; would it not then have been as much Roman Catholic as the one they accepted? Surely it would; for it was the sword and not truth that made it; and they could have swallowed and made that error Catholic, as well as many others that were accepted. They had and took their choice of doctrine, and was that choice the hindering power spoken of by St. Paul? This hindering power must have been, at last, in part Pagan Rome; the removal of which was necessary for Papal Rome to take her seat in the political chair, and capital of the former. So Papal had to wait for Pagan. But surely this does not prove that the Man of Sin is Papacy, though I admit in them some relation; he being the last head of the beast on which the woman (Papacy) rides as her Imperial protector. See Rev. xvii. But this head has a description peculiar to himself; and as Paul seems to make this subject important, I should be gratified could I extend the present thought of reflection and inquiry on it.

He says, "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day (the day of the Lord) shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the Son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showeth himself that he is God." "And then shall that wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."—2 Thess. ii. 3, 4, 8. Now the question is—Who is "that Wicked," "that Man," whose destruction is here described, and "whose coming is after the working of satan, with all power and signs of lying wonders?"—verse 9.

If the Pope or the Papacy, is what Paul means, then St. Peter's church at Rome, must be the temple of God; for there the Pope has only had his seat. But is it possible that Christ will come and claim that church as his; or, would Paul call it the temple of God? By whom, I ask, was it built, only by an apostate Christian power, and for the express purpose of promulgating and establishing Roman Catholicism? and nothing else in it has been taught. What attachment or respect has the true Christian for it, or the doctrine its supporters teach? If Paul calls it the temple of God, surely we should; and would not this make it obligatory to accept as genuine and of God, the doctrine that the builders and supporters advocate? for character can only give that title; and of course, there must be at least something godly in the character to justify the appellation. But can we find a godly trait in the Papal character of any note?

The question is, What temple is it, and who is this Son of perdition, who is to occupy it at the coming of Christ, and who is then to be destroyed? I will cite Mal. iii. 1–4. "And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple. But who may abide the day of his coming, and stand when he appeareth? And he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord as in the days of old, and as in the former years." The context plainly proves this to be the second coming, and that there will be a temple then erected.

And may we not suppose that they who seek him, or as Paul says, "And unto them that look for him shall he appear," etc., Heb. ix. 28,—(the wise who shall understand), Dan. xii. 10, are the people who are yet to build the temple for their God and the kingdom, and are to enter it with tribulation? "And serve him day and night in his temple."—Rev. vii. 16.

"And there was seen in his temple, the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings and voices and thunderings; and an earthquake, and great hail."—xi. 19.

Now the temple that is here spoken of is surely a church edifice, and the Revelation was written after the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem in A. D. 70, and that has not been rebuilt. But do not these prophecies plainly teach that there will be one at the time and place of the Advent, and of course the erection of it is yet future.

But a little further. Mat. xxiv. 15, and Mark xiii. 14, say, "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place," etc. Let me here stop and say that we should not confound these two prophecies with Luke xxi. 20. "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed about with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." This refers to the destruction it received by Titus in 70. But the two former are not fulfilled; and of course have not the same meaning; but refer directly to Daniel xi. 31, which says, "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate."

Now the city and the sanctuary were destroyed (see Daniel ix. 26) in A. D. 70. But in this case the sanctuary is only polluted. The phrase, "shall pollute the sanctuary," supposes the temple to have been rebuilt, and of course the sanctuary. But by whom is it polluted? Paul tells me (or I understand him) that it is the Man of Sin; the Son of perdition, (not an official dynasty); and who comes after "a falling away" or as the emphatic Diaglott has it, "Apostacy;" and the Douay, "Revolt," when he is revealed and destroyed by the Messiah. And for what, I ask? Because he made war on the saints, took their all, and seats himself in the temple they had built for their God. See Daniel vii. 21, 25, viii. 10–14; ix. 27; xi. 21, 31, 45; the latter reads, "And he shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, (Jerusalem; see ix. 16), yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him."

THE TRANSLATIONS OF THE SAINTS.

BY EDWARD PERKINS.

THE resurrection and translation of the saints, is shown to occupy two stages in its accomplishment.

At the first translation the Saviour comes from the highest heaven into the air, and then the raised and translated saints are caught up to meet him, probably unseen and unheard by the inhabitants of the earth, at a time of comparative peace and prosperity.—Luke xxi. 35. As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. 1 Thess. v. 2–5. The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night; for when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape. Matt. xxiv. 37–40. Two shall be in the field; one shall be taken and the other left. Luke xvii. 34. I tell you that two shall be in one bed, the one shall be taken, the other left. This translation consists of the righteous dead, and the 144,000 of the sealed living persons, and mostly taken out from amongst the Gentile nations being an earlier and smaller ingathering of the saints, called the FIRST-FRUIT, redeemed from among men, and called virgins; wise virgins giving the midnight cry, after the ratification of the antichristian covenant with the Jews at the beginning of Daniel's last week. The warning or preaching for more than seventy years past, on the near approach of the Second Advent, being a prelude to the midnight cry.

This small ingathering of 144,000, called the first-fruits, or Philadelphian Church by the Revelator, or the Celestial Mount Zion, or New Jerusalem saints, by St. Paul,—Heb. xii. 22, etc., or the Wise Virgins, by the Saviour.

The second translation of saints is a distinct company; or a later ingathering called the harvest,—Rev. xiv. 15, which takes place at the end of the Antichristian persecution, or a three and a half years tribulation.

After the translation of the wise virgins, three angels successively proclaim three gospel messages throughout the earth, warning mankind, that the hour of God's judgment is come; Rev. iii. 10; the hour of temptation; —Rev. xvii. 12.; the old ten kingdoms restored for one hour, under the antichrist;—Rev. xviii. 10, In one hour is thy judgment come. At the end of this hour, or three and a half years, the harvest of the earth is reaped, consisting of the repentant foolish virgins who inquired of the wise virgins for oil, and of the 144,000 sealed Jews of Rev., converted after their return and sojourn under the antichristian persecution; and a great multitude which no man could number of all nations, kindreds, peoples, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. See Laodecean church, Rev. iii. 14–22. We have quoted a few texts which speak of the first stage in the second advent as taking place at a period of peace and prosperity. While another class of texts represents it taking place at a time of great affliction and calamity, its second stage.

Daniel xii. And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which standeth for the children of thy people, and there shall be a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that is found written in the book. (Read Rev. vii.) Daniel's people have always been, and are now Jews, and are to be settled in Palestine by the Antichrist, and to undergo the trials and persecutions spoken of by the prophets; such GREAT TRIBULATION as was not from the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.—Matt. xxiv. 15–31, Mark xiii. 14–27.

Luke xxi. 25–27. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the seas and waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken, and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. The four Evangelists all agree that the Son of Man makes his personal appearance not at a time of eating, drinking, and feasting but when the earth is in a woful and desolate condition.

Zech. xiv. 1–4. Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations (the antichrist and his allies, who now surround Jerusalem) as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day on the Mount of Olives, (from whence he ascended 1800 years ago.)

Again, two different Greek words are used in Scripture to describe the second coming of the Saviour. The one signifying only his personal presence transferred to the vicinity of this earth; the other denoting the subsequent appearing or open manifestation of that presence.

A careful comparison of the passages in which these two words are employed to describe the second coming of Christ, shows that the word parousia, or presence of Christ in his first stage coming in the air, 1 Thess. iv. 16–17, when the world is as prosperous as in Noah's day. But the word epiphaneia, or visible appearing of Christ, is the term used in reference to the second stage of his advent, when every eye shall see him descending in glory at the end of the three and a half years of great tribulation to destroy antichrist by the appearing of his presence, 2 Thess. ii. 8, which until then is veiled in the clouds from the sight of the world at large.

The following texts refer to the second advent, or the presence of Christ's coming: Matt. xxiv. 3. What shall be the sign of thy coming? Parousia, etc.,—verse 27. As the lightning . . . so shall the [parousia] coming of the Son of Man be. Verse 37. As the days of Noah, . . . so shall also the coming (parousia), of the Son of man be. Verse 39. Till the flood came . . . so shall also the coming (parousia) of the Son of man be. 1 Cor. xv. 23. They are Christ's at his [parousia] coming. 1 Thess. ii. 19. What is our joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming [parousia]? And ten other texts in the Epistles where three of the other apostles make use of the same word, applicable to the first stage, [or parousia] of Christ's coming.

The word translated epiphaneia, from the Greek, appeareng or brightness in the English language, occurs only in six passages in the New Testament; and in the first five of them, refer to Christ's second advent. 2 Thess. ii. 8. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming. Titus ii. 13. Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the Great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ. 1 Tim. vi. 14. That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. 2 Tim. vi. 1. I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day and not to me only, but unto all them also who love his appearing.

In these texts, Christians are commanded to look for and love the epiphaneia of Christ, because it alone, and not the parousia, will be an object of sight; and the consummated blessedness of the world will not be brought in at the parousia, but at the later epiphaneia. Therefore the epiphaneia of Christ will be manifested to the wise virgins at his parousia, although not to mankind generally, until a subsequent period.

ROME, N. Y., Jan. 1870.

SINGULAR FORGETFULNESS.

A QUESTION arose between certain parties in the township of L——, which threatened to occasion legal difficulties, and a neighborhood quarrel. The settlement of the question depended upon certain disputed facts which had taken place many years before, and had passed for the most part from the memories of those who were cognizant of them. One man, however, Mr. Allworthy, was found who had a distinct recollection of all the facts connected with the matter in dispute. In the presence of both parties, he made a statement that astonished the hearers on account of the minute accuracy of his recollection, which was confirmed by certain legal documents to which he referred. His testimony arrested the controversy, and prevented the peace of the neighborhood from being disturbed.

"What a wonderful memory Mr. Allworthy has!" said Mr. Gilpin to his friend Jenks, as they were talking the matter over.

"Yes, he has a good memory," was the reply, "yet in some things he is singularly forgetful."

"Indeed!—in what things? He never forgets anything that he reads, or anything that passes under his observation; he never forgets to keep an appointment—I am quite curious to know what he does manage to forget."

"Some years ago he was settling up an estate, and one of the heir's was dissatisfied and brought some heavy charges against him—charges which if they had been believed, would have done him serious injury. He was believed by some for he made out a very plausible story, and several things happened which seemed to confirm his statements; and then there are in every community some persons who are ready to give credence to everything to the disadvantage of a man of good standing. The slanderer left for the West, and was absent a number of years. When he came back Mr. Allworthy received him just as if nothing had happened. To one remarking that it was strange that he could be so cordial to one who had tried so hard to ruin him, he replied; 'I believe he didn't behave very well toward me, but I don't remember much about it—I guess he has been sorry for it, if he hasn't we won't rake it out of the ashes of forgetfulness.'"

"That is true; but so much the better for him. His wife, however, says that he really seems to forget as well as forgive injuries."

It is said of one of the old Puritans that he had a good memory for benefits, but not for injuries received. There has been a succession of men of this kind, from the days of Stephen the first martyr, down to the present time. They are the salt of the earth.

There was another sense in which Mr. Allworthy was singularly forgetful. He had a great regard for the enjoyment of others, and seemed to forget his own happiness in his efforts to promote the happiness of others. "Mr. Allworthy never thinks of himself and of his own comfort," was a remark frequently made.

It is not probable that he lost anything by either of those kinds of forgetfulness. When a man forgets his own enjoyment in his care for the happiness of others, God takes his happiness into his own almighty keeping.—The Methodist.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

I WANT to tell you a story about a little girl that was taken captive many hundred years ago—not by the Indians as you sometimes read in history, although it was during a cruel war. I suppose most of you children, go on day after day, without remembering how really delightful it is to have a pleasant home, parents, and brothers, and sisters. Think of the dear mother who is first to greet your waking eyes in the morning, who thinks of you all day; gets your breakfast, and dinner, and supper; keeps your clothes in nicest order; attends to all your little wants and ills; tucks you in your tiny bed at night, and kisses down the sleepy lids, shutting the world out from her darling's sight. What if she were gone? Maybe some of you know a poor, motherless child among your playmates. How you all pity her.

This little girl must have had a very happy home. She lived in Asia which seems a great way off—doesn't it? She was a Jewish maiden; and this event happened long before our Saviour had come. But all the children then were taught to worship God and to believe in him; and I think she must have had a good deal of faith, and not only that, but remembered what she was taught: many things about the holy prophets—Moses, who had led their nation through the sea; Joshua, at whose word the sun stood still and the moon stayed its course until the people of God vanquished their enemies; and Elijah, who had called down fire from heaven; of prophets still in Israel, at whose bidding the dead were restored to life, the lepers healed, and the sick eased of their torments.

But a change came to this peaceful life. The Syrians, a great and powerful nation, made war upon the children of Israel, and carried away many captives—among them this little girl. Father and mother had been slain, the bright beautiful home destroyed, and she made a prisoner.

That was not all; the Syrians were idolators; they had put up a senseless image in a costly temple and made vain prayers to it. Do you suppose the little maid remembered her own God in this strange land?

The whole course of her life was changed. She must have been very sweet and winsome, for she was taken to a palace to wait on a grand lady. But there was no fond mother to listen to her prayers or to give her a tender good-night kiss. When her work was done, she crept away to her room and wept over the past, still so dear to her. Yet all her duties were performed cheerfully. Her mistress was kind and pleasant; and generally, when any one is good to you, you try to do just what she wishes. The little maid did, at least. Her mistress must have found her trustworthy, or she would not have listened to her afterward. And I dare say she tried to persuade the maiden to worship her idols.

I believe this little girl is the first missionary on record. The Jews you know were not told to go into the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. But she held fast to her faith, and, when the right moment came, confessed it without wavering, and told others how all-powerful was the God she worshipped. They might have thrown her into prison, or sold her to some cruel master; but she did not think of this. Do you believe we would all have as much courage?

In this palace, where everything was so lovely, where the mistress was sweet and gracious, the master kind, the servants well treated, and abundance everywhere, you fancy they must all have been happy. But there was one black shadow—Naaman, the ruler, a great and honorable man, high in favor with the king, and admired for his courage, was a leper. He was afflicted with a terrible and incurable disease that covered his whole body, just as if some one should have the small-pox all the time. In the midst of his triumphs how sad and miserable he must have been!

And Naaman's wife, loving her husband dearly, doubtless bewailed this sad fact with many tears. Among the Jews, to be a leper, was to become an outcast at once. I suppose Naaman and his wife prayed to their idols and offered sacrifices as was the custom with the heathen nations, but still he remained afflicted.

When this little captive maid saw her mistress so distressed, she began to think what she could do for her. It is very natural to try to please people who have been kind to us. There were many acts by which she could show her gratitude, and she doubtless tried them all, and yet her mistress remained sad. When everything failed she said:

"O my dear mistress! why do you weep and refuse to be comforted?"

"How can I be comforted when my husband is a leper?"

Then the little maid's courage and faith were put to the test. Maybe she wondered if any evil would befall her for the confession—whether her God would be laughed at, and her belief treated with scorn; but that did not deter her. She spoke out so boldly and bravely, that I think we must all love her:

"Would God, my Lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy."

You see she didn't say "perhaps he would," or that he might. She knew that her God was all-powerful, and that Elisha was his prophet. And although God had allowed her to fall into the hands of her enemies, still she trusted him and wanted to bear testimony for him; and this is why I call her a missionary. In that strange land she proclaimed the power of God. She was doing her duty everywhere, you see.

If she had been an untruthful, careless child no one would have paid any attention to her; but some one went in and told Naaman. That shows you the estimation in which she was held. And what seems most wonderful, Naaman went to the prophet, taking her simple word, and was healed. From that time he began to worship the true God.

It might have ended very differently. If the little maid had been thrust in prison for her faith—for even children have been persecuted for their religion—or sent out of her mistress's sight with contempt, it would have been hard to bear; but she told the truth in the face of all these difficulties and God blessed her. Probably she was never restored to her native land; but she knew that God was watching over her everywhere, and she took this blessing to her master as her reward.

She did not feel afraid to bear witness for the truth. Sometimes you know, when the truth seems hard to tell, little girls, and little boys too, slip over it without exactly uttering a falsehood, but allowing one to be believed. And though at Sunday-school, we all sing of Jesus, and confess our faith in him, how many do it elsewhere?

I suppose you all have an idea that, in order to be a missionary, one must go hundreds of miles away, and devote one's self entirely to the work. But this little girl performed her daily duties so scrupulously that her life spoke for her. Then her faith was so strong that those who listened believed.

Is there no truth you can tell for the Saviour's sake?—no little act to playmates and friends that will bear witness for your love? We never do it when we are cross, or fretful, or disobliging. She might have said; "My master, Naaman, is a heathen; it doesn't make any difference whether he is healed or not. If it was one of my own people, I would tell him of the prophet." And so you see she would have lost a noble opportunity of bearing noble witness. The Saviour you know, was ready to do good to everybody; and I think the captive maid had some of his spirit.

Perhaps you believe the good you can do is not worth attempting, because it will be so small. You cannot heal any one of disease, or convert him, but you can show a tender, loving spirit. You can pity the poor and afflicted; you can be kind to one another; and when the time comes, you can bear witness for Christ's sake.

I love to think of this little girl, with her true missionary spirit and her unwavering faith. How glad she must have felt, and how her mistress must have rejoiced! And though there is no further account of her, we know she still believed, and still did her duty, in the path of life to which God had called her. And that is all he asks of us. Dear children, how many will try to do it?—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

GREAT DIABOLUS!

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

"THE Independent" says:

. . . "Here is a sample of a penny book published for Roman Catholic schools by Duffy, of Dublin, 'permissu superiorum:' 'As the Devil is king of Hell, he is also judge. When a soul comes into Hell, condemned by the judgment of God, he executes the judgment. He finds whereabouts in Hell the soul is to be, how it is to be tormented, and what devils are to torment it.' Children are also taught in the same series that for the lightest faults they are to wear a dress of fire, walk on a red-hot floor, drink boiling liquid and thirst the more, and in perpetual and horrible hunger eat their own flesh. Such a book is likely to make infidels of all who are commanded to accept it for gospel."

This is a very natural deduction from the premises, so fully and so long taught by the Papal church. If there is a personal spirit-devil, and God needs him to effect his great purpose of grace, and man needs him for his trial, why not have the devil for executive officer? He makes a good accuser. Would he not do well in electing the place (in hell), and the special application of fire for the lost soul? "But this is the Papal idea!" So it is the Protestant idea, where the Protestant dogma keeps a personal spirit-devil to torment, and puts souls in hell to be tormented. The thought is, really, the same in either case; for the soul goes to hell before the judgment day, and the devil has charge of the infliction, as many Protestants hold. It is simply as broad as it is long. The notion of a personal spirit-devil and of a hell of torment for souls, or for men, go together, and they ought to, as they had the same origin—Papal darkness. One, as well as the other, will be driven out of the gospel church, in due time.

The torment theory being abandoned, leaves the greater inconsistency still in the theology of a large class who have such a tormentor, but none for him to torment; for they believe that death is the penalty of sin (the devil does not cause that), and the second infliction is at the hands of Christ, after he (not the devil), has turned tormentor; for the new life, which he gives them, is a part of the programme. Thus all the tormenting is done without any devil of this kind.

Next, the doctrine of temptation. The evil condition and the evil influences increase. Who does it? Who is made responsible? Wicked men. Evil men and seducers. If men are "deceiving and being deceived," and "led away by their own lusts and enticed"—especially in the last days—in the "strong delusion" which God (not the devil) shall send them, because they "believed not the truth," and still resist it, there is no necessity for the existence or action of a spirit-devil-general, who should control evil actions, and hence be responsible for them. There is no more truth in the dogma of a personal, created, omnipresent devil (tempting men everywhere, at the same time), however created and endowed, or fallen and degraded, when taught by a Protestant than when taught by a Catholic.

Created, he could not have an attribute of Deity. Uncreated, God were not supreme.

"Does not the Bible teach it?" The Bible, forsooth! The Bible teach a doctrine which is inconsistent with its own most plain statement of man and his accountability! Inharmonious with, and contradictory to its own authority! Destruction of the God it reveals? Never! Do not talk so.

We are glad that "The Independent" has admitted that the doctrine of torment for souls, "makes infidels of those who are commanded to receive it as gospel." Does not "The Independent" hold it as gospel? If not, how is it held? How is it held by many Protestants? How is it taught by them for the people to receive? It is the large book (as interpreted) that makes Infidels; but not when read without the "commands" which attach a personal spirit-devil as tormentor and future torment to it. The idea of torment as given to the Irish children is no worse than that given American adults by many teachers. It only specifies, for the sake of impression, a very good plan, if the fact exists.

Talk not about Infidels! Men must and will throw away the book before they will admit such horrid conceptions of God and his administration.

Why then do not vast multitudes turn away from it, who are, more or less, connected with such teachings? Simply, because they do not believe the teaching. A better thought of God is latent. A conception that God is true, is yet found, and this holds to God as a being of love. Men who have "good and honest hearts" need no such personal, fallen angel, horned and hoofed "Diabolos" to brandish a Neptune's trident, or a whip of scorpions; nor yet a prospective home in a lake of lava, to cause a fear sufficiently strong to secure faithfulness. But many professors now, when the old Romish inculcation is disturbed, really urge, "Great is le Diable" (of tradition), as lustily as the heathen artisans creed, when their demon worship was uptorn, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

THE ROMAN COUNCIL.

WE copy the following from "The Methodist." It is in its "Foreign Correspondence," by DR. HURST, dated at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, Jan. 5, 1870. It gives us some insight into the despotism of assuming leaders and rulers, who fancy God has made them the keepers of their brethren's faith and practice. We place all these councils, synods and conferences in one category—they all seek to be "lords over God's heritage;" i. e., the leaders in them do; others may not think of such business. Let all Christians be warned by Rome's pride and haughtiness, to keep clear of ministerial combinations, which always lead to lordships.

ABOUT THE VATICAN COUNCIL.

Not a single event, great or small, connected with the Vatican Council, has taken place within the last fortnight that does not promise extreme measures. Just now, the passage of a decree ordaining the doctrine of papal infallibility is regarded by every one as a foregone conclusion. The Ultramontanes have made wonderful progress in a very few days, and some of the very men on whom the Liberals had most relied have backed squarely down. Prince Schwarzenberg, Cardinal, Primate of Bohemia, and what not, has belied the good name of his heroic family and even his own spoken and written words, and will not say any thing more against the proposed dogma. And so of many others. The Bull issued by the Pope on December 14th, withholding from the bishops the power of absolution in cases of excommunication, unless specially granted by him, was a direct thrust at all ecclesiastics below the Pontiff, and at all Catholic countries where the Episcopacy has possessed, or at least so imagined, a measure of independence, and foreboded the worst evils feared by the Liberal members of the Council.

But every measure adopted by the Pope for the regulation of the Council is only in keeping with this piece of outrageous arrogance. One of his first acts, which promised the severe restraint to which he designed to subject the body during the whole session, was his extraordinary order for the appointment of the committees—which, in Rome, are called congregations—and particularly of their chairmen. There are minute data concerning the organization of the Council of Trent, and even of the later previous Councils; and these show that each committee had the right of choosing its own chairman. But Pope Pius IX. will not leave such a post to the majority of the committees, every member of which has been nominated only with the greatest precaution, but appoints each chairman himself. He also appoints all the secretaries and under secretaries, and even the President of the Council is, in each case, his nominee.

At first sight, it would seem that it does not make much difference who is chairman of a committee, but in these old countries a man is not buried and made harmless by being thrown into the seat of president or vice-president either. In Catholic countries especially, the presiding officer, or his possible substitute, is no mouth-piece, but a power. The servant in any Protestant and Republican assembly is, in a Catholic one, the master.

Now for the reason for the Pope's appointment of committee chairmen. Not a single question can come before the Council which has not previously been laid before one of these four committees. The Pope has a sort of committee of his own, twenty-four in number, his theological body-guard, to whom all questions must concentrate that have passed the other committees. The men constituting it are Ultramontanes of the purest water, and it is, therefore, impossible that any question, inconsistent with their principles, will ever appear before the Council. Who can tell how many resolutions and speeches on the civil-marriage and non-confessional schools, carefully prepared by bishops crossing mountain, desert, and ocean, will never be heard in Rome? The hands of every liberal-spirited man are as thoroughly helpless as if he were in the innermost dungeon of St. Angelo.

The same jealous watch is kept over the conduct of the Liberals out of doors as in the regular progress of the Council. This can be seen in the arrangements made for the entertainment of the delegates, a matter placed solely in the hands of the Jesuits, to whose many accomplishments must now be added that of knowing "how to keep a hotel." Every member was examined on reaching Rome; that is, where no report of his opinions had preceded him, and the Liberals were spotted. One Liberal is, therefore, lodged with several, often six or eight, of the faithful. Where a bishop can afford independent lodgings on a grand scale, he is not subject to such a strait-jacket. This is the case with Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, the acknowledged head of the Liberals. He is shown the cold-shoulder by the Pope whenever possible, but minds his own business. He has hired the Villa Grazioli, and lives in grand style. His entertainments are described as princely, and no doubt his viands and strong wines have already caused attacks of indigestion to many thin pilgrim-bishops from Northern Africa and Western Asia, accustomed all their lives to live on fruits and vegetables.

The American delegates are no more respected at headquarters than any others; their country is regarded by the old man of the Vatican as a worse Pandora's box than ever existed in pagan fable. They are watched with Argus eyes, the presumption being always against them; and every one of their movements, the visits they make, the words that involuntarily escape them over their doughnuts and Marsala, are scrutinized and reported with no less than Jesuitical minuteness.

IS IT SAFE?

BY ROBERT C. BANGS,

Principal of the Michigan Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind.

THIS question is often asked with fear and trembling, and there are multitudes of cases when the question is a wise one. Only fools or madmen will dash on blindly without asking whither they are going, or what the consequences may be. And yet there are times when the question "Is it safe?" is not the one that has the noblest ring to it. Safety is not always a paramount consideration. Questions are continually arising that require men to commit themselves to certain courses, and to face the consequences; and it will not always do for them simply to ask, "Is it safe?"

The relation of a pastor to his people is, or at least ought to be, a very different one from that of a lawyer to his client. No matter what mean scrape a man gets into, a fee will always secure the services of a lawyer to help him out of it. His attorney is paid to take up his side of the case; and he undertakes to stand by his client for a consideration, and he will do so as long as the consideration lasts. The attorney on the other side does the same thing by his client; and doubtless justice is promoted by having both sides presented as ably as possible.

In the pastoral relation there is in many cases a tacit assumption on the part of the pastor that he is in honor bound to defend the doctrines of the denomination as set forth in its confession of faith; and the people rather expect him to do it. This, it seems to us, is a mistaken view of the case. A pastor should not consider himself a paid advocate, whose chief business it is to confirm the faith of people in dusty dogmas that they already believe in with sufficient firmness. If a Methodist, he is not bound on all occasions to defend the doctrine of falling from grace. If a Baptist he is not under contract to wind up every discourse with a few remarks on baptism. If an Episcopalian, he is not pledged at every service to present the claims of the Church, or to prove the doctrine of Apostolic Succession. But he is bound to learn all that he can of divine truth, and of its relation to all human activities; and then it becomes his duty to give that truth to his hearers fresh from his own head and heart. In the words of a distinguished Western judge, the minister should preach the truth as God gives it to him; and not as he gave it to his grandmother. But truth is a dangerous thing to handle. All Christians admire it in the abstract; but there are particular truths and particular applications of truth that are apt to be offensive even to the best of them. The studious minister, diligently seeking after truth, may climb to such heights that his flock will not find it easy to follow him; and they may prefer to remain quietly below his level, and chew the cud of sound doctrine that good but not progressive shepherds have from time immemorial fed them with. They are used to that kind of spiritual food, and they may not care to have the bill of fare varied. A faithful minister ought to keep in advance of his flock in the largeness of his views and in his range of thought. But let his whole soul once get ablaze with a new truth, or with a new conception of an old one, and in nine cases out of ten, before giving it to the world with all the force that he can put into it, he is tempted to ask; "Is it safe?" Will it not give offence? Shall I not be looked upon as a wolf in sheep's clothing, rather than as a good shepherd, who is ready to give his life for the sheep?" A variety of reasons makes this question of safety a most natural one. Ministers are but men; and, when a man is comfortably settled over a prosperous church, with every prospect of rising to a high and influential position in his denomination, it is not strange that he should be tempted to preach truth that is popular, rather than such truth as will bring down upon him the disapprobation of half his hearers. It is comparatively easy to preach good sermons upon subjects that are not felt as heavy blows dealt directly upon darling sins, to the great discomfort of the darling sinners. . . . What wonder, then, that a minister should ask, "Is it safe?" and hold his tongue, rather than ask, "Is it right?" and lift up his voice like a trumpet! David thought Nathan spoke like an oracle till he said, "Thou art the man;" and reverend doctors of divinity have led conservative flocks into green pastures, beside still waters, by preaching upon the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and letting the everyday sins of everyday sinners carefully alone. This reluctance to stand up for the truth on any and on all subjects, whether it be popular or not, is not what we have a right to expect from ministers of the Gospel. Their temptations to preach what will please their hearers may be great; but they cannot justify themselves for keeping any part of the divine light that may be given them hid under a bushel.

A minister sometimes finds himself committed to a creed with which he is not in full sympathy. The further he pushes his investigations the more perfectly is he satisfied that he does not and cannot believe all that he is supposed to or all that his church believes; and then comes up before him the question, "Is it safe" for me to let the world know what I really think, and how far I have wandered from the accepted standards? Perhaps it is not safe, but it would be right; and it is too bad that the eagle-soarings of many a noble spirit should be restrained by the bars of a cast-iron creed.

Lord Bacon commenced one of his immortal works in these words: "Francis of Verulam thought thus." And so ought every religious teacher to be able to say of his teachings. They should be his thoughts, his opinions; and not merely timid utterance, tortured into unison with what others expect him to believe.

"Is it safe?" is a question that some ministers ask themselves; and that others, by the pungency and individuality of their preaching, set their hearers to asking. There are men who are great admirers of truth; who would have nothing but truth preached; but who question the propriety of preaching the whole truth, because it may not be safe. Especially if the minister should present views of doctrine different from what they have been accustomed to consider sound, they are troubled. They are afraid of any thing new, and keep a sharp lookout against everything that smells of heresy. No watch-dog ever guarded his master's dwelling more bravely than they do the orthodoxy of their minister. They think that the price of orthodoxy, like that of liberty, is eternal vigilance. They remind us of a passage in the Adventures of Baron Munchausen. The Baron says that on a voyage to the East Indies he took with him a favorite pointer. When they were still three hundred leagues from land, this sagacious animal surprised everybody on board by pointing. This he continued to do for an hour. The good Baron felt sure that his favorite scented game, and boldly bet a hundred guineas that game would be found in half an hour.

In less than half an hour some of the sailors harpooned an immense shark, and, on cutting him open, it is said that they found no less than six brace of live partridges. Munchausen's dog was a thorough-bred sporting character. Three hundred leagues from the land he scented game and he pointed. Not unlike this famous pointer are many sharp-eyed, sharp-scented, bigoted men (sharp because they are narrow), who level their noses at every liberal idea, at every religious opinion that differs from their own, at every progressive movement in society, exactly as if they scented heresy, and were resolved to point it out and let it receive the due reward of its heterodoxy.

Now, when the minister has to ask, "Is it safe?" every time he contemplates giving utterance to an original idea, and when the church and congregation are disposed to ask, "Is it safe?" whenever they hear one, freedom of thought and freedom of speech have a hard time of it. Let the minister, loving all truth, for its own glorious excellence, seek for it as for hid treasure. Let him ask not is it safe to proclaim it, but is it right; and when he does proclaim it, openly and honestly and boldly, then let all the people say Amen.

—The Independent.

A BEAUTIFUL IDEA.—That was a beautiful idea in the mind of a little girl who, on beholding a rose-bud, where, on the topmost stem, the oldest rose was fading, while around and below it three beautiful crimson buds were just unfolding their charms, at once artlessly exclaimed to her brother, "See, Willie, these little buds have just awakened in time to kiss their mother before she dies!"

THE BROKEN BOTTLE.

BY Z. CAMPBELL.

JER. xix. 10, 11. The prophet was commanded to get a potter's earthen bottle, and to gather the elders of the people and of the priests; and to set before them the multitude of their sins, etc., and then in their sight to break the bottle, never more to be mended, as in the 10th and 11th verses. Some suppose this is evidence that Israel and Judah will never be restored to the favor of God, because the bottle cannot be mended, but that they are utterly cast away.—Rom. xi. 1, 2. But not so; to Israel was granted the high privilege of making an entire conquest of all the nations of the world, for the purpose of reducing them from paganism to the worship of the living and true God.

And it appears that David did, at one time, contemplate making himself a universal monarch; and that he would have done it had his people hearkened unto the Lord, and had walked in his ways. But because of their wickedness they were incompetent to govern themselves, and much less to be intrusted with the government of the world. This David perceived, and he lamented it in the following strain: "Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Isra'l had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. The haters of the Lord should have submitted themselves unto him; and their time would have been forever."—Psa. lxxxi. 13, 14, 15.

This is what would have been done had the people been righteous; and they would never have lost a battle, but would have pushed their conquest to the uttermost ends of the earth; and there would have been no interregnum from David to Christ. See Psa. cxxxii. 12.—"If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them; their children also shall sit upon thy throne forevermore."

Had the conquest gone on under David, he would have broken the nations with a rod of iron, and would have dashed them in pieces like a potter's vessel (Psa. ii. 9), and Jeremiah's bottle would not have been broken.

But as Israel were too wicked to rule the nations, or even to govern themselves, their government was dashed in pieces, like the broken bottle, never more to be made whole again. So now, instead of David, Christ will subjugate the nations to the government of God; and instead of the Jews having this honor with him, they are rejected as a government and a nation, and Gentile Christians are substituted in their stead.

Therefore, their bottle can never be mended; that is, as a nation they will have no share in the conquest of the world; but instead of conquerors they will be conquered by the King of kings and Lord of lords. So the text does not teach that the Jews will not be restored to the favor of God; but it does teach that their government will not be restored to them so as to make them rulers of the world.

AUBURN, Me., Feb. 5, 1870.

IMMORTALITY OF THE WICKED CONSIDERED.

BY HORACE BIGELOW.

WILL the unregenerate, wicked person have an opportunity to repent in the future life? No; because there cannot be a future life to an immortal being; it must be inevitably the continued present.

If the body is the only covering of the immortal part, and is cast off, it never had life; and, like the skin of a reptile, cast off, is lifeless; but the soul, like the reptile, lives, and must live eternally. As there is no Scripture testimony of such a person having immortality, except Gen. iii. 4, advocates must have this as their rock on which to found their belief, "Ye shall not surely die." How full, concise and complete the doctrine!

The phraseology in teaching, in this our present day, is changed; and is, "Ye are immortal; you have an immortal soul; the soul never dies."

The principle taught in the Garden of Eden is not changed by this diction, or by the traditions or doctrines of men. It is plain, inherent, unconditional immortality of man: plain serpent doctrine, "Ye shall not surely die."

In verse 13, the woman (too late), finds fault with the serpent's doctrine, saying, "The serpent beguiled me and I did eat." The Lord God cursed the serpent for teaching the doctrine. See verses 14 and 15.

Surely the Lord God would not have cursed the serpent for teaching the truth! Where is the false teaching? In verse 22 the Lord God substantiates that which was spoken by the serpent in verse 5, for he says, "Behold the man has become as one of us to know good and evil." Then the deception or false doctrine is contained in the fourth verse, "Ye shall not surely die."

Did the Lord God curse the serpent for preaching this little short sermon of immortality to Eve? Would he have cursed him if he had said, Ye are immortal? Would it have been a different doctrine if he had said to Eve, You have an immortal soul?

Did the serpent preach a false doctrine to Eve, if Adam had an immortal soul? He must have had, if his posterity of the present day have. The posterity must be the same as the progenitor.

Will the Lord hold those guiltless who preach the same doctrine, and yet curse the serpent? Does not the Pope (who wishes to be thought and called infallible), with his whole retinue of adherents teach the serpent's doctrine, "Ye shall not surely die"—ye are immortal? and do not all the body of self-styled "orthodox" Christians declare, preach and defend the same as Bible truth?

A contradictory statement of the Lord God is recorded in Gen. ii. 17.—"For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" or (marginal), "dying thou shalt die." The recorded facts that Adam eat and died (see Gen. iii. 12, 13; also, v. 5), substantiates the statement of the Lord God, and is full proof of the fallacy of the doctrine of the serpent. In verses 16, 17, 18 and 19 of Gen. iii., he tells the woman and man the consequences of transgressing His command, and finishes the climax of evils by saying, "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." What! Adam return to dust, to the same condition it was in when there was no Adam! Surely, for this reason, there can be no Adam at the present time.

The serpent's doctrine impeaches the testimony of the Lord God; and no wonder that he was punished for promulgating it.

Adam and Eve believed, eat, died, and lost an eternity of life. Will not the believers and teachers of a synonymous doctrine of immortality meet with a similar loss, or fate, it being a plain contradiction to the teaching of the Lord God to Adam, "Ye shall surely die?" This was spoken to Adam, not to one half, or a smaller portion of him; to the "living soul," which the Lord God had formed from the dust of the ground, and the breath of life (common air), was performing that office which the Lord God had assigned to it; no part was excepted from the sentence, "Ye shall surely die." And he died. The living soul, called Adam, received the wages of sin, death. Yes, DEATH. The everlasting punishment of the wicked, unbeliever in Christ. —Rom. vi. 23.

SOMETHING ABOUT OUR TEMPER.—If we have a bad temper, lose it. If a good one, keep it. If a doubtful one, make it certain. If a sweet one, use it for the benefit of your friends. If a jolly one, cultivate it for example's sake, and the delectation of the community. If none at all, avoid looking into the mirror lest you see a goose.

DAYS PASSING BY.—"My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle."

3,600	"	hour.
86,400	"	day.
3,566,227	"	year.

ONE OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S ANECDOTES.—"In England, no man thinks of blacking his own boots," said a haughty Briton once to Mr. Lincoln, whom he found polishing his calfskin gaiters. "Whose boots does he black?" quietly responded Uncle Abe.

REASON FOR THE GOWN.—I know a city clergyman who always preaches in a silk gown, though he is not an Episcopalian. "It saves my coat," said he to a friend. "I can wear a seedy coat in the pulpit and no one is the wiser." "But," said his friend, "the silk gown!" "Ah!" said the shrewd parson, "the ladies always furnish the gown."

WHAT LIFE SHOULD BE.—When the Hindoo priest is about to baptize an infant he utters the following beautiful sentiments: "Little baby, thou enterest the world weeping, while all around thee smile. Contrive so to live that you may depart in smiles, while all around you weep."

IDLENESS AND RELIGION.—Let us not be suspected of undervaluing that comfort and internal peace which the world cannot give, and which are generally the portion of men sincerely pious. But it is of consequence that all pious persons should be aware that, if we are idle, even religion cannot make us happy; and that the most certain cure for low spirits and constitutional dejection is the zealous discharge of our active and social duties, in conjunction with and springing from religion.

DEFINITION OF FAITH.—A little girl five years of age, on being asked what is faith, artlessly replied: "It is doing just what God wants us to do, and asking no questions about it." This covers the whole field; perfect trust, combined with implicit obedience.

THOUGHTS ON ISA. XIII. AND XIV.

BY B. I. THOMPSON.

AMID the wide-spread unbelief of the Word of God at the present time, it is good occasionally to review some of the marked instances of its certain fulfilment in the past. My mind was called to this subject not long since, while reading the xiiith and xivth chapters of Isaiah. In these the prophet breaks out in a most vivid portrayal of impending wrath upon Babylon; and in exultation of her fall, he uses in the xivth chap. what some critics have styled the boldest figure found in the world's literature.

In the 28th verse of this chapter the prophet says, "In the year that King Ahaz died, was this burden." Now let us, for a mement consider the state of Babylon at that point of time. King Ahaz died, according to Usher, about B. C. 726. Babylon was then just throwing off the yoke of the kings of Nineveh; her name was not yet famous among the nations; her walls and palaces were as yet unbuilt; her history was yet to be written. It was not till the succeeding reign of Hezekiah, that the Jews had any dealings with, or knowledge of Babylon. For two long centuries after this she went on increasing in power, grandeur, and riches, till at last she stood forth the first great universal empire. It was before all this that Isaiah penned his scathing denunciation; before she had said even "in her heart," "I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. . . . I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High."—xiv. 13, 14.

Well might some of the wise men—and they very probably saw Isaiah's prophecy, during the captivity—turn to the Jewish captives and say, "What do you think now of your prophet's burden? Forsooth is it not Jerusalem 'that will never be inhabited or dwelt in from generation to generation?'"

Such taunts made them sad at heart, as we learn from the cxxxvii. Psa., but their fa th in their coming deliverance, and in the certain doom of their oppressors, is shown in the 7th and 8th verses of this same Psalm.

Yes, Jehovah's word had gone forth, that "Babylon the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation; neither shall the Arabian pitch his tent there, neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there."—xiii. 19–21. "I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water, and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction saith the LORD of hosts."—xiv. 23.

Modern travellers tell us that this has been most literally fulfilled; that, that once very fertile country, is now but a barren waste; that the Euphrates loses itself in the marshes and pools of stagnant water that abound; that even the untamed Arab hurries past the ruins so as not to be compelled to pitch his tent there, even for a single night; and one traveller remarks that the ruins were so full of serpents—"doleful creatures"—tnat he dare not examine them as closely as he desired.

Midway in this prophecy, xiv. 1st and 2d verses—for these two chapters are but one,—we find a most gracious promise to Jacob. Has this been fulfilled? If so, when and where? If not, who will say that it will not be yet as literally fulfilled as the woes have been upon Babylon? Let us "believe all that the prophets have written."

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 4, 1870.

FROM MRS. CHARLES BARNES.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: It is a blessed title, although I heard it called the "Herald of Death," by one who, I think, has "another gospel" even of death. But it is good to feel we have passed from death unto life; and the life we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God, whom we soon expect to see.

I want to say to Br. J. C. Wheeler, his article in the last paper was meat in due season to me. I know it was indited by the Spirit of God. O, let us always obey its teachings, then we build each other up.

I am sorry to see an effort to put far off the evil, or burning day, and thereby cause the enemy to rejoice or scoff at our hope. If the Bible did not teach the purifying of the earth by fire I should not believe it. But not its destruction, for the earth abideth forever.

Can we say with Paul, I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, if we deny it? I must speak plain: Dear brethren and sisters I feel the necessity of it. I see such an effort on the part of some to take our crown. Jesus says, Let no man take thy crown. O, let us have the trial of faith and come off conquerors.

I speak to the wise ones; judge ye what I say. Now is our time to exhort one another while it is called to-day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Yours praying, "Thy kingdom come."

WILBRAHAM, Mass., Jan. 30, 1870.

ELD. GEO. WAUGH, Stoughton, Mass., writes: I have of late heard of, and seen, some considerable feeling in regard to the non-resurrection of the wicked; and John v. has been taken to prove that they will be raised; and I have been told that I must explain away this chapter, to believe that they will not be raised. I have carefully examined it, and the accompanying MS. is just what I believe the text teaches.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 16, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"CAN YOU MEET IT?"

A RESPECTED Br. preacher writes us: "I call your attention to Eld. J. H. Waggoner's work vs. your views. Can you meet it?"

Though we had that work sent us some time since, we had not time to examine it, and probably never should have but for the above inquiry, as we expect nothing new from our opposers on the question of the reliving of the wicked dead. But on the above suggestion we read the entire work of 100 pages at one sitting; and will say, to-day, we find nothing new to meet; and are as confirmed as ever that neither reason nor revelation warrant the positions of Eld. Waggoner, if he really has any position on the question. He has written in a good spirit, for the most part, and we respect him for that. We have neither time nor space to say more this week, but may say more hereafter.

"THE RESOLUTION" passed at the last anniversary of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION, restricting our replying to articles in the same issue, we have no doubt was well intended; but it was not so well considered as it should have been, and will undoubtedly be rescinded at the next anniversary. Some of our correspondents have complained of it; but we have declined giving their complaints in our columns, at present. Let us be patient; it will come out right ere long.

"TWO TRANSLATIONS."

ON the subject of two translations of saints there are diverse opinions by students of prophecy; and it might be expected that we should add something to what was said a few weeks since on the question, as a defence of the idea of two such events has been advocated in this paper. But we think a protracted discussion on that subject is not desirable, and would not be likely to be productive of much good. That there is to be one translation "at the last trump," and that this will embrace all who are in Christ, when the "Lord himself shall descend from heaven," no believer in the second advent of the "same Jesus that was taken up into heaven," need doubt.

As to the idea that a portion of the living saints at the second advent, will constitute "the first-fruits," and have a translation in advance of others, we do not see any Scripture authority for it, and think there is none. Christ is expressly called "the first-fruits," (1 Cor. xv. 23) of the resurrection; and it is added, "afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." And Paul testifies, further on, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Here is no idea of two translations; nor do we find any such idea contained in any literal language of the Bible; and any resort to the symbols of Revelation in proof of such doctrine, is very clear evidence that such an idea is, at best, only an opinion and not a revelation; and the speculations about the "144,000" we think, are very far from carrying any conviction to an impartial mind. If that number is to be taken in a literal sense, why not accept the whole account as literal? and then, all men, not excepting the twelve apostles, are excluded; for they are represented as not "defiled with women; for they are virgins."—Rev. xiv. 4. We repeat what we said last week, on another subject, any doctrine which can only be proved by a resort to the symbols of Revelation, and making them literal, is, at best, a very suspicious doctrine, and unworthy of our belief. But we leave the subject of two translations as the speculations of men who mean well, if mistaken.

NOTICES OF VARIOUS WORKS.

THE FAMILY FRIEND, London, England, Published monthly by S. W. Partridge & Co., at No. 9, Paternoster Row. No. 1, New series for January 1, 1870, is received. It is a small quarto of 16 pages. The first page of this number is entirely occupied with a fine engraving of the late GEORGE PEABODY. Several other engravings are found in the body of the work. It appears to be well calculated to interest both old and young. Terms, "One Penny," English.

ALSO, from the same source, we have received the "BAND OF HOPE REVIEW," a larger quarto of four pages, beautifully illustrated: a child's paper. Sent to any part of the United States or Canada, in parcels of eight copies at 7 shillings (English) per year.

WE have received several numbers of "THE YOUNG Pilgrim," a small quarto of four pages, "Issued semi-monthly by the Advent Christian Publication Society," Boston, Mass., (167 Hanover St.) Terms: single copy 50 cents. It is a very pretty sheet for the little folks.

CHURCH CREEDS, ETC.

WE clipped the following from the "Brooklyn Eagle" of last Saturday. Brooklyn is the location of the church spoken of.

THE LIBERALITY OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

Some of the Orthodox religious papers remark unfavorably on the recently developed liberality of Plymouth Church in dispensing with subscription to the articles of faith. The Congregationalist says:

The abounding charity—so called—of Henry Ward Beecher, and his church, in so modifying their arrangements to admit Unitarians and Universalists to their fellowship, finds a most fitting illustration in the following incident, which we copy from the Springfield Republican of the 24th inst.: "The late dean of Cape Town, in relating his experience with tracts, found that the charity inculcated in them led one of his penitents to say, 'I'm a changed man, sir, through tracts; once I cared for neither God or devil, and now I loves 'em both alike.'"

The Examiner says:

We should be glad to see an Orthodox Congregationalist frame a reason for continuing in fellowship with Plymouth Church that would not equally justify the same attitude toward Unitarian churches, or that will not implicitly condemn the steps taken by the Orthodox churches half a century ago under the lead of Dr. Lyman Reecher.

From the apparent concern of many to maintain the idea of a personal spirit-devil, and saying, as some do, that they could give up the idea of the existence of God as readily as that of the spirit-devil, we might infer that they "love them both alike." We fear there is too much truth in that expression; for their representations of God and his government of the creatures He has made make him the most unlovely of the two; because their spirit-devil, bad as he is, never made a creature that could be, or was in danger of being tortured eternally. No wonder that men, who accept the theological notion of inherent immortality and a future life of hopeless torments, should virtually pray as the frightened sailor did, in a terrible storm: "Good Lord: Good Devil." When asked, why he prayed thus? he answered, "Because I do not know which hands I shall fall into;" thus illustrating the above illustration of the "Dean's penitent," who said, "once I cared for neither God or devil, and now I loves 'em both alike."

We fear such is the real experience of multitudes of professors of religion, whose service is the result of false teaching, and is rendered from dread of the theological hell, and not from love to God and delight in his service; for, say they, "If we believed as you do, we would not serve God another day; but would gratify ourselves with every possible pleasure." They seem to "love God and the devil both alike." Of the two, if there is any preference, they appear to love the service of the devil the best; though apparently yielding their service to God, yet unwillingly, so as to escape the theological hell of torment; but really give their hearts to the other party; seemingly not suspecting that "God looketh on the heart," and accepts no other service.

As to the Plymouth Church—presided over by Henry Ward Beecher—"dispensing with subscription to the articles of faith," we would like to know who gave that church or any other the right to make "articles of faith," or to insist on any one's subscribing to them as a test of their acceptance with God? The Bible is the only test; and any man or woman who allows a professed church to impose on them any other test, in just so far surrenders their own responsibility and liberty, and allows others to "lord it over" them; and indirectly renounce allegiance to God. Ignorantly it may be; but none the less a fact.

Let the Plymouth Church, and all other Creedized churches cast their man-made creeds "to the moles and to the bats," where they belong; for such creeds are "works of darkness," by which men who think themselves "Infallible," if they dare not say it like the Pope, seek and exercise a "lordship over God's heritage," and attempt to "root up the tares," in disobedience to our Lord's command to let the tares and wheat "both grow together till the harvest;" and that, then, He will see to the separation, and it will be done right. But the disobedient creed-makers think to forestall this work by their action; and so, often, root up the wheat, while the tares remain. Mistaken men. The Lord hasten the day when His true Church shall be organized, and put on her beautiful garments, and shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

QUESTIONS OF DOUBTFUL UTILITY.

I would like to ask you two questions. 1. Are little children that have not come to years of discretion going to be raised from the dead and saved in the kingdom of God? 2. Did Jesus Christ have a personal existence before he was born of the virgin Mary?

G. P. W.

We could give an opinion on both these questions; but what would it avail? They remind us of the reply of our Lord to Peter, when he inquired, "Lord what shall this man (John) do?" Jesus replied, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee; Follow thou me."—John xxi. 21, 22. This reply, we think, is applicable to all such questions as those above. Our personal interest in Christ, and our obligations to Him who hath redeemed us to God by His blood, is what first of all, and most of all, concerns us. What we can do to others to reconcile them to God and his government, comes next in order; those not within our sphere of influence we are to leave in the hands of God, to be disposed of according to the dictates of His wisdom and love, and not waste our time, talents, and energies in prying into speculative matters, which are really of no practical importance.

We have such confidence in the love and wisdom of God, that our mind is at perfect rest upon both the questions above, and free from disturbance by any speculations on them. We waste no time on either. We know God is able to do whatever his love and wisdom decides right and best to be done. And as to the matter of the "pre-existence of Christ," one way or the other, what does it concern us, seeing God has put into his hands "All power in heaven and earth," and "given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life" to them who believe? Let us cease useless speculations, and lay hold on the eternal life offered to us as a free gift of God in Jesus Christ.

CARDINAL ANTONELLI'S INSTRUCTIONS.

THE following letter from Cardinal Antonelli, the Prime Minister of the Pope of Rome, is taken from the Nicaragua "Gazette" of January 1, 1870. The Cardinal thus writes to the Bishop of Nicaragua:

We have lately been informed here that an attempt has been made to change the order of things hitherto existing in that republic, by publishing a programme in which are enunciated "freedom of education" and of worship. Both these principles are not only contrary to the laws of God and of the Church, but are in contradiction with the Concordat established between the Holy See and that republic. Although we doubt not but that your most illustrious and reverend lordship will do all in your power against maxims so destructive to the Church and to society, still we deem it by no means superfluous to stimulate your well known zeal to see that the clergy, and above all the curates, do their duty.

G. CARDINAL ANTONELLI.

Freedom of education and of worship "contrary to the laws of God and of the Church!" And this from the headquarters of "Mother Church in the nineteenth century! Free education and worship in violation of the Concordat between the Holy See and Nicaragua, and destructive to the Church and to society! We may guess, then, that something is likely to come from the Ecumenical Council that will make a stir in the world.—N. Y. Herald.

THE QUESTION OF QUESTIONS.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed you will find an article clipped from "The Methodist Home Journal," of Philadelphia; and not knowing whether you had seen it or not, I thought I would forward it to you. The author of it is a Methodist preacher by the name of Gorham; somewhere in the upper part of New York State. So I have been informed by another Methodist preacher. It must be very gratifying indeed to you, to see the cause of truth enlisting the attention "of the best thinking minds both in the church and out of it; both in the ministry and out of it." I have inquired of some of the ministers if they saw the article, and what they thought of it; but they seem rather shy about giving expression to their thoughts, and generally give an evasive answer, evidently having no desire to meet the subject fairly and squarely.

Sometime since I had a visit from a preacher, to whom I had addressed a few lines in reply to some remarks in one of his discourses; and during a very pleasant conversation of about four hours, in which I advanced our views somewhat at length, it soon became apparent that controversy was not the object of his coming, although the interview was by appointment, and for that purpose; but he was frank enough to confess that he had no sympathy with the "fire and brimstone theory," as the ultimate and eternal destiny of the finally impenitent; and when asked, what their punishment was to consist in? he could give no definite answer.

They tell me that if I would only take hold with them, and use my talent and influence in getting souls converted, and let these mysteries alone, it would be better for me. "Take hold" of what? The "Sublime Mystery" of a natural, immortal soul! Never, no never. We have seen enough of this to convince us thoroughly that it is "the mystery of iniquity" that robs God, dishonors Christ, and deludes men from the true source of eternal life, and prevents them from understanding the "mystery which had been hid from the world for ages," but was made manifest in the days of Paul, and has since been covered up by philosophy and science, falsely so called, that is, "God only hath immortality," and he hath sent his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, for the purpose of abolishing death, and bringing life and immortality to light by the gospel; so that the question, "If a man die shall he live again?" finds a ready answer from the lips of him who says, "I am come that they might have life;" and, "because I live ye shall live also;" and, as the "Father hath life in himself," and "hath given to the Son to have life in himself," and hath "given him power over all flesh," and "authority to execute judgment;" and if it be the Father's will that "whosoever seeth the Son, and believeth on him, shall have everlasting life," and shall be "raised up at the last day;" and if it be the "just judgment of God that incorrigible sinners are worthy of death," and Christ the Judge assured those who rejected him, when on earth, that there was no life in them, and that they should not see life: then, as he now holds in his power the keys of death and hades, having given assurance that the "gates of hades shall not prevail against his Church," the Father's will shall be executed by the opening of the gates of death to all his people, and their resurrection to life. And to those who "shall not see life," he shuts the gates of death so firm that no man can open them.

Yours, in hope of Life,

STEWART CARLISLE.

WILMINGTON, Del., Feb. 8, 1870.

The article below is the one of which Br. Carlisle speaks, given entire. We gave last week the notice of the article by the Philadelphia "Ledger;" but the whole article is of interest enough to put on file. The time will come when it will be seen who the "heretics" are. The writer of the article has "forgotten whether Geo. Storrs left the M. E. Church by expulsion for heresy, or by withdrawal." We can assure him, we withdrew peaceably in "1840;" and no charge was ever made against us, or censure passed upon us, except the one by the Gen. Conf. of 1836 for attending an anti-slavery prayer meeting; which was rescinded by the Gen. Conf. of 1868, in its session at Chicago, Ill., thus wiping a stain from its own character, to its own honor and ours.

We have lived to see that our labor has not been in vain in promulgating the Life views; and especially in the Methodist E. Church, toward which we have never indulged any other than kind feelings. We have never sought to induce any one to leave that or any other church, with which they happened to be connected, when they might be led to embrace the Life views, provided they could remain in peace without denying their faith; and we hope every minister, in the various churches, who may embrace the Life views, will remain in them, and promulgate this faith, if it be true of their "articles of faith," as the writer in "The Methodist Home Journal" strongly intimates it is in the M. E. Church, that no one of them is violated by any one in that church "proclaiming himself an Annihilationist." If that is true, remain in that church, and proclaim your faith of "No life out of Christ," till the whole body is converted to the true Gospel proclamation. It will not be many years before the past theological theories of God's government of the souls He has made, will be seen to have had their origin in heathen speculations, nourished and brought up by the Romish apostacy, and palmed off on Protestants by the poisonous breath of the "Mother of the Abominations of the earth." Luther tried to blow away the pestilence, but was hindered by his more fearful coadjutors, till the sun of Life only in Christ was again eclipsed. May Heaven defend it from another such disaster.

Here is the article which has called out these remarks:

THE COMING QUESTION.

Whoso has watched the Christian pulpit for the last quarter of a century, must have marked a certain mobility in its teachings, the general current of which has been away from the frequent and emphatic denunciation of eternal and terrible torments as the doom of men who live and die impenitent.

This change may be due, in small part, to the teachings of Universalism: but must be ascribed largely to the growing desire of the pulpit to please the pews; we might say, perhaps, to the growing allegiance of the former to the latter. Nor should it be denied that a grave doubt has sprung up in many minds touching the truth of a doctrine once much insisted on, and with such wholesome effect. But, however the change has come about, one rarely hears, now-a-days, a good, hearty, old-fashioned, right up and down "hell and damnation sermon," as many a poor sinner, trembling under a sense of his guilt and danger, has characterized the terrible pulpit charge that made him writhe and quake in his seat.

Among the heresies of modern times it is doubted whether any one has made surer, steadier, stealthier progress than the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked. Rev. Geo. Storrs, of the M. E. Church, was among the first to advocate the annihilation theory, and he left her pale, we have forgotten whether by expulsion for heresy, or by withdrawal, about the year 1840.

The notions of the several advocates of "Annihilationism," appear to be quite crude and inharmonious; and often even antagonistic with each other; yet the doubt touching the truth of the orthodox theory is taking root and spreading among thinking men, both in and out of the church—both in and out of the ministry—with a growth that is obvious and threatening.

A theological revolution went on silently among the Quakers for twenty years, and culminated in Hicksiteism, and a universal rupture of that church. A similar revolution went on with nearly equal silence in the Congregational churches of New England, at about the same period, and had its catastrophe in Unitarianism. And unless we have failed utterly to discern the signs of the times, what in those cases befel, now, on a much larger scale, impends.

It is a fact, relevant just here, that the churches which are of directly Catholic or papal pedigree, have creeds almost solely occupied with old issues, being the items of dissent from "mother church," and scarce include an article aimed at any form of modern heterodoxy. For example, which of the twenty-five articles of faith of the M. E. Church does a man violate who proclaims himself a Universalist, or an Annihilationist, or a "Low Churchman," as the phrase goes?

We opine that the sooner the issue is publicly and squarely joined between orthodoxy and this new heresy, the better it will be for the ultimate peace and speedy triumph of the church.

Some months ago, a prominent minister of the church, and one familiar with the class of disquisitions which constitute the staple of the Quarterlies, presented to one of them a manuscript mooting and defending the theory of penal extinction as against that of unending torture. The reply of the editor of the said Quarterly was that the article could go in, if the author should so decide; but that, for himself, he judged the time was not yet; adding, however, "the question you have discussed must soon have a thorough rehearing by the church."

In one of our principal cities the preachers' meeting lately discussed the question, "Do the Scriptures promise perpetuated existence to any but the good?" The topic was up for some six consecutive weeks, and excited large interest; but the speakers on neither side, were, in any tolerable degree, prepared to do the subject justice; and it was discontinued, leaving the impression apparently on all minds that the real merits of the issue had been scarce, or at best but feebly, touched. An essay by a member, regarded as one of the best thinkers of the meeting, was read at the close of the discussion, presenting the orthodox side of the argument. By unanimous vote of the meeting the author was requested to present its arguments to the Book Room, in New York, for publication in tract form. It was duly revised and sent forward; but not published: nor, so far as we are informed, was any reason assigned for the declinature.

The opponents of orthodoxy on this question are arming and drilling, and, we may add, steadily gathering recruits. Is it wise in the churches to respond by merely saying "Hush," as the Quakers did, as the Congregationalists did, and as the nation did? The church ought to know that not every tyro in her ministry can wield the arms that are to settle the opponents of her faith.

G.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

BY A. BOYNTON.

CHRIST prayed, "Keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given to me, that they may be one, as we are. . . . Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me."—John xvii. 11, 20–23.

Fulfilled. "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common."—Acts iv. 32.

Testified to by Paul. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit."—1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. His exhortation. "Finally brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you."—2 Cor. xiii. 11. "Be of the same mind one toward another."—Rom. xii. 16. "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."—Phil. ii. 1, 2.

Peter breathed the same spirit also. "Finally be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous."—1 Pet. iii. 8. Paul's desire that they might thus continue. "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ; that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel."—Phil. i. 27.

After reading the foregoing scriptures it seems needless to add more by way of explanation on this interesting subject; but men are so "slow of heart to believe," that it becomes necessary to give "line upon line," and even then men's hearts are so gross, that few, very few, appreciate and appropriate the precious truths of the word of God. Christian union is desirable, but as it is sought for in the wrong place, and by the wrong means, failure is the result.

This is an age of counterfeiting, adulteration, substitution. Purity is a thing rarely to be found. An unlawful love of gain, a hasting to be rich, is the sin of the times; hence this spuriousness, false coloring, outward gilding; this substitution of a poor for a good article. These things, brethren, constitute not a few of the perils of the last days. Was it not with this view that the Revelator was directed to write unto the church of the Laodiceans, "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see."—Rev. iii. 18.

LOVE is the bond of union in all association, and herein lies the danger of deception; because men of one faith live in harmony, to suppose they are Christians, or that this is the fruit of Christianity when it may be nothing more than the love of a doctrine, is a deception. That which makes a Christian, keeps him such; which is nothing more or less than the possession and indwelling of the Holy Spirit: the quality or nature of which spirit is divine love; which is the holiest and purest principle in existence; consequently, most subject to counterfeit or adulteration. The word is given as the detector of spirits, and happy is he who is not forgetful of this, but keeps his eyes so anointed with the "eye-salve," as to see the first approach of a deceptive or carnal spirit, and flies to the "stronghold."

As the love of God is the holiest principle, so those who possess and manifest this love, are actuated by the strongest principle; consequently, let all other things vary as they may, this bond is indissoluble, firm. All other bonds of association may be torn asunder, but this being laid deep in the soul holds in perfect peace its favored possessor.

The lack of Christian union is because it is sought for in the wrong direction, instead of being sought in sentiment, doctrine; a union which the church can never attain to in this finite state; it should be sought in spirit or affection. "By one spirit are we all baptized into one body." The body is not a secular or political one, but partakes of the nature of the element which animates it; it is a spiritual body.

We think the evil of substituting sentiment for love, teachers are mainly accountable for. They, lacking this vital power mix up therewith, nostrums of their own to supply its place; and thus feeding the flock cause many to become weak and sickly among them. Union in sentiment, and harmony in action, are good; but let us put things in their right place and call them by their right names. The standard which God has raised let us rally around, unfurl and defend. "Whosoever loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of God. God is love, and whoso dwelleth in love, (God's love) dwelleth in God, and God in him." Here is the oneness of the church; here is the new covenant relation. "I will put my law in their hearts, and write them upon their minds." They shall not need to teach each his neighbor the knowledge of the Lord, for "they shall all be taught of God." They shall know God practically as Abba Father. For no man can call Jesus Lord, his Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Those who have it not, are outside the sacred inclosure, The church. God help us to examine ourselves and prove our own selves, that we be not weighed in the balance and found wanting in the day when Christ shall make up his jewels.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y., Feb., 1870.

HOW THEY WRAP IT UP.—No. 2.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

AT Lewiston I listened to a sermon from John vii. 38, 39. The theme of the speaker was, the manifestation of that holy and lovely Christian spirit in those who believe on Christ "as the Scripture hath said." He very ably portrayed the operations of that spirit, but not possessing quite enough of it himself, and knowing that I and some others were Age to come believers, and also believers in the non-resurrection of the wicked, he wandered far from the subject to give us a few blows. He stated that Christ is now on his Father's throne, a Priest making intercession for sinners. And when he leaves that throne and takes his own throne, his priesthood ceases, and the door of mercy closes forever against the sinner. And so he wrapped it up.

But what saith the Scriptures? See Zech. vi. 12, 13. "The man whose name is, THE BRANCH,—even he shall build the temple of the Lord—and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and He shall be a priest upon his throne, and the counsel of peace shall be between them both;" that is, between his priesthood and his royalty. And Paul tells us, He is a Priest after the order of Melchisedek, without descent, (pedigree), having neither beginning of days, nor end of life.—Heb. vii. 3. He was King of Salem, and priest of the Most High God at the same time. So Christ will be a King upon his throne and a Priest at the same time. And his priesthood and royalty run parallel to each other, as long as either exists.

The speaker also represented to us, that Christ retained power to forgive sins no longer than he occupied the throne of his Father. But Christ himself tells us that all power in heaven and earth is given to him.—Matt. xxviii. 18; and that he has power on earth to forgive sins,—Matt. ix. 6; and that sins may be forgiven in the world to come,—Matt. xii. 32. And the all power which was given him he will retain until all enemies are put under his feet, and until he destroys the last enemy, and him that hath the power of death, which is the devil; and then he will give up the kingdom to God the Father, that God may be all in all.—1 Cor. xv. 25–28.

Such is the want of harmony between his preaching, and the teaching of the Scriptures. A man who cannot harmonize the holy Scriptures better than he, is not fit to preach. And, further, he told us as Christ is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe; there is therefore, "a common salvation and a special salvation;" and by the common salvation all men would be saved from the Adamic death; the righteous to die no more, but the wicked to die again. This is the queerest thing I ever heard of; and must have been hatched in the school of error. Save a man from death to kill him again; This is salvation with a vengeance! What a wonderful salvation it would be to take a drowned man from the water and bring him to life, and then throw him overboard to drown forever. But this is "common salvation;" but not common sense salvation. It is strange how error wilfully persisted in, will drive a man's reasoning faculties out of him, and make him think he is cunning.

His attack on us was not made in the spirit he recommended to us. Had he chosen for his theme the resurrection of the wicked, or the no age to come, and given us an able sermon on it, I should have called him a gentleman; for he had a right to do so if he thought we erred. But to depart from his subject, which was brotherly love, to give us a thrust in a spirit so far from that of his theme, did not look well. May the Lord forgive him, for he knows not what manner of spirit he is of.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

BR. STORRS, Through the abounding mercy and long forbearance of our Covenant-keeping God, on this lovely, pleasant morning, I seat myself, in this quiet spot, the home of my adoption for the present hour, not knowing where my wanderings will close; neither am I anxious, so that God may be honored, the cause of truth advanced, and sinners saved.

It is a long day since I have attempted to write for the readers of our precious HERALD OF LIFE; and the reasons for this neglect, if neglect it be, may be found in the fact of my sitting in your office on that very rainy day, while the tempest raged without, the streets barricaded, and the sidewalks covered with a dark cloud of umbrellas, the possessors of them struggling with the furious elements of the storm, and the living masses of flesh, human and inhuman, for the mastery. O, how it made my heart ache to see that decreped old washerwoman, with her basket of soiled clothing, and her little pail of soap all upturned; and that little errand-boy, with his market-basket dragged from his grasp by the fury of a heedless, burly-looking man, of more than ordinary strength, and less of gentlemanly courtesy; and as the fates would have it, one calamity followed close on the other; the old lady's umbrella was broken and rendered useless, and a choice bit of meat rolled from the little boy's market-basket, which a dog instantly seized and bore away in triumph.

Now as my contemplations turned to our beloved and untiring Editor of the HERALD OF LIFE, while his steady hand opens the envelopes, and draws therefrom a package of correspondence for the paper; to witness the silent but piercing scrutiny which every document of the kind has to pass through, and some of them resemble mine in their literary appearance; for a spectator of sensitive nerve and small ability, it is quite interesting to see our calm, discreet, and patient Editor turn them this way and that, and look at them lengthwise and crosswise, in order to decipher their contents, and then seize his pen with the strength of a Hercules, the patience of a Job, and the speed, not of lightning, but of human electricity, erase a word here, and interline another there, to form the mass into intelligent, readable matter.

Well, if this will not put a damper on the aspirings of the ignorant, I think they would be proof positive against voyages round "the horn," or the Caravan over the Great Desert. But all this is done without a word to break the silence of the place, except now and then the noiseless tread of the compositor, with a low whisper, "More copy, sir."

May the kind blessing of our heavenly Father ever rest gently down upon our Editor. O give him strength of body, steadiness of nerve, with all the graces of the Spirit, that he may overcome all emergencies, so that he, for the glory of God and advance of truth, may renew his strength, and stand as our Editor until Christ shall take the throne and reign gloriously forever. Glory to God.

Dear brethren and sisters, peace be unto you. I cannot say much of what I have done since we took the parting hand at camp-meeting. But I can speak encouragingly of what the Lord, in answer to prayer and persevering effort, has done. The battle grows warm, and our honest and earnest opponents make attempts to discourage our efforts to scatter the light of truth, and sometimes stoop so low as to use taunts and sneers; and say, Your doctrine of No Life out of Christ is not of any consequence, for you have no converts except what you get from us. So said the orthodox churches from '42 to the present. If this is really true, there is one significant feature connected with it. All we get from that source are honest and intelligent; and if the disciples of our Lord in primitive Christianity needed another conversion to prevent them from aspiring to become the greatest, it might not be injurious for some of us to pass through the same process. Since I, in that brief period as a silent spectator in the HERALD office, learned so much of the labors, the perplexing burthens, and the great friction brought to bear on that amiable grace of long-suffering and patience, I saw at once, that instead of troubling our Editor to look over, rectify and arrange a package of scraps, of over sixty pages (what I greatly desired to have him do), that it would be more to the glory of God to remain forever little and unknown, rather than ask Br. Storrs to come down from his great work to accommodate me.

Here let me say, light is shining more clearly, and truth is advancing more surely than at any former period. O, brethren, let us strive for more of the spirit of the Master; be kind, be courteous; keep our bodies under, bring them in subjection to Christ.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Feb. 7, 1870.

FROM JANETT MAYO.

BR. STORRS: I was made glad on reading a letter from J. D. Sheridan, Three Rivers, Mich., to know the two HERALDS OF LIFE and the sermon "God is Love," was read with interest; and the prompt acknowledgment tells that I was not mistaken in the man. I read a letter of his to Br. Grant, in the "Crisis," and said, at once, that the man must have more light; and sent the package, with this prayer, "God of love, bless them to that man." I have sent so often, and so long without hearing a word from them, that this cheers me up to continue doing what I can.

I have conference and prayer-meetings every paper I receive. I open it, and then meeting begins. Perhaps a brother speaks first. He has been out to preach for the first time; got so interested that an hour passed too soon. No bad sign: he had a good gospel to preach; a straight line clear through; no wicked dead to bring to life to be judged and die again. That would be hard work for a young beginner. Some years since, I asked an Advent minister how the wicked dead got alive to be judged? He said, "I cannot tell; but think that after the thousand years reign of Christ, satan would be loosed out of his prison, and go up on the breadth of the earth, and he would 'raise the wicked.'" Well, brother, that then is the mortal resurrection plan to get them alive. If this is true, we have worse times to see after we have got through with our present life of trials than we have ever seen; for now when we see suffering we can alleviate it, but then, O then! we stand aghast, wondering what our fate is to be! But, thank God, it is not true.

Some of our Life believers ask, Is it right to go to orthodox meetings? I go steady, and am often profited; besides, I get a chance to tell somebody what I think of the sermon. They all know what we believe. Three years since our minister preached on eternal torment. I felt that I must speak to some one and tell them that was not true. As I was waiting for our team, the minister came along, extended his hand without speaking. I took it, and looking him in the face, said, "Eternal torment is not true; man has not got an immortal soul; it cannot be found in the Bible; it is a heathen dogma." He did not answer. He passed on. Not long after he had a call to settle, and I saw in the religious intelligence, that the council would not settle him because he believed that the wicked would not live forever.

A few weeks since, our minister preached on the text, "The devils believe and tremble." He made the devil out to be a good orthodox. I asked some of them why he could not be saved? So I put in the mail box, this day, one of Br. Storrs' tracts on the "DEVIL AND SATAN." So you see that I should not know what was needed if I staid at home. I had a letter from a brother that is in a camp of twenty men. He says they read his paper, the HERALD OF LIFE, with interest. So I sent to Br. Storrs to send them the 15 Campaign Documents. They are up the river 20 miles from Oconto, Wis. I hope to hear good from them soon. Let us pray for these men. This is a new field. If any other camp wish to read those Campaign Documents, let it be known. I have good meetings when my paper comes. A good spirit is in the letters. I expect to live forever with the writers.

NORTH AMHERST, Mass., Feb. 4, 1870.

FROM J. D. SHERIDAN.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed find 25 cents for the tracts you sent me. I read them all through carefully, and have scattered them among the neighbors. I was very much interested in them. Although I could not see the harmony of some of your views, with some part of the word, yet I think I can see new light on the subject in question.

And I want to express my gratitude to my unknown friend, in North Amherst, Mass. for the kindness expressed to me, in sending me the last three numbers of the HERALD, and also for the other two, and tracts that I received some time ago. I read them through, and scattered them among my neighbors, where I thought they would be read. The people in this vicinity are so crusted over in the belief of the natural immortality of the soul, that it appears almost impossible to reach them with the truth, or what appears to me, to be very plain Bible teaching, viz, that man is all mortal here, and that there can be no immortality out of Christ. I am ridiculed and scoffed at by all in these parts, in the churches, and out; as a fanatic and heretic, for advocating such views; but I feel confidence to say with David, "When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up."—Psa. xxvii. 10; and in the midst of my sorrows and afflictions I have this to comfort me, the truth never was popular, although I have been somewhat disappointed.

When I started in the service of the Lord, I felt that He was all love and that it would be quite an easy matter for me to convince my neighbors who were going the downward road to destruction that I had been travelling all my life. But, alas! all I could do, was to deliver the message. I cannot oblige them to receive it. I feel to say with the sister, "I cannot edit a paper," neither can I preach a sermon; but I can sow the seed by scattering tracts and papers, and although I may not live to see the results, yet I have faith to believe, that some may "fall on good ground, and bring forth fruit."

By the way; I received five numbers of the HERALD commencing with the year. Please explain how this is. I did not subscribe for it, although I was ruminating in my mind, but a day or two before they came, how I could pay for the HERALD OF LIFE, but was obliged to come to the conclusion that I could not take it.

You can imagine better than I can describe my feelings of surprise and joy, on receiving the package. I felt that my cup of joy was more than full.

Although I cannot endorse all the views therein contained, yet I do take so much comfort in reading the blessed good letters written by your worthy correspondents, that I feel while reading them as if I was almost home. Yes, it does appear to me it can't be long before the good Shepherd will come, and all the holy angels with him, and gather his sheep that are scattered in the wilderness, and through all nations, on the whole face of the earth, into one fold, "and there shall be one shepherd and one fold," agreeable to the promise.

Yes, I am bound to be there, although I find the road a rough and thorny path, beset with wolves and the enemy, at every turn; yet the Staff on whom I lean, is able to pilot me safe home, and although I have lost my voice now, so I cannot sing, I expect to have it restored to me again, when I reach the New Jerusalem that is prepared for all who love Jesus, and wait for his appearing.

I feel the need of the prayers of all the faithful. Your brother in the blessed hope.

THREE RIVERS, Mich., Feb. 9, 1870.

FROM JAMES HARLING.

BR. STORRS; With humble gratitude to my heavenly Father for his faithfulness to the promise, made by our precious LIFE-GIVER, of the Holy Spirit to guide us into all truth, and reveal himself unto us, I pen a few lines to the acknowledging of the simplicity and truth-harmonizing doctrine of life "only" in our precious Jesus. I feel to silently adore the Father of mercies more since I realize the truth that believers only are affected by this LIFE-GIVER. The xlixth Psalm is so plain, yea, as I remarked at a prayer-meeting tonight, God's love to man was that he might not perish, but have life. I cannot see, now, how it is death to rise up to life. The penalty certainly is, that moment, removed. I feel fresh zeal in the work of telling to sinners, my Father is LOVE—all love; and bless his holy Name, two skeptics I have so won over that they delight daily to hear my conversation, and go with me to the house of prayer; and I cannot give up praying for them till they come to know him as their Saviour, Reconciler and LIFE-GIVER. They are amazed at the different tenets I set forth, to what they have ever heard; they are shut up, so to speak, at the goodness, love and mercy of God! Oh, I do praise his holy Name for leading me to Chicago, to hear this Christ-exalting, man-pitying, God-honoring truth, "Life only in Jesus."

Br. Ramsay believes it to be error, and means to preach against it. But while I have a clear conscience, a clear Bible, a clear voice, a clear perception, and a clear motive, I'll preach life, life, LIFE only in our all-glorious Christ. Pray for me. Some of the seekers and longers are receiving the truth, but are yet afraid of the "ark falling."

Glory to God for such sweet simplicity of truth. I do rely on this promise, "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." Pray for me to be stripped of all pride, self-lauding, and kept lowly, loving, faithful.

Br. Brown, with myself, received papers and books. Br. B. is grounding well in the truth, and useful in his sphere. Send me three "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," and if you can, send a few of "The Judgment Day" tracts. I will be happy to distribute them. I find the trouble is with the judgment day, in our discussion. They think it implies life.

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb., 1870.

Remarks by the Editor.

We are not certain among what class of people our friend Harling is carrying on his "discussion;" but judge, from some remarks in a previous letter, it is among the "Scandinavian Methodists." We trust he may have grace to "be wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove;" and thus commend the truth by its heavenly influence.

FROM AMANDA BABCOCK.

BR. STORRS: I love the truth. I take comfort in reading my paper. I have taken the HERALD OF LIFE for nearly two years, and do not think I could do without it. I lend it to all who will read it. I gave a tract, "The Living Soul," to one of my neighbors, and he burned it up. The Lord will give to every one according to his works. May He bless all His dear children who are striving to do His will. I try to do all I can to lead others to see the truth. I rejoice to see the HERALD so nobly sustained, although I cannot do as much as I would. I am afflicted with blindness: my left eye is almost useless.

I believe there is no life only in and through Christ. Man is mortal, and without a resurrection will remain in death. But let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man.

Your sister, in hope of eternal life.

OCONEE, Ill., Jan. 31, 1870.

FROM MRS. O. A. PERCY.

BR. STORRS: And to all the lovers of the truth, I would say through the columns of your much prized paper, that we have been kept through the trials of the past. And now my husband's health is very poor; cruel disease is preying on his mortal body, and oft we sigh for the land promised to Abraham and his seed, where nothing will enter that pains. Yet in God we are happy as mortals can be, and have every reason to praise our Father for his loving kindness and tender mercies toward us. Never have we endured one trial too many; for each time we find ourselves stronger and more firm in God and loving his cause and word more and more.

Dear ones, let us rejoice when called to a trial of our faith in God, knowing that a kind Father is at our side leading us. It matters not though the way may be rough, we shall stand more sure. Our Saviour says, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman; every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." Is not this plain? Then let us rejoice that we are not cut off, and are worth pruning. And may we make a right use of all we are called to pass through, and ever learn to be meek and humble, at our Saviour's feet. What a blessed place to ever remain, where we can at all times say, and mean what we say, "Father, thy will not mine." Lead me on. But I would join with Sr. Helen and say, "Only lead me the nearest way home."

> Then may we these readers meet,
> With them, bow at Jesus' feet;
> With them range the blissful shore,
> Meet them there, to part no more.

Yours in hope of Life in the future.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., Feb. 9, 1870.

FROM EBEN HESTER.

BR. STORRS: Please send me Dr. Finley's "Constitution of Man" for distribution. I have read it, and think it covers a good deal of solid ground to stand upon. I have just written and sent a letter to a Congregational minister, a really good brother; as I am personally acquainted with him, I thought that the best way to approach him on (as some would say) so delicate a subject. I wrote and sent it in love, and trust I shall hear from him soon. I feel as though I ought to speak; indeed I cannot help it. I expect harshness from some, but my mind is fully set on Christ, come what may. I do not say this boastfully. A Baptist brother said to me, "Suppose you should be called infidel?" Ah said I, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you." This same Br. told me, I twisted the Scripture. I replied it was not twisting, but untwisting; taking out the kinks or knots which have been for so long a time. These hard knots have become of very little use. These same persons will say "dead horse!" or anything else to make the subject repulsive. It will be like unto one that beateth the air. God's truth will triumph I feel certain. One person told me that I could not prove anything from the Bible. Said I, Where do you get your faith from; is it not the Bible? Where else can we go? Does anything reveal God as clearly as that book of Books?

Oh! that their eyes were opened!

SUFFIELD, Conn., Jan. 31, 1870.

G. W. DENNY, New Haven, Conn., writing us in regard to a subscriber whose paper was discontinued at the close of his subscription for three months, says: He came to me and asked why his paper was stopped? I said, I supposed it was because not paid for. He replied, "I did not know that it was time to pay again; why don't he let us know when it is time to pay?" Thus you see how perfectly careless people are. May be you lose a good many subscribers in this way. I think you are too sensitive about dunning careless readers. If people do not stop their papers they ought to be dunned sharp, and made to pay, for justice demands this, I think at your hands.

Remarks by the Editor.

A subscriber who cares no more for the HERALD OF LIFE than to let his paper go without paying for it, is not very likely to be benefitted by its continuance; and it is a waste of money to continue sending it to him seeing that every one who does not pay more than $2 per volume makes an expense to the "Life and Advent Union," of $2 more. The cost of supplying each person to whom the paper is sent is near $4 per volume. [illegible] Union or its Directors determine otherwise, we think our course of discontinuance without dunning, is the best one.

OBITUARY.

BASSFORD.—Died at Thomaston, Conn., Jan. 24, 1870, Sister ALICE, wife of Br. William BASSFORD, aged 47 years.

She rests in hope; sweetly sleeping in Jesus till the resurrection, when she will be wakened to life by the Saviour's welcome voice.

She was an excellent woman, a good, faithful Christian; an affectionate and devoted wife and mother, and a sympathizing neighbor, whose influence was always felt for good; whose works of kindness and faith abounded to all around her. The loss will be realized and mourned by all who knew her.

Her disease was cancer. Her sufferings were great, but all were borne with Christian patience and resignation. Her end was peace.

She leaves her husband in the same faith and hope that carried her so triumphantly through the terrible struggle with the last enemy; and a family of children, some of whom have also an interest in Christ. May God sustain them all.

The death of this determined and consecrated child of God calls into action the emotions with our dear brethren and sisters in Thomaston, and elsewhere, which show plainly how a consistent and faithful Christian will be estimated when he comes to depart and leave us.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

The writer was called to speak in the burial service, and endeavored to show the true basis of the hope of Life eternal; and then, with the solemn surrender to the safe keeping of the "Shepherd and Bishop" who consecrated the ground, and the abiding regard of heavenly love, we left her to the quiet rest.

W. S. CAMPBELL.

TRACTS.

WE have received a supply of tracts, published by Br. E. Wolcott, and I like them much. Short, pointed, plain and kind, so that one need not feel ashamed to give them out. His Scripture Searchers are like so many detectives; and one entitled "Bearing the Cross," written by Geo. Storrs, should be used as a "home treatment" for all who think the greatest cross one can bear is "speaking in meeting."

How glad I am that God raises up one after another, with means and an inclination to publish the gospel. Let us that can do no more, use our influence in persuading people to read. Most of people love to read something. Get them interested in the truth enough to read and investigate, and God will have witnesses for his truth among them. We see proof of this wherever we go.

THOUGHTS ON READING THE HERALD.

BR. STORRS: I wish to say a word or two again, in regard to our excellent HERALD OF LIFE. When I read the first page of our last HERALD, Jan. 26th, I thought that it was worth the cost of the paper for a year; and as I read on, I thought the same of each page. I think the contributors to the HERALD OF LIFE give evidence that the lamp of life shines bright on their pathway, and that they are growing in grace and the knowledge of the truth. God hears the prayers of the church for the aid of his Spirit; and as I was contemplating the love of God and the blessings of immortality, I began to sing as the thoughts came into my mind, and I turned to my desk and committed them to paper, and thought I would send them to you as I find them often expressive of my feelings in family devotion; and if you should think them worth printing, they can be sung in the tune "Rock of Ages cleft for me."

O Blessed Saviour we adore
Thy love and goodness more and more,
When from thy word by faith we see
The blessings of immortality.

When all the effects of sin are gone,
Sickness and death will not be known;
Then with our loved ones we shall meet,
In joy around our Saviour's feet,

To praise him for such matchless love
As brought him from the realms above,
T' redeem from death such worms as we,
And give us immortality.

That all who ever lived on earth,
Believed in God, and loved the truth,
The sons of God shall ever be,
From corruption redeemed and free.

Then with each other they will sing,
The praises of their Saviour King;
While in his presence they will be,
The whole age of eternity.

FREDONIA, N. Y. Feb. 2, 1870. J. HAMILTON.

BY ABEL LARKIN.

[Concluded from last week.]

IT should be remembered that the first mention Daniel makes of this personage in chap. xi. 21, is "a vile person." Does not this phrase point to an individual person, and not to a dynasty? and is the same that is spoken of in verses 31 and 45, when he comes "to his end and none shall help him;" when Michael stands up, "and there shall be such a time of trouble as never was." "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," etc.—Dan. xii. 1, 2.

Now Matthew and Mark speak of this abomination as being at the coming of Christ and give reference to Daniel for particulars, who says, the vile person who places the abomination that maketh desolate, comes to his end at the resurrection,—at the same time that Paul's Man of Sin does, the Son of perdition, who sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. This is tantamount to Daniel's description of the same person who plants the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, and comes to his end, when many awake from the dust of the earth. That is, he comes and makes the Temple of God his palace, and the saints give all into his hands for a time, times and the dividing of a time—1290 days. The prophecy of 2 Sam. vii., not only relates to the temple built by Solomon, but to the one under consideration; for it says, "But thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house (Temple) for a long time to come:"—19th verse.

"He," the seed of David, "shall build a house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever."—verse 13. "And thy house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever."—verse 16. Now has this house been built? If not, is it not the one into which the king of the North comes and pollutes with his abomination of desolation for 1290 days, making it his palace?

Once more. The object of the Revelation is to "show things that must come to pass."—Ch. i. 1. And xi. 1, 2, says "Rise and measure the Temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not, for it is given unto the Gentiles; and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months." Here are a few facts to notice. First, that this was written after the destruction of the temple by Titus, in A. D. 70. Hence the Revelator assumes the fact that it is to be rebuilt; and of course before it can receive the aforesaid measurement. And also, the measurement is at or before the time the court and city are given to the Gentiles for forty-two months, or 1260 days; or, as Daniel says, "until a time, and times, and a dividing of time."—chap. vii. 25. "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled;"—Luke xxi. 24; which will be at Daniel's days. But more to the subject. Now observe that this is the Temple of God—the same temple that Paul says the Son of perdition is in at the coming of Christ. Does not the definite article "The," indicate that God has but one Temple at that time of note? "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, (as expressed Dan. viii. 11, 12; ix. 27; xi. 31), there shall be 1290 days."—xii. 11. Here we find that the date of the days is at the setting up of the abomination, and includes the time that all things were given into the hands of the Son of perdition, who manages the apostate side of the Armageddon battle. See Rev. xvi. 14, 15; Zech. xiv. 1–5.

"Blessed is he that cometh to the 1335 days." "But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." Now if Daniel does not stand in his lot before the time of the Advent, will not these days bring it? I know not how to watch without the position that these days are literal, and a knowledge of the transactions that are connected, and which precede the abomination from which the days are counted, and which is yet future.

This abomination is placed by one whose "arms shall stand on his part."—Dan. xi. 31. But who is he? Is he the Pope or Papacy? Daniel says he is the king of the North; —verse 40, and in verse 21, calls him, "a vile person," "and obtained the kingdom by flatteries." Now if it is the Pope, when and what kingdom was it that he thus obtained? "And after the league made with him, he shall work deceitfully." If this is the Pope, when did he make this league? "And he shall do that which his fathers have not done nor his father's fathers;" etc.—verse 24. Now who are the Pope's father's fathers? and who have been so different from himself? "And he shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the South with a great army."—verse 25, etc. When did the Papacy come against this Southern king with this army? "Both these king's hearts shall be to do mischief, and they shall speak lies at ONE TABLE;"—verse 27. But are we to suppose that one of these kings is an individual and the other the Papal dynasty? It must be so if the Papacy is the author and placer of the abomination of verse 31, and Matt. xxiv. 15. But in that case, who is this Southern king; the contemporary associate of the Papal power? And when and at what table was it, at which they spoke lies? "And he shall do exploits, and shall return to his own land."—verse 28. Now where had the Pope been, and to what land did he return, as his? "At the time appointed he shall return (here he comes back again) and come toward the South; but it shall not be as the former, or as the latter time."—verse 29. "For the ships of Chittim shall come against him." etc.,—verse 30. But when came the ships of Chittim against the Pope? So he goes home again and returns with his arms and places the abomination in the holy place Jerusalem, not in Rome, nor in Constantinople; but in the Temple of God at Jerusalem. "And the king, not the Pope, shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper until the indignation be accomplished;" 1290 days.—verse 36.

This is surely the Man of Sin, but I fail to see it as the Pope. "And they that understand among the people, shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days." "But the people that do know their God, shall be strong and do exploits."—verses 32, 33. Now this is certainly a persecuting war against the saints; and is it not evident that the location of it is in the future, and when "Michael stands up," Dan. xii. 1? and the same as Dan. vii. 21? "And the same horn made war on the saints;" "and the time came that the saints took the kingdom."

A parallel description given by Daniel of this noted king of the North may be found in Ezek. xxxviii., to which I call attention. "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, from thy place out of the North part, thou, and many people with thee, against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land, to take a prey; it shall be in the latter days." "Thus saith the Lord God; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, that I would bring thee against them?"—verse 17. Hence the admonition, "When ye see the abomination spoken of by Daniel stand in the holy place, then let them that are in Judea flee into the mountains; let him which is on the house top not come down to take anything out of his house; neither let him that is in the field return back to take his clothes."—Matt. xxiv. 16, 17, 18.

For various reasons I know not how to apply this admonition as some do to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus in A. D. 70. It is very different from the one given by Luke xxi. 20. But says one, "Do you not destroy the incentive to action by giving a belief that the Advent is not immediately?" Would not this be an admission that ignorance is preferable to understanding, if the belief was false? Failures of prediction, or constant flattery without reality tends to disparagement and infidelity.

I once had a strong hope that I could live to see the Advent day; but testimony connected with circumstances lessen that hope, but not the desire and duty to transmit to our successors and the world, all the light we can accumulate by prayer and exchange of reflective thought. Let our prayer be, "To understand thy will and plan O God, and yield to Thee our resignation to them." But I must forbear, for the length of this article may be repulsive and the contents intrusive if not offensive to our kind Editor, and some of the readers of the HERALD. What I have written is open for review and scrutiny, and I desire correction on points of error.

HOW TO BE SAVED.

BY ELD. B. MATTHIAS.

THERE may be various ways proposed, but there is really but one way; and that is of the Lord's prescribing: "I am the way, the truth, and the life," saith the Lord.

Here follows a true and safe prescription, found in Rom. x. 4–11. Two ways are named, the law, and faith.

The law inposes obligations we cannot meet; for, the demand is, that one "live by them." This is out of human power. But the righteousness of faith, is practical; see 6th verse. Here is an available power prepared to our hand. Read on to verse 11.

We perceive that the work the law demands is effected by another principle, even faith; and this is defined to be believing and confessing. The heart and the mouth are the instruments for our use in the case. The heart is the instrument of emotion and conviction. The mouth for utterance, or expression of the feelings and convictions of the heart. "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved," etc. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

By this account we perceive that the mouth and heart can serve us to perfection; not the running on foot or working with our hands, or intellect alone; the heart must work. But the subject of faith is of the first and last importance—"that God raised Jesus Christ from the dead." And why this? This is the question. Why so necessary to believe that God raised his Son from the dead? It is necessary on all accounts in general. If He is not raised from the dead, there is no life for anybody; even the righteous are "perished;" and "if in this life only, we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." "I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." That is true of grain; you will only get an increase by planting or sowing. Christ is the head of a family for the everlasting ages. If he had refused to die, He only of our entire race could have been worthy of eternal life. Enoch and Elijah would have been remanded back to earth to mingle in its dust. As the case is, there will be much fruit of the kind. "Thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out the dead."—Isa. xxvi. 19. "From the womb of the morning, thou hast the dew of thy youth."—Psa. cx.

This being true now, as the case is, we are not to suppose that under other circumstances it would have been necessary for our Lord to die. He did declare himself to be "the resurrection and the life," before his death, when at the grave of Lazarus. In his labors he manifested a purpose to drive diseases, deformities and death from the earth. This would have been effected, sooner or later, had the Jews accepted him as King. This they would not do, hence the death of Christ. It may be the best of ways for a great result; as such we accept it, and rejoice in the love that has done so much for us.

There is a philosophy in this faith. We are required to bring it out in the form of expression, because it is within. There by intuition, by the favor of God. "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart, that is, the word of faith which we preach." It is there without our asking or seeking; but will never do us the desired service, except we exercise the heart, and make confession with our mouth; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

The salvation is redemption. Redemption is bringing a man or thing back to a former state of liberty or life.

The salvation of the Bible is a very different thing from the common idea. Paul, Peter, the prophets and Jesus, assure us that it is at the resurrection and appearing of the Lord himself. See Luke xxi. 28, Isa. xxv. 9, Heb. xiii. 11, 1 Peter i. 10, 1 Cor. xv. 13, 18.

LIBERTY AND SLAVERY.

AN EXTRACT FROM UNCLE JIM'S SERMON.

UNCLE Jim was a pious old slave in the South; a full blooded African. The sermon was on a funeral occasion, and would do credit to any white man. He did not seem to know anything about the theological devil, but understands what master wicked men serve. His text was,

"Where de Spirit ob de Lord is, dere is liberty."

He spoke as follows:

Christian Brederen: Dis text speaks about liberty. Dat word liberty is a berry pleasant word to hear. Dat ting liberty is a berry favorite idee of de human mind. All men natrally lub liberty, and dey tink dat de more dey hab, de better off dey will be. Isn't dat so my brederen? Don't you sometimes look at your superiors wid envy, and tink how mighty good it would be if we had as much liberty as dey has?

But, my brederen, are you sure dat you understand dis great idee of liberty? Do you tink dat a man hab liberty bekase he hab no master? Do you tink dat all white folks hab so much more real liberty dan us black folks? I look round among de people, and sumhow it 'pears to me dat de higher a man gits in dis world de less true liberty he has; and when he gits to be President ob de United States, 'pears to me he hab no liberty at all, but is jist de servant ob de whole people.

Ah, my brederen you don't allus know what liberty is. A man may tink he hab no master, and yet be a servant arter all. Dere is one master dat ebery body hab dat is de hardest master in de world; and if you hab all oder kind of liberty, and yet hab dis master ober you, den I say dat you don't know nuffen 'bout real liberty. You ask me who dat master be? I tell you brederen; dat hard master is SIN! Yes dat is de hardest master ob all. Dat master make you work harder dan any oder. In de wet, and in de dry, in de hot and in de cold, he make you work; on de Lord's day, and on de Christmas day, and on ebery day he make you work; when you young and when you old, when you sick and when you well, it's nothing but work, hard work, all troo life. And what does dis master do for his servants? What does he gib 'em? Does he gib 'em bread, and meat, and clothes? does he nuss 'em when dey is sick, and comfort dem when dey sorrow? No! my brederen. He's a hard master; he gib his servants noting but husks to eat; he gib 'em noting but filthy rags to wear; when dey is sick, he neber go near de cabin where dey lie, 'cept to frighten dem wid visions ob death; and when dey hab worked for him all dere lives, and worked demselves harder dan de oberseer eber worked dem in de cotton field, why den dis hard master, Sin, locks dere poor souls up foreber in de prison ob hell, and trows de key down into de bottomless pit!

So, brederen, dere's no true liberty but dat liberty which my text talks about. Where de Spirit ob de Lord is, dere is liberty. De Spirit ob de Lord breaks de poor sinner's chains. De Spirit ob de Lord brings him out of bondage into de light an' liberty ob de children ob God! Brederen, if de Son make you free, den ye be free indeed. De sinner is nebber free; white or black, high or low, rich or poor, it makes no difference—de sinner is neber free. Only where de Spirit of de Lord is, dare is liberty. And, dear brederen, dere is only one place where dere is perfect freedom. Dere is only one place where dere is no hard master. Dere is only one place where de prisoner's chain is broken foreber. Dat place is heben!

HOW CARLOS THANKED HIS PARENTS.

IN a little village in the neighborhood of Madrid, the great capital of Spain, there lived about a hundred and fifty years ago, a shoemaker who had an only son. The man and his wife were poor, but they saw the necessity of giving Carlos a good education which was a very uncommon thing in Spain at that time. Carlos grew more intelligent from year to year, for he paid great attention to his books. It was the wish of his parents that he should join some profession—be a lawyer, a preacher, or a doctor. But still it was time enough to think about that hereafter. Carlos must be well educated, so that he could be prepared to enter any profession.

There was one peculiarity that distinguished Carlos above all his playmates and friends —he loved his parents, respected their word, and was never known to regard their advice as worthless. He became distinguished in school as being the best scholar in arithmetic and writing. Though he was not a large boy, yet he wrote a very beautiful hand, and was frequently called on to set copies for the rest of the scholars. By and by he passed through the different grades at school, and was already in his eighteenth year. His mother had privately laid aside a little money from year to year, without saying anything to any one about it, which sum she intended to give Carlos to travel with when he became old enough to travel alone. She now told him what she had done, and expressed a wish that he might travel through different parts of Europe, particularly France and Great Britain. Greatly to the surprise of her husband and Carlos, she brought out a little bag of gold, and said that it had been her savings ever since Carlos was an infant.

The arrangements were all made for Carlos to start off on his journey, and even the day was fixed. But how little he knew of what was before him! Just then the Spanish Succession War broke out—a war which was carried on by two different persons who were rivals for the throne. Of course everybody had to enter the army, and the young men first called on were those who were about the age of Carlos. He had to engage in the war, and was compelled to enter the navy. His parents expressed great sorrow at his departure, yet they told him these words when he left them one beautiful May morning; "You have never disobeyed us intentionally, and you leave with our blessing. Only remember the instructions we have given you—always pray regularly night and morning, read the little Bible which you have, and always bear in mind that your Heavenly Father sees all you do, and knows all your thoughts."

The vessel on which Carlos was to be a sailor, was to leave Cadiz, a great Spanish seaport, four days from that time. Carlos did not know where the vessel was to sail to; he only knew that she was to leave. Life on the sea was very strange to him, and it was several days before he knew where the vessel was bound. By and by he found out that she had been ordered to South America, and was going to sail directly around Cape Horn, and land at Lima, Peru. On the voyage, Carlos became a favorite with everybody. Though he was only a common sailor in the navy, like two hundred and fifty others on the same vessel, he yet became distinguished above the rest by his pleasant manners, intelligence and general good conduct. After the vessel reached Lima, there were more sailors taken on board; but one of the officers who had come over from Spain landed at Lima, made his headquarters there, and by special request took Carlos with him as his book keeper and secretary. Carlos was very much pleased with this arrangement, for he did not like the sea at all. He staid in the city three years, and increased in the confidence and love of his employer from day to day.

Having saved a little money during the time of his employment, and land being very cheap in the neighborhood of Lima at that time, he told the officer that he would like to buy a piece of land, and that it was lawful for a soldier, in case he had money enough, to buy his freedom from the service, and therefore he would make application to buy his freedom. The officer was very much surprised at this statement, but he could say nothing against it. He made it a very easy matter for Carlos to buy his freedom, and also advised him to buy a little piece of land if he had a disposition to become a farmer.

Six years passed by during which time Carlos increased in means, and became one of the largest land owners in all the neighborhood of Lima. Everything that he did seemed to prosper. Many of the natives of the country were very dishonest, and they led anything else but industrious and respectable lives. But they all respected Carlos, for whenever he employed anybody, he paid him well for it, treated his neighbors well, and his intelligence led him to be consulted on very important matters.

He could not forget his parents, however, who lived far off in Spain. He wrote to them several times, and on one occasion sent a large sum of money in a letter; but he had never received an answer to any one of his letters. He knew that he owed all his prosperity to the Lord, and that his parents by their advice and good example, had been the instruments of his success. He became more anxious all the time to go and see them. Finally a favorable opportunity came for him to sell his property, for just then land and all kinds of property rose greatly in value. Having sold all that he owned, and received the payment for it in gold, he was greatly surprised to see that he was worth so much.

He took passage again for Spain. The voyage was pleasant, but the nearer he reached his native land, the more anxious he became as to whether his parents were still living or not. At last he reached Cadiz, and proceeded on his way toward Madrid.

Having got to Madrid, he started out as rapidly as possible, taking all his baggage and money with him, for the little village which he had left eighteen yeare before.

"Oh!" said he, on his way, "how changed everything is! I wonder if my parents will be very different, like everything else around me!"

All at once he heard the clock of the village church strike ten—it was ten o'clock at night. In no house that he looked at, did he see a light. Finally he came to the house in which he had been born. His heart beat in anxiety; he was so excited that he could scarcely wait to rap for admission. The door was locked; there was not a sound to be heard, and it seemed as if it was unoccupied. He rapped louder again, and then he heard a slight noise in the rear of the house. He called out: "Wake up! wake up! your son Carlos is here!"

The old shoemaker and his wife had long since gone to bed, and they were alarmed at the noise.

"It is thieves!" they said. "Are the doors and windows all secure?"

In the mean time Carlos repeated his knocks, but with a great deal more violence than before.

"You cannot deceive me," said the old man. "My son has been in South-America many years, if he has not been dead long ago."

"He is not in South-America, I tell you; he has come back, and it is he who is standing at the door, and wants to see you and his mother."

The old lady then said in a low voice: "Let us get up and see who this fellow is. It cannot be possible that it is Carlos, for we have never heard of him since he left home."

Carlos was so impatient that he could not wait. "Hurry, hurry!" he said; "let me in! I have waited so long already!"

Just then the old-fashioned door-bolt was pulled back, and Carlos shoved with so much violence, that he came near injuring both his parents by pushing the door against them. The excitement was intense on both sides. Carlos had found his parents living, for which he could not be thankful enough; and the parents had long ago given up all expectation of ever seeing him again, forgot every trouble in their past life, in the joy they had in meeting their long-lost son.

It was three o'clock in the morning before they stopped talking, when Carlos went to bed in the same little room that he had occupied when a boy.

The next day was taken up in telling the experiences of the past eighteen years. Carlos gave a long account of all the prosperity that he had met with, and his parents told their own history during the same time—the changes that had taken place in the village, who had died, who had got married, and how the country had been getting along. Carlos told his parents that they need not work any more now, for he had enough money for them to live on comfortably.

He built them a very neat house, and supplied every want. He often said to them: "It is you who have been instruments in the hand of God, of all the prosperity that I have enjoyed. There has scarcely been a day that has passed during all the eighteen years when I was away from you, that I did not feel supported by your prayers. It was your example, your advice, and your prayers, that led me to form good resolutions; and when away from home, it was the memory of what you had done, and the confidence that you were still praying for me, that comforted and supported me in my business."

The news had long passed through the village, and, indeed, had been published in many of the papers in Spain, that Carlos had returned, and that he had prospered very much in his absence.

Now I must tell you what the inscription was that Carlos took care to have cut on a beautiful marble slab, and placed over the door of the new house in which he and his aged parents lived:

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—The Methodist.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. (Cheap Edition), Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

The Destiny of the Ungodly.—No. 3.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

In investigating the creation of Adam we found the evidence left us no other conclusion than that he was simply a "living soul," not an "immortal soul," as some would have us believe. He possessed no more of immortality than the animals over which he had dominion; and being deprived of right to the tree of life, of which, had he remained innocent, he might have partaken and lived forever. His posterity derived nothing from him but a mortal existence—a nature susceptible to decay and death. Adam differed from the other creatures inasmuch as he possessed the capability of developing a character which should decide his eternal destiny. With these facts in our mind we may properly consider

2. The trial of Adam. The necessity of the trial of Adam clearly appears when we consider the wise and holy purpose of Jehovah in creating the world and placing man in it. As the work of his own hands it was designed not to be "removed forever" (Psa. civ. 5), but to glorify His holy name throughout the vast ages of eternity by dwelling with the intelligent beings of His creation, who should have "dominion" over it; and therefore, as we understand the Scriptures, the creation of man out of the earth was a glorious purpose to bring forth visible praise from matter. This purpose will never fail, and whatever length of time may elapse in accomplishing this object, evil will finally be utterly exterminated, with all its dire effects, and God's "tabernacle" will be established "with men, and He shall dwell with them, and they shall be His people."—Rev. xxi. 3. This divine purpose was nothing short of an eternal union of His creatures "both which are in heaven and which are upon earth," and thus make this earth the grand centre from which should arise, in heavenly harmony, never-ending praise in exaltation of His name. But God's eternal glory and the endless happiness of His creatures depend upon perfect harmony to His will in all the vast universe; and thus appears the necessity of Adam's trial to test his loyalty before bestowing upon him the immutable gift of immortality.

The very fact that Adam was placed under a law, to which was attached a penalty for disobedience, proves conclusively to any candid mind, it seems to us, that he was created a free moral agent, otherwise he could not have sinned. This is also proved from the fact that he possessed voluntary power. Compulsory power, exercised by God, might have turned Adam into a rock, but could not give him a moral character. His compliance with the will of his Creator must be voluntary. Possessed of the right of choice, he alone must bear the responsibility of his action, whether it be in harmony or at variance with his Creator.

Amid Eden's glories he was simply placed under a law of restriction; and "the Lord commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 16, 17. We have no intimation in all the Scriptures that Adam did not understand this law, or the nature of the penalty attached thereto; but could he have had modern theology of the present day to have given him a few fine definitions of the nature of death, we might justly expect to have found some such intimation. But he was not thus favored. The law forbade him to partake of a certain tree, and the penalty of his disobedience was simply death. Deprived of right to the tree of life, death certainly awaited him. He dared to disobey his Maker. He partook of the forbidden fruit. He proved himself a rebel to his righteous Sovereign. And now, I sincerely ask, was there any way possible for him to escape the infliction of the penalty of the law which he had broken? This question deserves more than a passing notice. It was a positive law which he disobeyed and contained no provisions by which it was possible for him to escape the infliction of the penalty.

Thus it is clear that Adam was placed in a dispensation peculiar to himself, in which he was judged, condemned, and the sentence executed. The law by which he was judged was confined to that dispensation, for had his posterity, upon whom he entailed a mortal nature, come under this law they would have shared his fate, and God's purpose in the creation of the world would have proved a failure. But this is not to be. The immutability of God's character is at stake. Though for six thousand years the earth has groaned under the curse of sin, yet we are assured of a "good time coming," to which the heart looks forward with ardent joy, when we shall behold the earth again arrayed in its paradistic glory.

3. The fate of Adam. In our investigation we beheld him as a condemned criminal before his Creator, and as he is first in the list of sinners, it is meet that we consider his destiny.

The penalty which Adam incurred by his disobedience was death. "Of dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return," were the words of his Creator. As this was the penalty, we may justly inquire, What is the nature of death? Were it not for the cavilers at the plainest words of inspiration, the definition which God gave to Adam would be sufficient, viz: "Of dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return." Death is the opposite of life. Where death holds supreme sway there can be no life. Death, abstractly considered, must of necessity be either the destruction or suspension of life. Many have fondly built their theories of the future upon the latter definition, but it will not for a moment stand in the light of the holy Scriptures. If death is the suspension of life, then most truly Adam must have the same life restored to him which was forfeited to the law. If this be true, what became of God's veracity? If death was the suspension of life to Adam, as large numbers strenuously advocate, how will they avoid the dilemma that the penalty for his transgression was either a temporary loss of life, or that it was not executed? Either of these positions will bring them into direct antagonism to the word of inspiration. If the penalty was not executed then the theory charges God with injustice and deception. If the penalty was temporary death, or a suspension of life, then Adam will finally be saved, and therefore the theory assumes that God's purpose in driving man from the garden and guarding the tree of life "lest he put forth his hand and eat and live forever," will prove a failure. To such absurd and unreasonable conclusions the advocates of a universal resurrection are driven in their efforts to sustain their cherished theory. But it seems strange if death was the suspension of life to Adam that God gave him no intimation of it; and stranger still, if Adam is to live again, that God gave no intimation of it in his revelation to Adam's posterity. The Scriptures must be our only source of appeal on this subject, and in that we are unable to find that Adam died with a particle of hope of a resurrection, but on the contrary he entered a state of hopeless darkness regarding a future life. As he was condemned and executed under a positive law, peculiar to that dispensation, we are led to believe that had his posterity come under that law there would have been no future life for any. Though they possess a nature subject to death, yet they have a remedy that was not within Adam's grasp. Through Christ the Second Adam, and only through Him, they are offered a way of escape from the state of dissolution to which Adam was consigned.

But, says one, Adam must be raised from the dead to share in the general judgment, for Christ says "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." If the peculiar construction of this passage be true, and Adam is to come forth from the grave, then indeed God's immutability is called in question. Adam was judged, sentenced and executed. Then upon what principle of justice can he be raised from the dead, to be judged and executed the second time? Can he justly be judged by a law which he never was under? No! The "Judge of all the earth will do right," and therefore there remains no future life for Adam. No resurrection trumpet will disturb his dust. And thus we see that the destiny of the first sinner is an eternal, unbroken state of death—an utter loss of life.

To substantiate this view of Adam's destiny, let us briefly consider the nature of death. We have quite fully shown that it cannot be the mere suspension of life. This conclusion is fully sustained, we believe, by the entire Scriptures. Says the apostle Paul: "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." That this declaration refers only to a class of the dead we readily admit, but we contend that it refers to all who are destined to be raised from the dead. The positive proof of this is in his own argument. He says: "It (the body) is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." A "spiritual" and an "incorruptible" body are the same. Again he says: "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." What clearer testimony could be desired to convince any candid mind that this mortal life meets with a total and irrecoverable destruction in death, and that all who are destined to live again will be raised by virtue of another life principle, which is indestructible in its nature? Hence to all who shall live beyond the grave there is an existence of eternal blessedness and glory. This will be the Paradise restored under Christ the Second Adam; the blessed inheritance of the saints, which the prophets received in promise and by faith beheld afar off.

In this hasty sketch we have necessarily omitted much which could greatly sustain the principles of truth which we have stated, some of which will appear in other articles, in which we shall show that the destiny of all the ungodly is that which befel the first sinner. May the grace of God sustain us in the narrow way which leads into life eternal.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 1870.

Saul and the Woman at Endor.

The affair of Saul in consulting with the sorceress at Endor, has given rise to many singular speculations and conjectures; and in these days, when familiar spirits are so common and audacious, it is well to understand the matter if we can.

The practice of divination in its several branches, including this of necromancy among the rest, has been the occasion of great marvel in the world, especially among the pagan and idolatrous nations. Some have brought it into a kind of system, and made it a part of their religion; and scarcely any unevangelized people have been found who did not resort to it more or less, in some form or other. It is a pity that it should not be confined to the heathen, to whom it appropriately belongs and who might be expected to do such things.

But whatever else may be said on the subject, some things are very plain in regard to it. No good is ever ascribed to it in the sacred Scriptures, nor is it ever spoken of in terms of approbation or allowance. The inspired writers uniformly brand it with expressions of disrespect, and not unfrequently with sarcastic contempt. Nor does it appear to have been of any benefit to mankind that should entitle it to respect. There is no evidence that any community or individual, either in ancient or modern times, was ever made a whit the wiser or better for resorting to it in any shape or form. Thousands have been duped by it, and fleeced and bereft of their wits, and led into shameful follies and vices; but we are not aware that it has ever been the means of improving a person's understanding, or moral character, or happiness, or usefulness. It certainly afforded no benefit to Saul, either in mind or body. It only added to his guilt and wretchedness, and put the finishing stroke to his condemnation; for the record is, "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one which had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it, and inquired not of the Lord; therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David, the son of Jesse."

Neither do we in any instance find it spoken of as worthy of the least confidence. It is characterized as "vanity," "lying vanities," "vain vision," "lying divination," "flattering divination," "deceit," "falsehood;" and those who employ it as "deceivers," "lying prophets," "that see vanity, and that divine lies." With what indignant severity does Jeremiah speak of them: "They prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart;" and Ezekiel, "Will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread . . . by your lying to my people that hear your lies?" It is invariably treated as a work of mendacity and imposture; and nothing but the credulity of ignorance, or superstition, or both, can ever presume to give it any credit. And, moreover, a disposition to resort to it is uniformly denounced as indicating a false and wicked heart. It is recorded to the reproach of Manasseh in the days of his impiety, that he "observed times, and used enchantment, and used witchcrafts, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards; he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord to provoke him to anger." And it is always either expressed or implied that those who practice such things are of a debased and impious character.

And still a stronger evidence of its evil tendency and effects is, that everything of the kind was absolutely forbidden by divine law. "There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do such things are an abomination unto the Lord." "A man or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death; they shall stone them with stones; their blood shall be upon them." These stern denunciations of the Mosaic law were directed against every species and degree of magic arts, not because they usurped any supernatural power, but because of the mischievous tendency of all such pretensions, to delude and corrupt the people, withdrawing their minds from God only wise; fostering a love of the marvelous and vain; unsettling the religious convictions of such as were weak in the faith; and substituting instead, an idle and debasing superstition.

Such being the notorious character of divination in all its forms—never spoken of with respect or tolerance in the word of God—never as worthy of the least confidence—but always denounced and forbidden as a vile and pernicious imposition—what do we care whether we know particularly how its arts were practiced, or not? If the whole thing is a sham in fact, a lying imposition, and seriously mischievous in its effects upon the minds of the weak and credulous, what more do we wish to learn of it? What further investigation or respect does it deserve?

That the divination practiced in these days under the name of spiritualism and the like, and the various acts of divination condemned and forbidden in the word of God, are all of the same general nature and tendency, we have no doubt. That in either case, then or now, there is any thing supernatural about it, or that it has any special connection with invisible powers or spirits, good or bad, we see no reason whatever to believe. As both then and now mankind have an insatiable disposition to be prying into the unseen and the future, from a curiosity and desire to ascertain the course of fortune, or to acquire a knowledge of what is hidden and undiscoverable; so both then and now a variety of arts and expedients have been contrived to gratify and flatter this disposition; either from a love of the marvelous, the love of imposture, the love of money, the love of skepticism, or the love of being esteemed mysteriously wise and penetrating.

That there are now, and always have been, some phenomena attending these arts which are not easy to be accounted for, except by the initiated, and perhaps not even by themselves in all cases, because of their ignorance of certain physical laws and agencies, is very probable; but that there is, or ever has been, any connection between the phenomena exhibited and what they are supposed to presage, except in the imagination of the diviner, or of those who are duped by him, there appears no reason to believe. The whole thing both as it was denounced by the Law of Moses, and as practiced in these days, is nothing, in our views, but a piece of skillful trickery, carried on in part, perhaps, by taking advantage of some occult laws and agencies of nature which are not generally understood; but still, a sheer artifice. And as under the Jewish regimen, so now, the whole thing ought to be condemned and despised; and on just the same ground, that it has a tendency to unsettle the religious faith, and to beguile and corrupt the minds of the weak and superstitious. The influence of deceivers and impostors is always hurtful. The apostle must first put Elymas to silence and confusion before he could hope to bring Sergius Paulus to embrace the faith of the gospel.

With these preparatory thoughts in mind, let us approach the sacred narrative of Saul's consulting with the sorceress at Endor; and it will appear, we think, that there was nothing supernatural in what there occurred; nothing that forms an exception to the general facts and principles already adduced. It was just what it purports to be, a specimen of "lying divination;" an example of the manner in which a shrewd woman, and base as shrewd, apt and skilled in the practice of deception, and pretending to be in communication with a familiar spirit, could contrive to impose upon the senses and the imagination of an unhappy and half-demented man. He himself was evidently made to believe that the veritable Samuel, or his ghost, was actually brought up from the dead, through the agency of this woman, to tell him what he should do, and what should befall him. But must we believe any such thing because he did? Must we adopt his superstition as our own? Readers of the Bible have generally felt that there was something very strange and supernatural in the occurrence here related, and have resorted to various methods of accounting for them.

We shall first advert to some of the opinions that have been entertained on the subject, and briefly examine their merits.

1. The most common impression of the matter seems to be, that Samuel was really made to appear to Saul, by the special interposition and power of God, with the design to rebuke and punish him for his impiety, by stirring up a remorseful remembrance of his rebellion, and discovesing, to him his last greatest calamity.

But here it should be distinctly remarked, that this supposition is altogether gratuitous. The sacred narrator, from first to last, does not give the slightest intimation that God interposed in the affair otherwise than by his general permissive providence. And if we were expected to understand that the Lord did, in this instance, turn aside from his ordinary course of proceeding, and do that which is entirely unlike any thing else recorded of him in the Bible, should we not have been so clearly informed on the point as to leave no room for questioning? Is a parallel case to be found in the whole sacred record, where God wrought a miracle, and it is not ascribed to him?

But more than this, are we to believe that the Lord would thus contravene his own authoritative word, which most strongly denounces, and positively forbids all dealings with familiar spirits? Would he treat that vile woman at Endor, and her still viler craft with so much consideration and respect as to give her the power, or make her the medium, through which to send his servant Samuel from the other world, to hold an interview with the discarded Saul, when as we are expressly told, he had previously refused to answer him, "either by dreams, or by vision, or by prophets?" Would he thus set aside his own chosen and appointed methods of communicating with men, and adopt this, on which he was wont to pour his holy contempt, and which he had solemnly forbidden? Would he put so much distinction upon that sorceress, who, by his law, deserved to be stoned with stones till she died, or do so much to sanction her heathenish practices, and to encourage a belief in their reliableness, when, on all other occasions, he sought to discountenance and suppress everything of the kind by pronouncing it a lying vanity and abomination, and by affixing to it the penalty of death? Is the Lord ever, apparently even, so inconsistent, and so divided against himself? We cannot believe it; our reverence for the Most High forbids the idea. Had the Lord wished to send Samuel from the invisible world to reprove Saul and forewarn him of his doom, he could surely have done it without employing so exceptionable an agency as this.

2. Another supposition is, that Samuel was really called up and made to appear at the woman's summons, by the power of the devil. But here again it should be observed, that nothing of the kind is intimated in the narrative. Satan is not introduced into the story at all, either directly or remotely, except it be in the moral character of the king and the sorceress. . . . If Samuel was called up by the power of the devil, it must be because God allowed and commissioned him to do it. But to suppose this, makes God a consenting party to a transaction, which, in all its aspects, was directly contrary to his own law, and apparently subversive of his own design in denouncing and prohibiting all magic arts. It amounts to much the same thing as saying that God performed the act himself. But is it not at variance with all our ideas of God's character, and of the condition and privileges of departed saints, that the Lord should in this manner subject the soul of his servant Samuel to the power of the devil, to be summoned back to earth at the call of a sorceress whom the law condemned as worthy of death to appear and answer to the inquiries of such a man as Saul? The whole idea seems entirely inconsistent with Scripture, and is revolting to our moral sense. We cannot accept it. Our impression of the honor that God confers upon his departed saints quite rejects such a theory.

3. Another explanation is, that Satan himself appeared in the disguise of Samuel, by putting on his form, assuming his garb, and speaking in his name. This is Matthew Henry's idea. But this is attributing to the devil nothing less than miraculous power, whereas we have no evidence that he possesses any such power, unless it be given him of God, which, in a case like this, as we have intimated, would involve a Divine inconsistency. It assumes that Satan can put on the appearance, and counterfeit the living presence of any one as he pleases—an admission that would endanger the strongest evidences of Christianity; for how could we then know that Satan did not personate the Saviour as risen from the dead, and ascending on high? How could we be assured that he did not counterfeit Lazarus as coming forth from the grave? What confidence could we have when we meet and converse with one whom we suppose to be a good and honest man, that he is not, after all, the devil in disguise? And besides, is it congruous with the devil's character to reprove a man for his impiety and wickedness, as the apparition at Endor reproved Saul? We are indeed told metaphorically, by way of setting forth the cunning and deceitfulness of Satan, that he is "transformed into an angel of light;" but where is it affirmed that he can transform himself either into a living or dead man as he pleases? This doctrine, therefore, cannot be admitted without deranging all laws of evidence, and leaving us in doubt whether to believe the testimony of any professed witnesses, or even of our own senses. We cannot accept it.

4. Others have maintained that the whole account is the narrative of "a miracle, a Divine representation or impression, partly upon the senses of Saul, and partly upon those of the woman, and intended for the rebuke and punishment of Saul." Worse and worse! This is bringing God into direct fellowship with the heathenish and forbidden practices of divination, and claiming that he co-operated with that guilty sorceress at Endor, in deceiving the senses of Saul, and the senses of the woman herself! It imputes to him the working of a miracle with the design to make a representation or impression that Samuel was present, when in reality there was no Samuel there! Are we then to believe that God is a man that he should lie, or the Son of man that he should deceive, and that, too, by a special miracle? What, then, becomes of all miracles wrought in attestation of the truth? What further ground of confidence in them remains? We must be allowed to say, that if we were to adopt such an interpretation we should but deceive ourselves, instead of being deceived by our Maker. And yet this is the view that is gravely put forth and advocated in a work of no less pretention than Kitto's Cyclopedia, [Art. Witchcrafts.]

5. One other supposition is, that the woman, by the mysterious power of her magic arts, actually called up Samuel from the dead at the request of Saul. The mystery of this idea is so ridiculous that it scarcely seems worthy of serious notice. It presumes that God leaves the souls of his departed servants in subjection to the will and authority of those who practice divination in contempt of his holy word; allowing and empowering them to summon back to earth the spirits of the righteous and blessed to answer such inquiries as they may be pleased to make, and at such times and places as may suit their convenience or caprice; and all this by nothing else than the rites of sorcery! This is marvelous truly! most exquisitely marvelous! And so we are to believe, are we, that the honored prophet Samuel was put to the degradation of being recalled from his abode of happiness and glory, and placed under the magic control of that scandalous woman at Endor? What can match this but the silly farce of modern spiritualism? We will not be so indecorous as to suppose that any of our readers have slipped back so far toward the dark ages as to entertain any such notion as this.

What, then, is the interpretation of this affair, which, almost from necessity, we are driven to adopt? It is, that the whole account is intended to be a narrative of what was pretended to be a reality, but which in fact was an entire deception. The sacred writer aims to describe the scene just as it appeared, and just as the cunning woman sought to make it appear, to the bewildered imagination of the superstitious and unhappy Saul—presuming his readers all along to know what estimate to put upon magic appearances; that as "an idol is nothing in the world," so all the sorceries and divination connected with idolatry are nothing but "vanity and a lie." There is no Samuel whatever in the case; no shade, no ghost or spirit of Samuel; but only was feigned or pretended to be Samuel—either by the woman herself, playing part of a ventriloquist, as hinted at by the Seventy in calling her gunee engastrimuthos; or by another person secreted in another room, or behind a screen, and acting in collusion with her. The whole thing, we are persuaded, was nothing more or less than a piece of artful trickery, designed and successfully managed to impose upon the mind of Saul, and make him believe a lie. The sacred historian does not take it upon him to explain, but only to describe the case, as it was made to appear. And does he, moreover, with the design to put the greater discredit and contempt upon the affair, adopt, in relating it, a smothered strain of sarcastic irony, like that of Elijah, where he rallies the prophets of Baal respecting their god, speaking of him as if he were a real god? "Cry aloud," he tells them, "for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or, peradventure, he sleepeth, and must be awakened." A similar vein of satire is found in Isaiah, where he describes the process of making a graven image out of an ash tree. [Isai. xliv.] And this style of language is not uncommon in the sacred writings, especially when images and lying divination are the subject of remark. So here, we venture to suggest, without affirming, that the narrator is adroitly making use of keen-edged satire, archly describing the scene and telling us what Samuel said, as if he himself believed that the prophet was really there, when in truth he believed no such thing, and did not intend or expect his readers to believe any such thing.

But if this is the construction to be put upon the narrative, that it is intended only to describe appearances and pretensions, and with the view to bring them into regular discredit, we may expect to find some points where the disguise crops out, as geologists say. Let us carefully scrutinize Saul, the sorceress, and the pretended Samuel, and see.

1. Look at the attitude in which Saul is exhibited in the picture. Naturally gloomy and apprehensive, superstitious and given to fits of excessive melancholy, Saul had become, through a long series of vexations and anxieties, almost or quite delirious. And now the Philistines had "gathered together all their armies" against him; David of whom he continually lived in extreme jealousy and hatred, had taken refuge in their country, and

THE DESTINY OF THE UNGODLY.—No. 3.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

IN investigating the creation of Adam we found the evidence left us no other conclusion than that he was simply a "living soul," not an "immortal soul," as some would have us believe. He possessed no more of immortality than the animals over which he had dominion; and being deprived of right to the tree of life, of which, had he remained innocent, he might have partaken and lived forever. His posterity derived nothing from him but a mortal existence—a nature susceptible to decay and death. Adam differed from the other creatures inasmuch as he possessed the capability of developing a character which should decide his eternal destiny. With these facts in our mind we may properly consider

2. The trial of Adam. The necessity of the trial of Adam clearly appears when we consider the wise and holy purpose of Jehovah in creating the world and placing man in it. As the work of his own hands it was designed not to be "removed forever" (Psa. civ. 5), but to glorify His holy name throughout the vast ages of eternity by dwelling with the intelligent beings of His creation, who should have "dominion" over it; and therefore, as we understand the Scriptures, the creation of man out of the earth was a glorious purpose to bring forth visible praise from matter. This purpose will never fail, and whatever length of time may elapse in accomplishing this object, evil will finally be utterly exterminated, with all its dire effects, and God's "tabernacle" will be established "with men, and He shall dwell with them, and they shall be His people."—Rev. xxi. 3. This divine purpose was nothing short of an eternal union of His creatures "both which are in heaven and which are upon earth," and thus make this earth the grand centre from which should arise, in heavenly harmony, never-ending praise in exaltation of His name. But God's eternal glory and the endless happiness of His creatures depend upon perfect harmony to His will in all the vast universe; and thus appears the necessity of Adam's trial to test his loyalty before bestowing upon him the immutable gift of immortality.

The very fact that Adam was placed under a law, to which was attached a penalty for disobedience, proves conclusively to any candid mind, it seems to us, that he was created a free moral agent, otherwise he could not have sinned. This is also proved from the fact that he possessed voluntary power. Compulsory power, exercised by God, might have turned Adam into a rock, but could not give him a moral character. His compliance with the will of his Creator must be voluntary. Possessed of the right of choice, he alone must bear the responsibility of his action, whether it be in harmony or at variance with his Creator.

Amid Eden's glories he was simply placed under a law of restriction; and "the Lord commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 16, 17. We have no intimation in all the Scriptures that Adam did not understand this law, or the nature of the penalty attached thereto; but could he have had modern theology of the present day to have given him a few fine definitions of the nature of death, we might justly expect to have found some such intimation. But he was not thus favored. The law forbade him to partake of a certain tree, and the penalty of his disobedience was simply death. Deprived of right to the tree of life, death certainly awaited him. He dared to disobey his Maker. He partook of the forbidden fruit. He proved himself a rebel to his righteous Sovereign. And now, I sincerely ask, was there any way possible for him to escape the infliction of the penalty of the law which he had broken? This question deserves more than a passing notice. It was a positive law which he disobeyed and contained no provisions by which it was possible for him to escape the infliction of the penalty.

Thus it is clear that Adam was placed in a dispensation peculiar to himself, in which he was judged, condemned, and the sentence executed. The law by which he was judged was confined to that dispensation, for had his posterity, upon whom he entailed a mortal nature, come under this law they would have shared his fate, and God's purpose in the creation of the world would have proved a failure. But this is not to be. The immutability of God's character is at stake. Though for six thousand years the earth has groaned under the curse of sin, yet we are assured of a "good time coming," to which the heart looks forward with ardent joy, when we shall behold the earth again arrayed in its paradistic glory.

3. The fate of Adam. In our investigation we beheld him as a condemned criminal before his Creator, and as he is first in the list of sinners, it is meet that we consider his destiny.

The penalty which Adam incurred by his disobedience was death. "Of dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return," were the words of his Creator. As this was the penalty, we may justly inquire, What is the nature of death? Were it not for the cavilers at the plainest words of inspiration, the definition which God gave to Adam would be sufficient, viz: "Of dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return." Death is the opposite of life. Where death holds supreme sway there can be no life. Death, abstractly considered, must of necessity be either the destruction or suspension of life. Many have fondly built their theories of the future upon the latter definition, but it will not for a moment stand in the light of the holy Scriptures. If death is the suspension of life, then most truly Adam must have the same life restored to him which was forfeited to the law. If this be true, what became of God's veracity? If death was the suspension of life to Adam, as large numbers strenuously advocate, how will they avoid the dilemma that the penalty for his transgression was either a temporary loss of life, or that it was not executed? Either of these positions will bring them into direct antagonism to the word of inspiration. If the penalty was not executed then the theory charges God with injustice and deception. If the penalty was temporary death, or a suspension of life, then Adam will finally be saved, and therefore the theory assumes that God's purpose in driving man from the garden and guarding the tree of life "lest he put forth his hand and eat and live forever," will prove a failure. To such absurd and unreasonable conclusions the advocates of a universal resurrection are driven in their efforts to sustain their cherished theory. But it seems strange if death was the suspension of life to Adam that God gave him no intimation of it; and stranger still, if Adam is to live again, that God gave no intimation of it in his revelation to Adam's posterity. The Scriptures must be our only source of appeal on this subject, and in that we are unable to find that Adam died with a particle of hope of a resurrection, but on the contrary he entered a state of hopeless darkness regarding a future life. As he was condemned and executed under a positive law, peculiar to that dispensation, we are led to believe that had his posterity come under that law there would have been no future life for any. Though they possess a nature subject to death, yet they have a remedy that was not within Adam's grasp. Through Christ the Second Adam, and only through Him, they are offered a way of escape from the state of dissolution to which Adam was consigned.

But, says one, Adam must be raised from the dead to share in the general judgment, for Christ says "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." If the peculiar construction of this passage be true, and Adam is to come forth from the grave, then indeed God's immutability is called in question. Adam was judged, sentenced and executed. Then upon what principle of justice can he be raised from the dead, to be judged and executed the second time? Can he justly be judged by a law which he never was under? No! The "Judge of all the earth will do right," and therefore there remains no future life for Adam. No resurrection trumpet will disturb his dust. And thus we see that the destiny of the first sinner is an eternal, unbroken state of death—an utter loss of life.

To substantiate this view of Adam's destiny, let us briefly consider the nature of death. We have quite fully shown that it cannot be the mere suspension of life. This conclusion is fully sustained, we believe, by the entire Scriptures. Says the apostle Paul: "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." That this declaration refers only to a class of the dead we readily admit, but we contend that it refers to all who are destined to be raised from the dead. The positive proof of this is in his own argument. He says: "It (the body) is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." A "spiritual" and an "incorruptible" body are the same. Again he says: "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." What clearer testimony could be desired to convince any candid mind that this mortal life meets with a total and irrecoverable destruction in death, and that all who are destined to live again will be raised by virtue of another life principle, which is indestructible in its nature? Hence to all who shall live beyond the grave there is an existence of eternal blessedness and glory. This will be the Paradise restored under Christ the Second Adam; the blessed inheritance of the saints, which the prophets received in promise and by faith beheld afar off.

In this hasty sketch we have necessarily omitted much which could greatly sustain the principles of truth which we have stated, some of which will appear in other articles, in which we shall show that the destiny of all the ungodly is that which befel the first sinner. May the grace of God sustain us in the narrow way which leads into life eternal.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 1870.

SAUL AND THE WOMAN AT ENDOR.

THE affair of Saul in consulting with the sorceress at Endor, has given rise to many singular speculations and conjectures; and in these days, when familiar spirits are so common and audacious, it is well to understand the matter if we can.

The practice of divination in its several branches, including this of necromancy among the rest, has been the occasion of great marvel in the world, especially among the pagan and idolatrous nations. Some have brought it into a kind of system, and made it a part of their religion; and scarcely any unevangelized people have been found who did not resort to it more or less, in some form or other. It is a pity that it should not be confined to the heathen, to whom it appropriately belongs and who might be expected to do such things.

But whatever else may be said on the subject, some things are very plain in regard to it. No good is ever ascribed to it in the sacred Scriptures, nor is it ever spoken of in terms of approbation or allowance. The inspired writers uniformly brand it with expressions of disrespect, and not unfrequently with sarcastic contempt. Nor does it appear to have been of any benefit to mankind that should entitle it to respect. There is no evidence that any community or individual, either in ancient or modern times, was ever made a whit the wiser or better for resorting to it in any shape or form. Thousands have been duped by it, and fleeced and bereft of their wits, and led into shameful follies and vices; but we are not aware that it has ever been the means of improving a person's understanding, or moral character, or happiness, or usefulness. It certainly afforded no benefit to Saul, either in mind or body. It only added to his guilt and wretchedness, and put the finishing stroke to his condemnation; for the record is, "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one which had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it, and inquired not of the Lord; therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David, the son of Jesse."

Neither do we in any instance find it spoken of as worthy of the least confidence. It is characterized as "vanity," "lying vanities," "vain vision," "lying divination," "flattering divination," "deceit," "falsehood;" and those who employ it as "deceivers," "lying prophets," "that see vanity, and that divine lies." With what indignant severity does Jeremiah speak of them: "They prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart;" and Ezekiel, "Will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread . . . by your lying to my people that hear your lies?" It is invariably treated as a work of mendacity and imposture; and nothing but the credulity of ignorance, or superstition, or both, can ever presume to give it any credit. And, moreover, a disposition to resort to it is uniformly denounced as indicating a false and wicked heart. It is recorded to the reproach of Manasseh in the days of his impiety, that he "observed times, and used enchantment, and used witchcrafts, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards; he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord to provoke him to anger." And it is always either expressed or implied that those who practice such things are of a debased and impious character.

And still a stronger evidence of its evil tendency and effects is, that everything of the kind was absolutely forbidden by divine law. "There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do such things are an abomination unto the Lord." "A man or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death; they shall stone them with stones; their blood shall be upon them." These stern denunciations of the Mosaic law were directed against every species and degree of magic arts, not because they usurped any supernatural power, but because of the mischievous tendency of all such pretensions, to delude and corrupt the people, withdrawing their minds from God only wise; fostering a love of the marvelous and vain; unsettling the religious convictions of such as were weak in the faith; and substituting instead, an idle and debasing superstition.

Such being the notorious character of divination in all its forms—never spoken of with respect or tolerance in the word of God—never as worthy of the least confidence—but always denounced and forbidden as a vile and pernicious imposition—what do we care whether we know particularly how its arts were practiced, or not? If the whole thing is a sham in fact, a lying imposition, and seriously mischievous in its effects upon the minds of the weak and credulous, what more do we wish to learn of it? What further investigation or respect does it deserve?

That the divination practiced in these days under the name of spiritualism and the like, and the various acts of divination condemned and forbidden in the word of God, are all of the same general nature and tendency, we have no doubt. That in either case, then or now, there is any thing supernatural about it, or that it has any special connection with invisible powers or spirits, good or bad, we see no reason whatever to believe. As both then and now mankind have an insatiable disposition to be prying into the unseen and the future, from a curiosity and desire to ascertain the course of fortune, or to acquire a knowledge of what is hidden and undiscoverable; so both then and now a variety of arts and expedients have been contrived to gratify and flatter this disposition; either from a love of the marvelous, the love of imposture, the love of money, the love of skepticism, or the love of being esteemed mysteriously wise and penetrating.

That there are now, and always have been, some phenomena attending these arts which are not easy to be accounted for, except by the initiated, and perhaps not even by themselves in all cases, because of their ignorance of certain physical laws and agencies, is very probable; but that there is, or ever has been, any connection between the phenomena exhibited and what they are supposed to presage, except in the imagination of the diviner, or of those who are duped by him, there appears no reason to believe. The whole thing both as it was denounced by the Law of Moses, and as practiced in these days, is nothing, in our views, but a piece of skillful trickery, carried on in part, perhaps, by taking advantage of some occult laws and agencies of nature which are not generally understood; but still, a sheer artifice. And as under the Jewish regimen, so now, the whole thing ought to be condemned and despised; and on just the same ground, that it has a tendency to unsettle the religious faith, and to beguile and corrupt the minds of the weak and superstitious. The influence of deceivers and impostors is always hurtful. The apostle must first put Elymas to silence and confusion before he could hope to bring Sergius Paulus to embrace the faith of the gospel.

With these preparatory thoughts in mind, let us approach the sacred narrative of Saul's consulting with the sorceress at Endor; and it will appear, we think, that there was nothing supernatural in what there occurred; nothing that forms an exception to the general facts and principles already adduced. It was just what it purports to be, a specimen of "lying divination;" an example of the manner in which a shrewd woman, and base as shrewd, apt and skilled in the practice of deception, and pretending to be in communication with a familiar spirit, could contrive to impose upon the senses and the imagination of an unhappy and half-demented man. He himself was evidently made to believe that the veritable Samuel, or his ghost, was actually brought up from the dead, through the agency of this woman, to tell him what he should do, and what should befall him. But must we believe any such thing because he did? Must we adopt his superstition as our own? Readers of the Bible have generally felt that there was something very strange and supernatural in the occurrence here related, and have resorted to various methods of accounting for them.

We shall first advert to some of the opinions that have been entertained on the subject, and briefly examine their merits.

1. The most common impression of the matter seems to be, that Samuel was really made to appear to Saul, by the special interposition and power of God, with the design to rebuke and punish him for his impiety, by stirring up a remorseful remembrance of his rebellion, and discovering, to him his last greatest calamity.

But here it should be distinctly remarked, that this supposition is altogether gratuitous. The sacred narrator, from first to last, does not give the slightest intimation that God interposed in the affair otherwise than by his general permissive providence. And if we were expected to understand that the Lord did, in this instance, turn aside from his ordinary course of proceeding, and do that which is entirely unlike any thing else recorded of him in the Bible, should we not have been so clearly informed on the point as to leave no room for questioning? Is a parallel case to be found in the whole sacred record, where God wrought a miracle, and it is not ascribed to him?

But more than this, are we to believe that the Lord would thus contravene his own authoritative word, which most strongly denounces, and positively forbids all dealings with familiar spirits? Would he treat that vile woman at Endor, and her still viler craft with so much consideration and respect as to give her the power, or make her the medium, through which to send his servant Samuel from the other world, to hold an interview with the discarded Saul, when as we are expressly told, he had previously refused to answer him, "either by dreams, or by vision, or by prophets?" Would he thus set aside his own chosen and appointed methods of communicating with men, and adopt this, on which he was wont to pour his holy contempt, and which he had solemnly forbidden? Would he put so much distinction upon that sorceress, who, by his law, deserved to be stoned with stones till she died, or do so much to sanction her heathenish practices, and to encourage a belief in their reliableness, when, on all other occasions, he sought to discountenance and suppress everything of the kind by pronouncing it a lying vanity and abomination, and by affixing to it the penalty of death? Is the Lord ever, apparently even, so inconsistent, and so divided against himself? We cannot believe it; our reverence for the Most High forbids the idea. Had the Lord wished to send Samuel from the invisible world to reprove Saul and forewarn him of his doom, he could surely have done it without employing so exceptionable an agency as this.

2. Another supposition is, that Samuel was really called up and made to appear at the woman's summons, by the power of the devil. But here again it should be observed, that nothing of the kind is intimated in the narrative. Satan is not introduced into the story at all, either directly or remotely, except it be in the moral character of the king and the sorceress. . . . If Samuel was called up by the power of the devil, it must be because God allowed and commissioned him to do it. But to suppose this, makes God a consenting party to a transaction, which, in all its aspects, was directly contrary to his own law, and apparently subversive of his own design in denouncing and prohibiting all magic arts. It amounts to much the same thing as saying that God performed the act himself. But is it not at variance with all our ideas of God's character, and of the condition and privileges of departed saints, that the Lord should in this manner subject the soul of his servant Samuel to the power of the devil, to be summoned back to earth at the call of a sorceress whom the law condemned as worthy of death to appear and answer to the inquiries of such a man as Saul? The whole idea seems entirely inconsistent with Scripture, and is revolting to our moral sense. We cannot accept it. Our impression of the honor that God confers upon his departed saints quite rejects such a theory.

3. Another explanation is, that Satan himself appeared in the disguise of Samuel, by putting on his form, assuming his garb, and speaking in his name. This is Matthew Henry's idea. But this is attributing to the devil nothing less than miraculous power, whereas we have no evidence that he possesses any such power, unless it be given him of God, which, in a case like this, as we have intimated, would involve a Divine inconsistency. It assumes that Satan can put on the appearance, and counterfeit the living presence of any one as he pleases—an admission that would endanger the strongest evidences of Christianity; for how could we then know that Satan did not personate the Saviour as risen from the dead, and ascending on high? How could we be assured that he did not counterfeit Lazarus as coming forth from the grave? What confidence could we have when we meet and converse with one whom we suppose to be a good and honest man, that he is not, after all, the devil in disguise? And besides, is it congruous with the devil's character to reprove a man for his impiety and wickedness, as the apparition at Endor reproved Saul? We are indeed told metaphorically, by way of setting forth the cunning and deceitfulness of Satan, that he is "transformed into an angel of light;" but where is it affirmed that he can transform himself either into a living or dead man as he pleases? This doctrine, therefore, cannot be admitted without deranging all laws of evidence, and leaving us in doubt whether to believe the testimony of any professed witnesses, or even of our own senses. We cannot accept it.

4. Others have maintained that the whole account is the narrative of "a miracle, a Divine representation or impression, partly upon the senses of Saul, and partly upon those of the woman, and intended for the rebuke and punishment of Saul." Worse and worse! This is bringing God into direct fellowship with the heathenish and forbidden practices of divination, and claiming that he co-operated with that guilty sorceress at Endor, in deceiving the senses of Saul, and the senses of the woman herself! It imputes to him the working of a miracle with the design to make a representation or impression that Samuel was present, when in reality there was no Samuel there! Are we then to believe that God is a man that he should lie, or the Son of man that he should deceive, and that, too, by a special miracle? What, then, becomes of all miracles wrought in attestation of the truth? What further ground of confidence in them remains? We must be allowed to say, that if we were to adopt such an interpretation we should but deceive ourselves, instead of being deceived by our Maker. And yet this is the view that is gravely put forth and advocated in a work of no less pretention than Kitto's Cyclopedia, [Art. Witchcrafts.]

5. One other supposition is, that the woman, by the mysterious power of her magic arts, actually called up Samuel from the dead at the request of Saul. The mystery of this idea is so ridiculous that it scarcely seems worthy of serious notice. It presumes that God leaves the souls of his departed servants in subjection to the will and authority of those who practice divination in contempt of his holy word; allowing and empowering them to summon back to earth the spirits of the righteous and blessed to answer such inquiries as they may be pleased to make, and at such times and places as may suit their convenience or caprice; and all this by nothing else than the rites of sorcery! This is marvelous truly! most exquisitely marvelous! And so we are to believe, are we, that the honored prophet Samuel was put to the degradation of being recalled from his abode of happiness and glory, and placed under the magic control of that scandalous woman at Endor? What can match this but the silly farce of modern spiritualism? We will not be so indecorous as to suppose that any of our readers have slipped back so far toward the dark ages as to entertain any such notion as this.

What, then, is the interpretation of this affair, which, almost from necessity, we are driven to adopt? It is, that the whole account is intended to be a narrative of what was pretended to be a reality, but which in fact was an entire deception. The sacred writer aims to describe the scene just as it appeared, and just as the cunning woman sought to make it appear, to the bewildered imagination of the superstitious and unhappy Saul—presuming his readers all along to know what estimate to put upon magic appearances; that as "an idol is nothing in the world," so all the sorceries and divination connected with idolatry are nothing but "vanity and a lie." There is no Samuel whatever in the case; no shade, no ghost or spirit of Samuel; but only was feigned or pretended to be Samuel—either by the woman herself, playing part of a ventriloquist, as hinted at by the Seventy in calling her gunee engastrimuthos; or by another person secreted in another room, or behind a screen, and acting in collusion with her. The whole thing, we are persuaded, was nothing more or less than a piece of artful trickery, designed and successfully managed to impose upon the mind of Saul, and make him believe a lie. The sacred historian does not take it upon him to explain, but only to describe the case, as it was made to appear. And does he, moreover, with the design to put the greater discredit and contempt upon the affair, adopt, in relating it, a smothered strain of sarcastic irony, like that of Elijah, where he rallies the prophets of Baal respecting their god, speaking of him as if he were a real god? "Cry aloud," he tells them, "for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or, peradventure, he sleepeth, and must be awakened." A similar vein of satire is found in Isaiah, where he describes the process of making a graven image out of an ash tree. [Isai. xliv.] And this style of language is not uncommon in the sacred writings, especially when images and lying divination are the subject of remark. So here, we venture to suggest, without affirming, that the narrator is adroitly making use of keen-edged satire, archly describing the scene and telling us what Samuel said, as if he himself believed that the prophet was really there, when in truth he believed no such thing, and did not intend of expect his readers to believe any such thing.

But if this is the construction to be put upon the narrative, that it is intended only to describe appearances and pretensions, and with the view to bring them into regular discredit, we may expect to find some points where the disguise crops out, as geologists say. Let us carefully scrutinize Saul, the sorceress, and the pretended Samuel, and see.

1. Look at the attitude in which Saul is exhibited in the picture. Naturally gloomy and apprehensive, superstitious and given to fits of excessive melancholy, Saul had become, through a long series of vexations and anxieties, almost or quite delirious. And now the Philistines had "gathered together all their armies" against him; David, of whom he continually lived in extreme jealousy and hatred, had taken refuge in their country, and might be expected to join them with his forces in the coming contest, as Achish, then king, had invited him to do; and while compelled to witness at a distance the rising power and popularity of David, he knew that he himself, on account of his ill treatment of that anointed heir of the crown, was rapidly losing the respect and confidence of his own subjects, some of them openly, and many more in heart, being decidedly alienated from him. And, worse than all, his own conscience haunted him with a sense of baseness, impiety, and crime, of which he had been guilty, and for which Samuel, while living, had rebuked him. He had made light of the counsels of heaven, trampled upon divine authority, slaughtered the priests of the Lord, treated the venerable prophet with contempt, and acted very foolishly and wickedly. And now, "when he inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." Thus forsaken of God, distrusted of man, wretched in spirit, and despised in his own eyes, he beheld with terrible misgiving and agitation, the approaching storm of war. "And when Saul saw the host of Philistines, he was afraid, and in his heart greatly trembled." Under these troubles his appetite was also taken away; and when he came to the woman at Endor, "he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night." Was ever a man in a more fit state of mind and body to be wrought upon and deluded by the impositions of sorcery? He was already more than half bewitched in himself. Under the pressure of such feelings and circumstances he commissions his servants to seek him a woman that had a familiar spirit—a step strongly predictive of the result, as it shows very plainly the bearing of his credulity, and his readiness to catch at any delusion that might offer. He is preparing to go as a bird to the snare; he is even helping to spread the snare for himself. Could the woman at Endor have had a more pliant subject on whom to play off her arts? If she could not befool such a man, she must have been a great fool herself. He hoped to see Samuel, he expected to see Samuel, and he verily thought he did see Samuel.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

BY R. F. ROWELL.

IN the most of our Lord's parables one idea is prominent, and the parable is given to illustrate that idea. In this parable he is addressing a people who have "received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it," but have turned away from "Moses and the prophets," and walk in the tradition of the elders; hence, he addresses them according to their own tradition, (see Josephus concerning hades), and the whole parable is given to establish the authority of "Moses and the prophets."—verses 16, 17. "For the law and the prophets were until John; and it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail."—verse 31. "And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Thus we see the idea is kept prominent. It may be objected, Would not that be giving support to their tradition? I answer, no. To establish the authority of "Moses and the prophets" by any means, will overthrow everything that is opposed to them. It did not seem to be any part of his mission to correct their theology. He referred them to the Statute Book, where they could correct all errors themselves.

DAYTON, Minn., Jan. 23, 1870.

LET OUR OPPONENTS FIGHT ON.

IRA FANCHER, Sandy Hill, N. Y., writes us of some hard speeches that certain preachers make use of in speaking of our Life views which we will not repeat, trusting they may yet see the error of their ways, and possess the spirit of Christ. Br. Fancher says:

In the spirit of Christ I wish to ask them to reconcile two texts and oblige me: Luke xx. 35, 36, and Isa. xxvi. 14. One says, "In the resurrection they are equal to the angels, neither can they die any more." This must be the righteous. If the wicked are raised into life, they are in the resurrection; and thus we have universal salvation. The other text says, "They are dead; . . . they shall not rise." These I think are the wicked; so, all is plain. How awful it does look to me (unless the LORD hath said it) to attribute to God the raising of thousands of millions of mortals to life for no other reason than to torment and kill them again; for they cannot be saved, our opponents themselves being judges. "All things work together for good to them who love God." So, I think hundreds see the truth from the hard and harsh manner in which some preach against it. My wife could not be induced to leave the Methodist church till her minister abused Br. Miller in the pulpit; then she wished to leave.

Such is the result of the harsh manner in which some preachers oppose the Life views; and no wonder Br. Fancher takes courage from the bitter words of those of whom he speaks, and whose names we omit as well as their words. The "mortal resurrection" theory which some of them advocate, has already driven many to see there is no revival into life of the wicked dead; so let them fight on, the truth will still flourish—"No future Life out of Christ."

IN time we transact business for eternity; whatever, therefore, we do now should be done well.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 23, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

SAUL AND THE WITCH OF ENDOR.

THE article on this subject, commencing on the first page of this paper, we copy from the "New Englander," of 1856. Appearing as it did, in an Orthodox Congregational Magazine, devoted to the doctrine of inherent immortality, it ought to have some weight with that class of people. The same Magazine contained DR. POST's celebrated "Essay" on the Immortality of man, which brought out our "Review," entitled "MAN'S DESTINY," etc. The article on "Saul and the Woman at Endor," does not harmonize very well with the Essay; and is quite as hostile to the common notion of dead men being alive—which has so often been attempted to be proved by this case—as anything we have ever written or published. We intend to give the remainder of the article in our next. Considering the source from whence it comes, it is clear evidence that, to avoid the inroads of Spirit Rapping on Orthodoxy, our good orthodox friends are disposed to borrow our weapons. They are welcome to use them, and we hope they will not despise such weapons because we have used them to kill the mother while they find them so necessary in killing the children; for spirit rapping is a child of the doctrine of "dead men alive," which nearly all the theologians still maintain. They may find that the only way in which spirit-rapping and papal foolery can be effectually met is by the use of the grand gospel truth, no future life out of Christ; and that life, not till the resurrection from the dead. This doctrine established and maintained, would sweep Christendom of Papal purgatory and all the saint worship, which robs God and his Christ; and spirit-rapping would go to the same funeral pile, and both together be consumed.

We are giving the article on Saul and the Witch of Endor at this time, in consequence of an urgent call for something on the subject.

THE WICKED DEAD.

"IF a man die shall he live again?" inquired Job, chap. xiv. 14. He evidently had no idea that any but God's servants would live again; and answers his own question, by saying, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till I come again into existence:" (Septuagint). In chapter xxiv., he says, "Drought and heat consume the snow waters: so doth the grave (sheol) those which have sinned . . . he shall be no more remembered."—Verses 19, 20. Job had said, "O that thou . . . wouldst appoint me a set time and remember me." The Psalmist speaks of some who "lie in the grave whom thou (God) rememberest no more."—Psa. lxxxviii. 5.

To be remembered no more, then, is clearly not to "live again." This truth is making such progress as to cause alarm among the theorists who believe in torment as a punishment. The latest development of this alarm is among a class of Christians known as "The Seventh-Day Adventists." Accordingly they have published a pamphlet of 100 pages, written by Eld. J. Waggoner, one of their ablest men. The "Trustees, of S. D. A. Pub. Association," say in their "Preface" to the work:

It is proper to state that an earnest effort is being made by a considerable portion of the first-day Adventists to promulgate the doctrine that the wicked dead are never to be resurrected. . . . We can hardly imagine what special good would grow out of the doctrine could its truthfulness be established. For the doctrine that the wicked shall be resurrected that they may each receive such measure of indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, as their crimes deserve, satisfies our sense of justice. And the doctrine that this torment, or anguish, shall result in death, relieves the subject of all sense of disproportion between the crime and the punishment that burdens the doctrine of endless torment.

Thus our seventh-day brethren are seen to be for torment—hopeless torment for the wicked, but do not like the idea of eternal torment. In other words: when no benefit can possibly result to the wicked dead from torment, they would have them made alive for the object of tormenting this new and God-given life out of them again; and that "satisfies their sense of justice." We are happy to tell these kind hearted brethren, such a process does not "satisfy our sense of justice," and is abhorrent to all the ideas we have of justice; and is irreconcilable with our ideas of God's government of the creatures He has made. These brethren add:

This theory of the non-resurrection of the wicked leaves our sense of justice on the part of God toward impenitent men entirely unsatisfied.

So these brethren feel torment to be essential to justice, and they can't be pleased unless the wicked dead are made alive to be tormented awhile. They remind us of the lady, years ago, said to have kept a public house in one of the Western States, who would not allow a Universalist to remain in her house over-night, because he did not accept her theory of eternal torments. A few years later he called at the same place, and told the landlady his views had undergone some change since he was last at her house: he had come to the conclusion that some sinners would be tormented fifty thousand years. The landlady said, "Bless the Lord: that is better than nothing." The Universalist got entertained this time. Whether the landlady's "sense of justice was satisfied," we know not.

The greatest calamity known to a human being is death. So God decided when He affixed that penalty as "the wages of sin." What saith human law in civilized nations? "No cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted."—Constitution of United States. The reviving of dead criminals into life to torment them to death again, can never be seen, by an impartial and unbiased mind, in any other light than as "a cruel and unusual punishment:" in principle differing not at all from eternal torture: there is no design of benefitting the tormented in either case; and it cannot benefit the saved to witness the torment of the unsaved; and especially seeing "the saints are to judge the world," as Eld. Waggoner says, in the sense of inflicting the torment on these resurrected wicked; a very pleasant employment doubtless! especially if it should happen to be a father, mother, brother, sister, wife, husband, child or neighbor! It looks very much to us like the old-fashiond hell, and is quite as "unreasonable."

Eld. Waggoner (whom we will designate by simply W., hereafter) commences with a statement of the "principle" we laid down in our work on "LIFE FROM THE DEAD," etc., which opens thus: "Gifts may exceed the promise; but punishment cannot justly exceed the threatening," etc., and W. says, "With this I find no fault," etc.; but he thinks we have "not reasoned in harmony with it," etc. He next states that we say, "The wages of sin, then, is not suffering, but death. It is not dying, but death. . . . No pangs, no struggles, nor agonies, connected with dying are death, or any part of death:" and W. says: "In this I think Mr. Storrs has departed widely from Bible truth," etc. That our readers may see just what we did say, we transfer from "Life from the Dead" (pages 7 and 8) our entire remarks on "The Penalty of Sin." We say:

To settle this question, it is necessary to determine what is the penalty or wages of sin: i. e., what is its proper penalty? Various inflictions of sorrow and suffering may attend the commission of sin, or follow it, designed for correction, or as an unavoidable result of the violation of the laws of our being; but these are not the penalty proper, but are to be viewed rather in the light of accidental attendants; or else as chastisements, which, if heeded, may be overruled for blessing. Penalty proper is not to be regarded in this light. When such penalty is inflicted the reformation of the sinner is no object of it; but it is to put an end to his sin as sinning.

So far as we have revelation to guide us, death is the one only and proper penalty or wages of sin—"The wages of sin is death."—Rom. vi. 23. "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. xviii. 4, 20. "Thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 17. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. iii. 19.

The wages of sin, then, is not suffering, but death. It is not dying, but death. It is not the pain of dying, but to have life extinguished—to be dead; that only is death.—Death exists not till life has ceased. No pangs, no struggles, or agonies connected with dying are death, or any part of death. Death proper is not a thing, but a state. It is a state where there is no life—no sensation—no memory—no thought—no suffering: it is a state of non-being, or a cessation of living existence. As "the wages of sin," it is an utter, total, and final dissolution of man. Such "is the wages of sin." A fearful doom: an awful penalty. Yet some men are ready to say, "It is no punishment at all." Such must have but a poor idea of the value of life. That it is not a state of suffering is admitted; but that it is not the very highest and most fearful punishment, known in nature or revelation, is denied. Nature knows nothing so fearful, and Scripture reveals nothing so terrific. Too vile to live, they are dissolved to dust, and perish like the brutes. What a doom for one who might have lived in life immortal and unending! "The wages of sin is death." Let this be remembered.

If, then, death is not dying, nor the pain or sufferings of dying, but a state of utter extinction of life and consciousness—a state of the dissolution of our entire manhood—is a revival into life not a reversal, or abrogation, of the penalty? If abrogated, can it be inflicted a second time without a second trial, and sin repeated?

Observe, life is never threatened. It is not therefore a revealed punishment. It is not a penal infliction, and we have no right to assume it such under any circumstances. It must be clearly announced as a penalty, or it is not such.

Life is a gift—a favor—a gratuity—a blessing bestowed. Such it is in all cases, unless it can be demonstrated, by positive testimony, to be threatened as a penal infliction. But death is the wages of sin: therefore life cannot be such.

Life is a peculiar favor: hence for sinners to be deprived of it is a penal infliction, without supposing them made alive from the dead to die a second time.

Life from the dead, in a hopeless condition, is not a favor; hence, to prove such life, a clear positive threatening of it is demanded; and it is not to be believed that such life will occur without such threatening. We know of no such announcement of penalty in the Bible, and think there is none; hence there is no just ground to conclude the wicked will have such life.

The life proclaimed by the gospel is always a favor, and a free gift of God in Christ to those who believe and obey. Life from the dead is a peculiarity by Christ, who is the LIFE-GIVER—"the resurrection and the life."

To our statement in the third paragraph of the foregoing remarks, W. says:

I do not deny that the penalty reaches to the state of being dead; for there is no such thing as death, unless that consummation be reached. But I do deny that it excludes the act of dying, with its pangs and agonies. Both are included in the penalty.

Do not our remarks cover the ground, so far as the real penalty is concerned? A man may die in agony; but does it follow that such agony is "included in the penalty?" The penalty for murder is death in human laws. The law does not say he shall have so much agony in dying. He may have less or more, or none at all; the law has no regard to that in the penalty; it is the death of the criminal, or his utter deprivation of the life principle; no matter how easy or hard his dying process may be, the law takes no notice of that, and contrives every possible means to make it as easy as possible; at least civilized law-makers do; the invention of "pangs and agonies" is the work of savages and tyrants. W. admits "the penalty reaches to the state of being dead." Very well. Then the penalty is death, and not the process by which it is brought about, whatever the pangs may be. If a man is to be put into a death state, of course there is some process by which it is effected; but to say the process is a part of the penalty, involves the idea that all men must go through the same pangs and agonies to go into the death state, which experience teaches is a mistake as it relates to departing this life.

W. says, "God has not only threatened death to the evil-doer, but he has also threatened 'tribulation and anguish,' torment with fire and brimstone, plagues, with grievous sores and pains," etc.

But W. forgot to prove that any of these are inflicted after a resurrection from the dead, or a future life. To prove that torment is a part of the penalty for sin, he goes to the symbols of Revelation, and lights first on chapter xiv. 9–11. "If any man worship the beast . . . he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone . . . and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever," etc. W. seems half frighted at his own quotation, and says, "It is admitted that the duration expressed is limited." So our friend stumbles; he sees eternal tormentists after him, so he adds "That it results in death is admitted." Who admits it? Eternal tormentists do not admit it, nor can W. prove it; it is an assumption, and he might be met with his own weapons, and told that the symbols of Revelation show that some tormented ones "Seek death and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them."—Rev. ix. 6. W. has laid a good foundation for eternal tormentists, and uneasy as he may feel under the pressure, he will find himself in company with that class of men; and they should thank him for his labor. But unfortunately for him and them, not a word is said in his text, Rev. xiv. 9–11, of tormenting the worshippers out of life, or of its being in a resurrection life; those points are both assumed, and neither of them can be proved. Besides, the whole connection shows it to be a special case of visiting judgments on a class of wicked men in this life; and has nothing to do with the penalty, proper and final, for sin. The same may be said of all W.'s proof texts to show that men are punished after a resurrection from the dead, by being tormented. In every case they relate to judgments on the living in this life. We have admitted that sorrow and suffering may attend the commission of sin, or follow it. See the extract we have given from our work on "LIFE FROM THE DEAD," above. But none of these are the penalty proper for sin, though they are the result of sins, and often the unavoidable consequences of sin. "The wages of sin is death."—Rom. vi. 23. We think those that deny inherent immortality, had better stop adding penalties to God's own declared penalty—"DEATH"—lest they find themselves rolling into the vortex of eternal torments; they must and will go backward or forward. Very few of them now dare to speak out boldly on the life theme; and some have in their opposition to the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ," become as silent as the tomb on the immortality question, who were once burning and shining lights. They refused to "go forward," and they are struck dumb. We may say more of W.'s performance hereafter. In the mean time, let the tract on "THE JUDGMENT" be widely circulated: it will work wonders.

THE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

THESE have done and are doing a gr at work. The friends of the Life views should continue sending them abroad, without sparing, wherever they can be used to advantage; and there are very few places where some of them cannot be so used. We have placed the "Constitution of Man," by Dr. Finley, among these Documents, as you will see by looking at the list on the last page.

The "LITTLE DENE" tract has been discontinued as a separate tract; but it is now attached to the tract "LIVING SOUL," instead of other matter heretofore inserted there. This has been done by the request of the author of that tract, he being also the author of "LITTLE DENE."

BACK NUMBERS OF THE HERALD.

THESE are so exhausted that we cannot supply any but odd ones. We will continue to give the remainder of this volume to new subscribers for $1. Twenty-eight numbers are now due to complete it. To those who have subscribed the past two weeks, we have sent all the back numbers we had, where they have been asked for; and we shall continue to do so till all are exhausted.

DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS must not think strange, after the notice we recently gave them, if the HERALD OF LIFE ceases to visit them; and they will please remember, that if afterward they should wish to renew, we can give them no assurance that the missing numbers can be supplied. Better send your remittance without delay.

"PUT THE BRETHREN IN REMEMBRANCE." 1 TIM. IV. 6.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

IF it was the duty of God's servants in the apostolic age to put the brethren in remembrance of the great truths of inspiration, how much more it becomes us in this age of light regarding the crisis in the world's history, to stir up their pure minds "by way of remembrance," and to diligently follow the divine injunction to "exhort one another; and so much the more" as we "see the day approaching."

In no uncertain language inspiration has assured us of the soon coming of the Lord Jesus, whom the heavens must receive until the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets—of His second advent to this earth as its rightful King, of whose kingdom there shall be no end. Of this great and important fact, beloved reader, I would put you in remembrance; not merely to have you silently give your assent to it, but to BELIEVE it, meditate upon it, talk it, preach it; and show it forth in your every day life.

This I would press upon you in view of the magnitude of the event. The return of Christ, the promised heir to David's throne, is an event of no secondary importance. Empires of earth have been swallowed up with the wild outbursts of revolution, and nations been buried amid the wreck of war, but at the grand and glorious advent of the mighty Conqueror, all the nations of this world will pass into oblivion by becoming "the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and He shall reign forever and forever."

Holy prophets have strained their eyes to penetrate the dim vista of the future, and satisfied with one glimpse of the New Earth's morn, have fallen asleep, peacefully to await the resurrection trumpet, when they, though they "dwell in dust," shall "awake and sing." (Isai. xxvi. 19.) David beheld in rapturous glory the precious LIFE-GIVER, and in full assurance of faith says, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." The same spirit we find running down the stream of time, increasing in volume and intensity as doth the mighty river in its onward course to its outlet. John Wesley expresses it in his sweet song:

"The church in her militant state
Is weary and cannot forbear;
The saints in agony wait
To see him again in the air;
The news of His coming I hear,
And join in the catholic cry—
O Jesus, in triumph appear,
Appear in the clouds of the sky."

Beloved reader, I would stir up your mind to keep the great fact in constant remembrance, in all its powerful reality, that the Lord Jesus is soon coming. Then you will not be expecting the world's conversion, and looking for the fabled millenium of peace, nor be surprised at the immense increase of evil in all parts of the globe; but you will bear in mind that "as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. xxiv. 38, 39.

Remember this great fact, and you will not join the scoffing multitude who say in their heart, "Where is the promise of His coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," (2 Pet. iii. 4), but you will know surely that "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."—2 Pet. iii. 9. Though the glad hour of our triumph may seem to delay, it is long-suffering on the part of God, not willing that any should perish; for once let the number of God's elect be gathered from the world, and Christ's kingdom will come—grace will be exchanged for glory, and the poor sinner's fate would be sealed.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

"Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. . . . For yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."—Heb. x. 35, 37.

Keep these facts in remembrance, and as did Cyprian, A. D. 220, you will "ever in anxiety and cautiousness be awaiting the sudden advent of the Lord." While you meditate upon the cross, you will ever be looking forward to the grand coronation day. The kingdom will be the grand centre around which all your joys and hopes will cluster. You will find peace in looking upon a crucified Christ, and joy in beholding a glorified Redeemer.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., (Box 547) Feb. 1870.

REMARKS ON LUKE X. 22.

BY JACOB GRIM.

"All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is but the Father: and who the Father is but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him."

I HAVE asked myself the question, what called forth the utterance of the above words? I am satisfied that whoever Jesus Christ may be, the inquiry is not forbidden by the above text.

I have no desire, neither do I intend to enter into a discussion of who Jesus Christ is. But I am fully satisfied the above subject or any Bible question, can be freely discussed, without quarrelling, strife, or bloodshedding, if Brn. professing the name of Jesus are animated by the same spirit that was in Jesus, and would adopt Br. L. Bontell's "Right Course." I have found by sad experience that every new truth that has been presented to the Advent body, has engendered a bitter opposition. Non-living of the wicked, baptism, personal devil, and all kindred subjects, and if a Br. discovers any light, or what he considers to be Bible truth, he must first ask the question, Is it policy to advance, or must I place my light under a bushel?

Now, Jesus after performing many mighty works around Jerusalem, and raising the curiosity and opposition of many of the Jews to the highest pitch, on one occasion, asked the Pharisees, saying, "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he? They say unto him, The Son of David. . . . If David then call him Lord, how is he his Son? And no man was able to answer him a word."—Matt. xxii. 42–46. Jesus did not prevent them from answering, but they exposed their own ignorance, and asked him no more questions.

On another occasion Jesus asked his disciples, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man am? And they said: Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."—Matt. xvi. 14–17. "And Jesus answered, Blessed art thou Simon . . . for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Here Jesus pronounces a blessing upon Peter for answering his question, and informs him it is a revelation from heaven. Now, I think as one of the apostles has had a a revelation, and several of them were present to hear it, we might be allowed to inquire what they have said upon the subject. But as that is not our purpose in this article we proceed with our subject.

The first intimation we have in the Scriptures of the coming Saviour is found in the promise, the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. We pass along down until we come to the promise made to Abraham, that God would give him a seed in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and then the prediction of Jacob, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be."—Gen xlix. 10. Again we pass on down the stream of time until we reach David's time, and we read, "His name shall endure forever; his name shall continue as long as the sun, and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed."—Psa. lxxii. And the good old prophet Samuel says, "And I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." Again we pass on until we come to Isaiah's BRANCH out of the root of Jesse. And then we come to the days of the good old priest Zacharias, who was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied saying, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people; and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of David his servant, as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began. To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he swore to our father Abraham." And then we come to good old Simeon who was waiting for the consolation of Israel, and the Holy Ghost was upon him; and he had a revelation also, "that he should not see death until he had seen the Lord Christ;" and the good old man says, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people." And good old Anna came in at that moment, gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel."—Luke ii.

Now, what are we to understand by all this? Here are certain things revealed unto babes that were hidden from the wise and prudent, notwithstanding they had the Scriptures which pointed to these events. We read the sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the lawgiver from between his feet until the Shiloh come. The temple is yet standing and Judah has some power left in the nation when Jesus makes his appearance. The time has come for Jacob's Shiloh to appear. The judgment of God is yet upon the nation; for Ezekiel said, "I will overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him." A few questions present themselves to our mind: Was Jesus Jacob's Shiloh? And was he the one whose right it was, of whom Ezekiel spake, to receive the overturned kingdom? This needs proof; either by genealogy, family record, which was in possession of the nation, or by proclamation from Jehovah, through some means which he may adopt.

We read, God sent John who was to prepare the way before the Lord. "And he came saying, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matt. iii. 2. Again, John says, "I knew him not; but that he should be made manifest unto Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water. And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. . . . And I saw and bare record that this is the Son of God." In Matt. xxi. we read, "Tell the daughter of Zion, Behold thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass. . . . And the multitude that went before, and that followed, cried saying, Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest."

Now these Jews and Scribes had the Scriptures, and were able to trace through the promises; through the line of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David the lineage of Jesus; they had also the prophets, that pointed to Jacob's Shiloh; and the beautiful words of Zachariah ix. 9, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout O daughter of Jerusalem; behold thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." Here are the wise and learned refusing to accept God's King when sent unto them, according to the time and events foreshadowed in the Scriptures; and what is the result? The disciples, through Peter, had answered his question, Thou art the Christ, the Son of God. And Jesus, in our text and the verse preceding it, says, "O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, I thank thee that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes;" (as thou didst unto Simeon, Anna, Peter, and others) "even so Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight. All things are delivered to me of my Father, and no man" (amongst the wise and prudent) "knoweth who the Son is if not the Father; and who the Father is if not the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him."—Luke x. 22. The Greek words rendered (but) are ei me, and are rendered by Donegan and Robinson, "if not, unless, except." And we think the context forces us to give them the rendering "if not." The scribes even forbade Pilate making known by an inscription, that Jesus was Israel's King. On one occasion when God inspired the multitude to cry out, "Saying, blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord," the Pharisees said, Master, rebuke thy disciples. He answered, "I tell you if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."—Luke xix. No, God's proclamation of David's heir must be made, and it was.

A Word on Labor.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

How shall the effort we put forth, most effectually tell for the advancement of the cause? There are many brethren, who are willing to be known and willing to act as believers in "Life only in Christ," and whose position is unswerving unless they, being connected with those who do not believe in this doctrine, will yield their own privilege, and surrender the right of those who are known to be out-spoken preachers of this truth. Now, we want to preach where we can get a hearing. There is work to be done, and we want to have a hand in doing it. The cry is, for work and workmen that need not be ashamed. Then the work will be well done. When a man has devoted himself to the good cause, and we have brethren who are with us in faith, who are unwilling to stand by us, and even leave us when we are in need of their help, it is rather trying. Especially, when we know that some whom they assist in employing, cannot present the best ground against the opposers of Bible truth. But we will leave all that with the Master.

There are, again, others who never in the least degree, nor under any conditions whatsoever will swerve. We thank God for such. Now, the whole body is to be fed; and this is the truth for the body, only it is a little in advance. We will speak it to the body. We have ministers, some who are older, and some who are younger, who will still go forth on this mission of truth, speaking it in love on the Advent of Christ and the life doctrine, as a part of the blessed position.

I do think that a better understanding among us would be to our advantage, and the glory of God. But how shall we come at it? How shall we know the condition and want of the cause, and the demand made upon us by the cause, and how appropriate the efforts required by the whole in such manner as to advance truth?

Again, how should the demands of the ministers upon the brethren, or the general cause be met? or have they no demand? Will the whole interest succeed, and now dispense with the pioneers? Will the labors of the young and more popular, be sufficient, or will it be sufficient that the interest is continued in some quarters, and left to die out in others? Or can we dispense with the further toil of some who have "borne the burden and heat of the day?" If so, I am willing, so that the Lord will sign the discharge. How we shall arrive at the united, persistent and harmonious effort that we may make, I know not or whether we shall let the golden opportunity pass.

I was thinking at one time, when dwelling upon the remarks of Br. Grim, as to the new and learned men we have added to the cause, as well as the young men who are coming along, that I would write a word on the question of "Honor to whom honor is due," speaking of him and some others who were forward and first in the work, but afterward supposed some one would say that I might be coveting some consideration, and let it pass.

Brethren, it is a time of trial, whether we all apprehend it or not. Let us then help each other, as fully as we possibly can, and remember that our labor is not in vain, in the Lord. I must here remark that looking from the stand point of reason, the prospect is quite dark. Dark indeed!

I would that all those who work in the field could feel the spirit of Br. Boutell's article. God bless him! May that power of love be felt. Amen.

ACUSHNET, Mass., Feb. 12, 1870.

Letters and Extracts.

From J. Philip Bishop.

BR. STORRS: I received your very kind and encouraging letter. I also received a similar epistle from Br. J. Grim. Such friendly greetings are very precious, especially in and under the trials of my present surroundings. My trials are many and searching but God's grace has sustained me thus far gloriously. The darker the night, the greater the number of stars to be seen in the heavens. So with my trials; when like a flood they rise, then the more promises I see in the Bible. The darker the night, the brighter the stars. So also with us; the darker the night or season, not only do we see the more promises, but it makes them all the brighter to shine. Realizing all these precious assurances we can say, "We shall not want." I have already received friendly greetings from Brethren dear. I appreciate them all. It is like "the precious ointment that was poured on Aaron's head," etc.

Well Br. Storrs, I have opened the battle squarely in Mechanicsburg. Last Sabbath I preached in Franklin Hall. It was filled to its utmost capacity, and eight hundred persons may have been present. I have preached three times since in the same place, to large congregations. Many, I think, are seeing the truth as it is in Jesus. But what effort is required to remove the traditions of men, from between their eyes and God's word. The opposition is fierce of course. The ministers of the town, as you may think, are fully arrayed against the "Life views;" they are afraid that I may put some "dead flies in their ointment." But thank the Lord the battle is not to the strong or many. If God be for us, it is enough. I have commenced, and purpose by the help of the Lord, to do what I can for his glory.

A minister told me that he could prove the immortality of the soul from heathen mythology. But how about the Bible? Why not prove it from that? If the contrary is taught there, which is to be the standard? If "heathen mythology" is more reliable and truthful, why not place it on all the pulpits throughout the land, in place of the Bible? Why have the Bible there, if it is not to be the standard by which we are to determine all doctrines and practices? Grace and peace be unto all the Brethren. Pray for us; all the brethren pray for us. Yours, in hope of immortality.

MECHANICSBURG, Pa., Feb. 11, 1870.

From Mrs. M. A. House.

GEO. STORRS; Dear Sir: We came from the State of New York, the middle of March 1869, and settled in this State having purchased a home ten miles from St. Paul.

Quite recently five numbers of the HERALD OF LIFE, with the books, "Life from the Dead," "Man's nature and Destiny," "The Judgment," and "God is Love," were given to me, also, the "Six Sermons" were lent me to read. I thought at first it was not worth while to look at them at all; but being naturally of an inquiring mind, I commenced (rather cautiously) to read; and to my surprise became at once interested. The more I read, the more intense my interest became, until I had read them all—reading carefully, and looking out Bible references, to see if these things were so. I seem to be suddenly enlightened, and wonder that in all I have read and been taught of the Scriptures, all my life—having seen half a century, and having been brought up in the New England Congregational faith—I have never seen the Word of God to be so plain before. It has become exceedingly interesting to me, and I love its precious truths more than ever. My faith, too, seems stronger. I had never heard of this doctrine "Life only in Christ," but supposed from all I had been taught that the wicked would live forever in a conscious state.

I am now anxious that all my dear friends may see as I do. I cannot say that I am fully convinced of this doctrine, but as far as I have read, it certainly has made the Word of God to me, much more plain and easy to be understood.

Please also send to me, your cheap edition of the "Watch Tower." I hope to be able before long to take the HERALD OF LIFE, as having seen it, I do not like to be without it.

MENDOTA, Minn., Jan. 29, 1870.

Remarks by the Editor.

The above is only one of the many cases of good resulting from sending the HERALD and "Campaign Documents" to our acquaintances and friends, far and near. Let the work go on and increase.

From J. W. McCagg.

WARSAW, N. Y., Feb. 11, 1870.

BR. STORRS: I am doing as you suggested trusting God, entirely for my instruction as regards my duties this spring. Oh how I love his precious truths; and as much as I have mingled with Christian brethren, within the past few weeks, of an entirely different faith from mine, I rejoice that I am stronger in the gospel faith to-day, than at any period of my life. Glory to God who has kept me by his grace under all circumstances. How much I enjoy these meetings held in Warsaw. It seems as if the Lord was doing the work. No devil nor hell brought in to assist, only the good Spirit of the Lord; and how many are flocking to Jesus. The Methodists wish me to join them; as they say I am a good Methodist. I tell them I can go with them in God's Spirit work, but not in man's doctrine. Oh, no! I could not join any one of them without being a hypocrite, and that I cannot do to please any one. I am getting as I trust, further from their doctrine every day; and nearer the good Lord. How much nearer God seems to me than He did one month ago. The language of my heart is, "Nearer my God to thee; nearer, nearer to thee." Praise the Lord! Dear Br., what a treasure the riches of God's grace is to His children. I am satisfied with it for my portion. I sometimes fear I shall lose all interest in this world, so as to hardly have enough to earn my living. It is getting so as to be a very difficult matter for a man to work at most kinds of business, as there is more or less cheat connected with it. There is a great deal of it in the milling business, but I am determined to do as God wants me to, and suffer all the consequences. Oh, I love this work of leading dear friends to Jesus; that is good enough for me. I live just at present in a little heaven, and I would love to live in this atmosphere all the rest of my days. Why God is so manifest to me at times I think He is in the room talking to me. "Bless His holy name." Oh how precious, how I do love to linger around the mercy-seat.

MONDAY Feb. 14.—I had to lay this down until this morning, and I continue a little history of the revival over the Sabbath. I must say yesterday was a precious day to me. Oh! how clear my faith was and how certain the Spirit made me that "No Life out of Christ," is the only true Bible doctrine; and upon this glorious truth I was enabled to launch out further than ever before upon the boundless sea of God's love. At half past 5, I was invited to the young converts prayer-room, and such a meeting I never was in before. It opened with prayer from six boys, about ten years of age; and it seemed to me, that the good Spirit filled the young disciples and they prayed with all the power it seemed to me, of older ones. Bless the Lord. Oh, what a precious time they are having, and how much the Lord is doing for me. I sometimes hear the story "McCagg has renounced his faith and joined the Methodists." But I tell them, No. I am more firm in my faith than ever; and I praise the name of the Lord that He has kept me true to His gospel truth.

I have enjoyed much of His presence among my Methodist brethren, and have, to some extent, co-operated with them; but He has not called me to sacrifice my gospel faith, which is dearer to me than life. No, No, God forbid that I should ever sacrifice His truth for position and influence in the orthodox church. I would rather be a door keeper in the house of the Lord, or a menial of the lowest order in his work, than to let go the precious truths I have been entrusted with, during the last three years. You can count upon me as a true and decided believer in the Life Views; and I know of nothing that can shake me, because, I am founded upon God's truth. I cannot find language to express my feelings. I am full to overflowing, and truly am basking in the sunlight of God's love. Praise His holy name for a free and full salvation, that saves you now. One that does not carry you back thirty years ago, when we first tasted God's love, to ascertain whether He loves us now. I can say, I know my Redeemer liveth, and because He lives, I shall live also.

I am trusting the good Lord fully as regards my family. He has not as yet, opened the way; but, bless His name, I shall be led as I believe, in the best way. If I had no children I should go out into the world and teach Jesus and him crucified. This would rejoice my heart; but I cannot as yet, see the way open for them. The Lord is trying me now, and I can see He is fitting me for something. Now is the time I ought to be looking out for a chance in a mill, if I am to work at milling another year, but I cannot decide to do so as yet. My conscience condemns it. Oh, you can hardly think how sensitive my conscience has become. I can hardly do anything others do, without I am condemned. I praise the Lord, and pray Him to keep my feet that they do not slip; and bless His holy name, He is keeping me.

I expect to go into the country to night, about two miles, where we start a prayer-meeting in hopes the Spirit may work among that people. Pray for me, that I may be kept from the world unto the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Your brother looking for Jesus as my LIFE-GIVER.

From T. T. Halstead.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: I rejoice exceedingly in Christ our LIFE-GIVER, when I read of the faith in Christ of our dear Life readers. I know I am held up to God through Christ, by their united petitions. I thank God that if we drink of water that Christ gives, it will spring up in us to everlasting life.—John iv. 14. Therefore with joy shall we draw water out of the wells of salvation.—Isa. xii. 3. Now is the time to look up and rejoice for our redemption is nigh. Now the camps of the saints are encompassed about with infidelity and spiritualism. Now is the time for the wise to understand; for none of the wicked shall understand. Now is the most glorious time of the world's history for God's saints, for they understand the sign of Daniel's four kingdoms, three of which have passed away, the fourth in its divided state down fifteen hundred years. Then the God of heaven would set up a kingdom which shall stand forever. Also the midnight cry we have heard. The parable of the virgins is fulfilled and all the signs in earth, air, seas, sun, moon, and stars, and upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity; men's hearts failing for fear, and last, but not the least sign, is the great and universal delusion of infidelity and spiritualism. It has encompassed the saints of the Most High, but its destruction is at hand from God out of heaven.

The wise have said the prophetic Chart is run out, and now the event is to be looked for; the grace of redemption is to be laid hold of, the time of deliverance is at hand. I rejoice that my ears have heard and my eyes have seen the time of the end, and knowledge is increased. The time is due, to lift up our heads, our redemption is near. Now the just shall live by faith and not die.

The Lord has been good unto me, in that he has raised me up; for I was nigh unto death, for I fell and my bowels gushed out; and for eight hours suffered with cramps and pain. But God for Christ's sake, heard our prayer. A good brother who holds forth the words of Life only in Christ, was at my house, and being full of the Holy Spirit, prayed for me, and God heard us for Christ's sake, and raised me up; and now I rejoice in health and strength in Christ my LIFE-GIVER.

Praise his holy name; let all that have the breath of life praise Him.

And in that day (this day) thou shalt say, O Lord I will praise thee; though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away; and thou comfortest me. Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust and not be afraid, for the Lord JEHOVAH is my strength and my song; He also is my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation. And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, call upon his name, declare his doings among his people, make mention that his name is exalted. Sing unto the Lord; for he hath done excellent things. This is known in all the earth. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion, for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee.

NEW ALBANY, Ind., Feb. 15, 1870.

From James Harling.

How long has the penalty of the law of Moses been recognized as Adam's? Brn. R. and P. are holding revival meetings; preaching that every child of Adam was redeemed from the curse of the law, (Adam's transgression) and is now responsible to Jesus for his own sins; for which he pays the penalty of second death. Man's entire race *un*conditionally saved from Adam's penalty! O, so different is the Gospel hope—life from the deadin Jesus only. We are snubbed publicly in the pulpit. The Lord help us to develop His character—LOVE. It takes all in me to keep silence, but the thought of causing the lambs to stumble checks; but Jesus is a precious refuge. Silently I hope that one day my tongue will speak.

With adoration and praise to my ever precious sin-pardoning and life-giving Jesus, I live; realizing sweet fellowship with Him while reading those precious tracts, or "Campaign Documents." I esteem it a pleasure and a duty to spread such weighty matter among earnest searchers after light, liberty and truth; for my heart is sick, and my patience is tested to the utmost, my charity also, at the horrible perversion of the holy word from its primary meaning. O, for more solid thinking on the character of our heavenly Father, in view that "God is Love." May the Holy Spirit lead us all into, and settle us in the blessed truth, is the earnest cry of my heart.

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 1870.

RELIGION is not an art, a matter of dexterity and skill, but a new nature.

From S. Battey.

GEO. STORRS: Dear Sir. Through the kindness of D. H. Baker, of Leavenworth, Kansas, I received two tracts, one, "God is Love," the other on "The Judgment," which I have carefully read, and from which I have received a gleam of that light which lighteth up every man that cometh into the world. This is what I have longed for, for years, but did not know how to find that which my soul longed for. I am glad that you have been saved to point us to the all-absorbing theme GOD IS LOVE. I never saw the love of God in the light that I have since I read that tract. I used to know you when you was a Methodist in 1835; and have heard you preach. I attended school at the Newbury Seminary, Vermont, at that time, and have not heard of you since, until Mr. Baker, gave me a history of you from that time to the present. I am very glad that you have been spared to lead us into this light. I want you to send me some tracts. As soon as I can get a little money to spare, I shall send for your paper the HERALD OF LIFE, and for your book, "Life only in Christ."

IRVING, Kansas, Feb. 2, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

We have sent you all the tracts you name that we have on hand; also, have entered your name as a subscriber for our paper. Pay when you can. Follow on to know the Lord, and the light will grow brighter and brighter till the perfect day.

From Maria M. Weaver.

BR. STORRS: Your article on the "Holy Spirit" was truly "meat in due season." It has been hinted to me, in past times, that the "no-devil and no-resurrection" doctrines would soon end with "no baptism and no Holy Spirit." I did thank God when I read that article. Strange how any one who has known the comfortings of that "Spirit" can doubt its existence.

Stranger still that any intelligent person can think it possible for us to disbelieve in the "Holy Spirit," when we make its possession a test of our final salvation. Any thing will do, though, to frighten people from the truth. If they can't get arguments, they manufacture abuse.

I have been reviewing my theology. The glorious doctrine of "Life through Christ, the LIFE-GIVER," looks plainer and better than ever. How simple. How full of love and goodness. How unlike man, how like God.

We send you a new subscriber. He has just found this path of life. Wish you could see how much his countenance lights up when contemplating the glorious life to come. Others are investigating. Some oppose and fear we deal in infidelity.

Thus the truth ever operates. Some believe and some reject. Better open foes than unstable friends. Let us not be weary in well-doing.

WESTFIELD, Mass., Feb. 1870.

ALBIN CHANDLER, Des Moines, Iowa, writes: The HERALD is a most welcome member in our family. The wise counsels of such veteran fathers and mothers in Israel do cheer and encourage me much; and my prayer fervently is, Lord yet spare us Brothers Storrs, Grim, Thorne, and Sisters Lamb, Pitts, and others, and take not from us those younger in years, which are laboring so earnestly for the good of the Church; so many whom we love dearly, although strangers in the flesh, yet made very near and dear to us in the LIFE-GIVER, by their counsels and kind words. Dear children continue ye in the Lord; and continue to write and give for his name, for the Lord Jesus will soon come and reward all his faithful, and gather us all together in one. Before closing I would like to say to Br. Schenck, with whom I hold sweet communion by letter, do let us hear from your pen in the HERALD. Will you permit me to publish some extracts from your correspondence? May the Lord continue his precious truth unto us all, preserve us all blameless until his coming, and save us in his kingdom, is the constant prayer of your humble Br. in Christ.

CHARLES WESLEY MORSE, Manchester, N. H., writes: I love to read the HERALD OF LIFE. We get no preaching here that has life in it. It seems as if they could not preach any truth of the Bible, they are so afraid of hearing Life. The church have forbidden father speaking in their meeting, and went so far as to tell him to stay at home. I wish some of the Life Preachers would come here and preach the word to us. Trusting in God I hope we may yet be fed with the word of life; not alone for myself, but there are others here that are not so strong as I am.

This is the second time we have heard this "Macedonian cry, Come over and help us." Are there no Life Preachers in New England, capable and willing to go into Manchester and proclaim the truth? We have wished, for once, we were young enough and at liberty to go into our old native State, and proclaim the truth there. Heaven send them help.

WM. DELANO, Bangor, Me., writes: I prize the HERALD OF LIFE above all other reading but the Bible; and I confess that it helped me to understand that better, for I thought man had inherent immortality; but I find all that we do inherit is from Adam, our first parent, and that is death and corruption; but the majority are not willing to believe it.

ELD. J. LEWIS writes from Grafton, Ill., saying that he returned from Missouri early in January, and has been detained in Grafton by the sickness of friends. Says he had a very interesting time in Mo., and trusts a profitable one: thanks Br. Wolcott for the supply of books sent him, and thinks he has placed them in hands where they will do good. He adds, that his P. O. is, Grafton, Ill., Box 22.

The Simplicity of Greatness.

MANY years ago, the licentiates of Princeton Seminary were in the habit of preaching at a station some distance from that place. Among their habitual hearers was a sincere and humble, but uneducated Christian slave called Uncle Sam, who on his return would try to tell his mistress what he could remember of the sermon, but he would always complain that the students were too deep and learned for him. One day, however, he came home in great good humor, saying that a poor unlart old man, just like himself, had preached that day, who, he supposed, was hardly fit to speak to the white people; but he was glad he came for his sake, for he could remember everything he had said. On inquiry it was found that Uncle Sam's "unlart" old preacher was Rev. Dr. Archibald Alexander, the president of the seminary, who, when he heard the criticism, said it was the highest compliment ever paid to his preaching.

"Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? that no flesh should glory in His presence."

ENVY, if surrounded on all sides by the brightness of another's prosperity, like the scorpion confined within a circle of fire, will sting itself to death.

The Little Tracts.

WE have been gratified with the interest manifest to distribute the little tracts, noticed in the HERALD of January 26. Beside a few sent to old friends, the first lot has been sent to order, so that we have seen the warrant for another lot which are nearly ready. Several of the old friends of the HERALD have not received them without full compensation; and others have donated generously toward publishing them. We felt it due to say this much; but our main object in this notice is to urge every one to send for them immediately who can see any chance of doing any good, without regard to compensation. Each person can judge of the wants of his or her locality better than any one else; so let every one send, that they may be spread far and near. The opportunity to work for our Lord, to lay up a treasure in heaven, to become rich toward God, will soon be past. This generation is perishing for lack of knowledge, and God has committed the light to us, as a people. Let every one inquire, What can I do to save a soul from death? Nor forget, that it is a precious privilege to work in the Lord's vineyard. E. WOLCOTT.

Youthful Benevolence?

or, Children Ministering to Christ in His Poor.

Children once to Christ came bringing
Songs of praise, and branches green;
Round Him in a circle, singing
Glad Hosannas, they were seen.

Boys and girls together sought Him
Sitting in the Temple grand;
Pleased He took the gifts they brought Him—
Grateful voice and waving hand.

Oh! that we—are you now saying?—
Could have joined the song that day!
Still He hears you praising, praying;
Still your offerings you may pay.

If your heart is right before Him,
By the Spirit born anew;
If sincerely you adore Him
Who has done so much for you;

If in vain He has not sought you
Wandering in the ways of sin;
If you love the Lord that bought you—
Gave His all your soul to win;

From your hands "a cup of water"
He accepts, in His name given
To the humblest son or daughter
Of the Lord of earth and heaven.

He has left his poor behind Him,
Struggling oft with want and woe;
In their homes you still may find Him
Lingering in His love below.

Hungry, thirsty—wondrous story!—
Sick and naked, lacking bread,
You may find the Lord of glory
Waiting to be clothed and fed.

Children, if He marks you bearing
Food and raiment to the poor,
With them of your plenty sharing
For His sake from door to door,

You will hear the sentence holy,
"Come, ye blest, My glory see!
When ye helped the poor and lowly,
Lo! ye did it unto Me!"

—Band of Hope.

Does Christ Exist in the Flesh.

BY HENRY J. SWEETLAND.

I have never heard this disputed until quite recently. There has a doctrine sprung up of late, which denies that our Lord will come in the flesh, as we believe who are Adventists. The main text which is taken to prove this position, is 2 Cor. v. 16. "Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more." But if this text proves that Christ does not now exist in the flesh according to the seed of David, it proves too much. It equally proves that no man now exists according to the seed of Adam. We will now examine Paul on this word, and see if we can understand what he means by the word flesh. "But I beseech you that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence wherewith I think to be bold against some, which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh."—2 Cor. x. 2, 3. "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh." Compare with Rom. vii. 5. "For when we were in the flesh the motions of sins which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death."—6th verse. "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."—Rom. viii. 8. "So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Compare with Phil. i. 24. "Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." In one place Paul says, "They that are in the flesh cannot please God." In another place he says, "Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." What does he mean by this? We will now refer to the favorite text above mentioned, with 2 Cor. v. 16. "Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh." Now what is it to know no man after the flesh? It seems to be this: The law is past with its requirements. We are in the dispensation of the Spirit. We know no man as being in Christ, whose walk is after the sinful flesh; who follows the flesh, and not the Spirit; whose outward deeds now, are according to the flesh; those who conform to the world with its pleasures and sins; who mind the things of the flesh. But we do know them that are Christ's, who have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts.—Gal. v. 24. Although Christ took upon him sinful flesh, he did no actual sin. He was known to possess that flesh before he was raised from the dead; which is clear from 2 Cor. v. 15. "And that he died for all, that they which live should not live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." Paul did not know Christ after the flesh, after he rose again, as he was known before. If this is not the meaning, I confess I do not know what the above passages do mean, and I want light on the subject.

I will now prove that Christ exists as the Seed of David, as much as he ever did, his blood life excepted; and will so exist eternally. Paul said, thirty years after Christ rose from the dead, "We are members of his body, and of his flesh, and of his bones."—Eph. v. 30. Then he possessed all this at that time. Why did not Paul say we are members of his flesh and his blood? Because he was not known after the flesh in that sense, after the blood flesh. Henceforth we know him no more in that sense. Again, He must exist after the Seed of David according to the flesh, to fulfil his own word. "If I go away, I will come again."—John xiv. 3. Again, according to the testimony of the angel at his ascension, "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts i. 11. Again, "David being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, (not spirit) he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne," etc.—Acts ii. 29, 30. Now if Christ is to be known no more after the flesh, as the above said theory tries to make out, how can he ever reign on the throne of David, according to the flesh, for which, in order to fulfil the promise, he was raised from the dead? Again: If He does not exist in the flesh, is there any Jesus Christ in existence? Who is Jesus Christ but the literal, personal being born of the virgin Mary? If we dispose of him, do we not deny the Son of God, and does not it make us out to be Anti-Christ? Much more can be said on this subject but I will defer till some future time.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 1870.

Remarks on John v. 21 to 29.

BY ELD. GEO. WAUGH.

Verse 21. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." That is, the Son has the same power to raise the dead that the Father has, and will use that power according to his will or choice.

Verse 22. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." In this verse, all power of judgment is committed to the Son; and, taken in connection with the 21st verse, teaches that none will be quickened but those He in his judgment deems proper to be quickened.

Verse 23.—"That all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father; he that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him."

Verse 24.—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." This power was given unto him, that "men should honor the Son, as they honor the Father" by hearing and belie ving, or by receiving and obeying his instructions. Such are "passed from death unto life" by being quickened, and shall not be condemned as unworthy to be quickened when they are judged. Those who do not obey will be condemned, and because they are not quickened, will not "pass from death unto life."

Verse 25.—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." The hour is coming when he shall prove that he has this power, by raising the dead; and "the dead shall hear" his voice; and they that hear shall live, as in the case of Lazarus who obeyed when Jesus spoke.

Verse 26.—"For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself."

Verse 27.—"And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man." A re-affirmation of the 21st and 22d verses, with the assertion that the Son of Man is given authority to execute his judgment.

Verses 28 and 29.—"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

Marvel not that I have the power of judgment and the power to execute that judgment; because "the hour is coming when all the dead shall hear his voice," (and hearing, as in the 24th and 25th verses, is to obey), "shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection," (not of the body or of the soul, but) "of life;" and by this resurrection shall "pass from death unto life." If to resurrect the man is to revive the man, then to resurrect life is to revive life.

"Those that have done evil" will come forth to the resurrection (not of the body or soul, but) of damnation.

Being already under condemnation of death and being judged unworthy to be quickened, therefore their condemnation will be revived or resurrected; and not being quickened, they will not "pass from death unto life," but remain in condemnation.

Stoughton, Mass., Feb. 1870.

Remarks on 1 Peter ii. 4.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

"Coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious." The living Stone not only had life in Himself, but had power to bestow it upon others, even upon all them that believe in his name. He has promised in various forms to give unto His own, eternal life, and specified the terms. They shall be raised at the last day.

"Disallowed of men." What a controversy has been going on ever since the first appearance of this Stone in our world. At his birth He would have been slaughtered by a cruel tyrant but for the interposition of angels. While living in obscurity as the carpenter's son, we learn but little of him. As soon as He appears in the capacity of a teacher He is stigmatized as a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners; performs miracles through Beelzebub the prince of devils, a sabbath breaker, a bold blasphemer. The cry of "Crucify, crucify;" is heard unanimously from the Jewish builders who set Him at nought and mock him, so determined were they, that this Stone should never come into power. When informed of His miraculous resurrection, they invent a falsehood and hire the soldiers to circulate it.

The disallowing ends not with Jesus' stay on earth. His disciples share a similar fate; are imprisoned, scourged and stoned; finally, put to death. Saul of Tarsus was in great favor with the Jewish builders until he owned allegiance to Jesus as the Captain of his salvation. How quickly the tables are turned; and he who was consenting to the cruel death of Stephen, seeks refuge in flight, is lowered from the wall of the city in a basket.

By this spirit of disallowing, milli ons have fallen by the hands of the executioner. When the Reformation commenced in the midst of midnight darkness, many who were engaged in it lost their lives, and especially were branded as heretics. Inquire of a German Catholic what he thinks of Martin Luther, he will tell you that he was a vile wretch who deserved the fagot and stake.

Has the disallowing ceased? My friends, do we see nothing of it now? Why, then, angry looks and hard speeches by those professing godliness, when told that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh? They are enthusiastic over the Man of sorrows whom the Jews rejected, while they disallow a triumphant Saviour to raise the dead and reign on the earth. Notwithstanding He is chosen of God—chosen before the foundation of the world—chosen to be a teacher, a prophet, a suffering malefactor, an atoning Saviour, a Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, ere long to be a King who will reign in righteousness.

Although disallowed of men, He will become the head of the corner, and break in pieces and subdue all things. It will be the last work, and when accomplished will be marvellous in our eyes. We will then comprehend how precious is the Living Stone, so oft attested by the Father, and confirmed by Jesus. How forcibly we are reminded of this when Jesus prays the Father to love His people as He loved Him.

To us who believe, He is now precious beyond the power of language to express. Yet while we see through a glass darkly, we can but feebly comprehend the grand reality. When face to face we behold Him in the glory of his Father, with the white robed company casting their crowns at His feet, saying, Thou art worthy who hast redeemed us to God, by thy blood, the term "precious" will then have a significance which our present powers of conception have never reached. May this soon be ours to behold with the triumphant Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Amen.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 1870.

The Impending Doom.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

The city of Rome is the last one to be styled "eternal." She sits over a cluster of old extinct volcanoes. For a distance of some twenty miles around in every direction is one great incrustation of lava with only a variable depth of vegetable soil above it. All this basis of lava gives evidence of having once been in a state of fusion. Some of this lava is basaltic rock; mingled with it are cinders, tufa, hepar sulphuris, and volcanic ashes. The waters about the city are often impregnated with sulphur, and the lava torrents now hardened by age, together with tufa hills and old sunken craters, are seen all about the doomed metropolis to which "the last of the Popes," as if by some strange infatuation, madly clings. It is the city of his destiny; he will stay. So a king of old clung to Babylon, and perished in and with it. Go out on whichever road you will from the city and you will find these sure evidences of some ancient fiery convulsion, that science says, since the historic period, raged and burned where Rome now stands. Down to the year 1869, it was supposed by geologists, that the old volcanoes which poured out lava right where the Mother of Harlots has for more than twelve hundred years held her seat of power, became extinct long before the spot was ever inhabited by man. Geologists had often pierced the outer crust, but until lately found nothing to show that the original soil had ever been peopled. The uppermost volcanic stratum now pulverized in part, hid every trace of human footsteps. But last year gave us a rare and startling discovery. There is proof that men once lived on the old soil now covered with lava rock. Of course, then, we must conclude that not many centuries before Christ this whole territory trembled and flamed with volcanic action. Geologists in Italy say this proof is multiplying daily. Even before the volcanic fires were extinguished, no further back than Alla Longa and the early kings of Rome, in the sixth and seventh century B. C. there must have been, it is claimed, irruptions of fire all about this site. The village of Marino, lies, only fifteen miles from Rome. Here under the lava is found the remains of dwellings, in them rude as also beautiful ancient vases, and the skeleton of a man, who like the elder Pliny seemed to have been overwhelmed while fleeing from an impending doom. His fate overtook him suddenly, and the volcano was not far away. Of course it is science that works out these conclusions, there being no history that records such events at this old period. Such is the opinion of Archeologists. The discovery during the summer of 1869, excited great attention among men of science at Rome, and also created much discussion.

This remarkable discovery is reserved for the year 1869, when the modern Beltshazzar, has summoned his "thousand satraps," to sit in purple and scarlet with him on the seven mountains of the last day Babylon. This is the doomed "Babylon the Great." And this geological announcement both agrees with, and sustains the statement of old Roman historians who inform us that as late as A. D. 80, during the reign of Vespasian, a volcanic eruption took place right in the centre of this ancient city; the fire leaping forth from the earth, consumed to the ground four of the principal pagan temples together with all the sacred buildings of this great capital of the then known world; a fearful omen of what may happen again on the same site. It thus appears that unwittingly the founder of Rome builded his city on seven volcanic hills, whose fires had not yet utterly burned out, but showed their hidden force sixteen years before the recording angel to John announced that fiery doom of which I write. Here is seen the finger of God. Think and wonder.

Now for ages the hidden fires have slumbered, while above them the "man of sin," has risen and ruled "after the working of Satan," and the hag on the seven heads of the great Roman Beast, centreing up on the seven hills, with the sea of symbolic waters all about her, has made herself "drunk with the blood of saints, and with the martyrs of Jesus." So it was for centuries before Herculaneum and Pompeii perished. All men thought Vesuvius had ceased to vomit fire and become an extinct volcano. But "in one day," came eternal ruin. Rome thinks she is safe—so did Sodom. Reader, fancy to yourself a great angel poised on wing in mid air, one mile out over the waters of Boston harbor. He holds in his hand a vast stone. Suddenly he lifts it high above his head and dashes it with irresistable force upon the unsuspecting sea. There is a mighty splash,—a great tossing of the smitten waters,—a circle of waves that carry tidings of the blow to all the adjacent shores,—the sea rolls on, and then all is still. But the huge stone is seen no more. "Thus, with violence, shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."—Rev. xviii. 21.

The first Christians were right; the coming earthquake will commence at the seven volcanic mountains. The earth's destruction begins at Rome,—the earth's renovation at Jerusalem. The hour is struck. The time is at hand. Jezebel has come from the four quarters of the globe, and gone to her bed over a powder magazine. But she knows it not. "Strong delusion" bewilders her. I expect that amid much clamor and world-wide excitement, the thousand princes who constitute the Babylonish Hierarchy will proclaim the bodily assumption to heaven of the Virgin Mary, and the Infallibility of the Pope. The prophecy demands this wild deed to give vigor to the delerious boast, "I sit a queen; I am no widow; I shall see no sorrow." Then the plagues! A living beast goes down into a lake of fire. He bore a living woman on his latest head. France sustains this woman. Underneath the beast are the waters,—underneath the heads is the beast,—undesneath the woman is the last, single head, and the seven mountains. The Roman Catholic church in Rome no more constitutes "Mystery, Babylon," "the woman," than does the Roman Catholic church in New York. Neither do the faithful Roman Catholics the world over thus constitute this Hierarchy. They are but "the waters on which the whore sitteth." They do not rule. The harlot rules over and persecutes. They don't dress in "purple and scarlet." The Pope, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops, and Bishops do. Here is the ruling, richly attired, blood-drunken woman. At the very crisis of the ages, she has gathered her harlot robes about her, and mounted her volcanic throne. Like Belshazzar she has convened her lords in a mighty religious Council in honor of her gods and goddesses, and like him of old Bobylon, she commits sacrilige by profaning the holy things in the (temple or) church of God, her President assuming to be God. In this position, thus glorifying herself, John last saw her! He looked again and saw her no more! The Almighty enemy was at the gate: "Mene, Mene, Tekel," on the wall. In one day, in one hour, the convulsion cometh. "And she shall be utterly burned with fire." The ears of the nations will tingle when they hear it. But behind this stupendous calamity is the Bridegroom of the true church—the great song—and the marriage of the Lamb.—Advent Herald,

Good Advice to the Young.—Don't rely upon friends. Don't rely upon the good name of your ancestors. Thousands have spent the prime of life in vain hopes of aid from those whom they call friends—and thousands have starved because they had a rich father. Rely only upon the good name which is made by your own exertions, and know that the best friend you can have is an unconquerable determination, united with decision of character.

A Serious Thought.—Every hour life's sands are sliding from beneath incautious feet, and with sin's fatal flower in the incautious hand the trifler goes to his doom. The requiem of each departure, is an echo of the Saviour's question; What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

"Whosoever."—"I thank God," says Richard Baxter, "for that word 'whosoever.' If God had said there was mercy for Richard Baxter, I am so vile a sinner that I would have thought he meant some other Richard Baxter; but when he says whosoever, I know that includes me, the worst of all Richard Baxters."

Books.—Books are masters who instruct us without rods and ferules, without words or anger, without bread or money. If you approach them they are not asleep; if you seek them, they do not hide; if you blunder they do not scold; if you are ignorant they don't laugh at you.

Sheep and Shepherds.

"To Him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and He calleth His own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. And when He putteth forth His own sheep, He goeth before them, and the sheep follow Him: for they know His voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers."—St. John x. 3–5.

Many of the flocks of sheep are at night brought from the plains by the shepherds, and folded within the walls of Jerusalem. They are given into the charge of a porter for the night. The shepherd then wends his way to his home, for his nightly rest. In the morning he comes to the fold door, and on giving the accustomed knock "the porter openeth." The shepherd calls his sheep, and the pretty and kindly treated animals instantly recognize his friendly voice and cheerfully follow him. He then gently leads them outside the city walls to their usual pasturage. Instead of the goads and heavy sticks which English drovers so often use, the Palestine shepherd seems to draw, as with silken cords of love, his flock wherever he desires.

A friend of mine, a lady who was for some years a missionary in Armenia, lately told me the following anecdote, which I repeat as nearly as possible in her own words:

"We had been encamped in a beautiful situation near Mount Ararat. The tent was pitched on the banks of a rocky ravine, in which flowed a bright stream, while near at hand was a little village, and the picturesque ruins of an Armenian convent. We were wandering about awaiting the loading of the packs, and the other morning preparations for continuing the journey, when we saw a boy come out of the village followed by a large flock of sheep and goats, more than a hundred in number. The young shepherd led them to a short distance, and then, sitting down on a rock, he produced his knitting from a horse-hair bag which held his provisions for the day, while the flock fed quietly around him. We went up to him, and found him very ready to enter into conversation. He assured us that he knew every member of his flock by name, and that they also knew their names and would answer to them. Pointing out a pretty young kid on the edge of the flock, we requested him to call it. At the first call the little creature lifted its head with a quick intelligent look. At the second it came trotting up to the shepherd, and received his caresses with every appearance of delight. He repeated the experiment many times, and the animal called never failed to respond to the shepherd's voice. We then tried to call them in the same way; but, imitate the shepherd's voice as we would, neither sheep nor goats would pay the least attention to us. For 'a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.'"

In the East the sheep are not driven, as with us, but led. The shepherd goes first and the flock follow. An old author speaks of seeing thousands of sheep from many different flocks assembled for washing near the upper waters of the Jordan. Of course, all were mixed together, and it seemed a scene of inextricable confusion. But as each shepherd gave his own peculiar call, the sheep belonging to him, and knowing his voice, came out from the crowd and followed their own leader.

The Boy That Grew to be a Gentleman.

"You see I am a gentleman!" said Will Thompson. "I will not take an insult." And the little fellow strutted up and down in a rage. He had been throwing stones at Peter Jones, and he thought that his anger proved him to be a gentleman.

"If you want to be a gentleman, I should think you would be a gentle boy first," said his teacher. "Gentlemen do not throw stones at their neighbors. Peter Jones did not throw stones at you, and I think he is much the more likely to prove a gentleman."

"But he's got patches on his knees," said Will.

"Bad clothes don't keep a boy from being a gentleman," said the teacher, "but a bad temper does. Now William if you want to be a gentleman, you must be a gentle boy."

A little further on, the teacher met little Peter Jones. Some stones had hit him, and he was hurt by them.

"Well, Peter, what's the matter between you and Will this morning?" asked the teacher.

"I was throwing a ball at one of the boys in play, sir, and it missed him and hit Will Thompson's dog."

"Why did you not throw back?"

"Because sir, my mother says to be a gentleman I must be a gentle boy, and I thought it was best to keep out of his way till he cooled off a little."

The teacher walked on after praising Peter's conduct, but kept the boys in his mind, and he lived to see Will Thompson a poor outcast, and Peter Jones a gentleman loved and respected by all.

Remember, my young friends, that it takes a gentle boy, to make a gentleman.—Band of Hope.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

SAUL AND THE WOMAN AT ENDOR.

[Concluded from last week.]

2. LET us next scrutinize the sorceress and her management, and see what marks of dissimulation and trickery we can detect in her.

She is denominated "a woman that hath a familiar spirit"—implying in the language of divination that she was attended by an invisible spirit with whom she was familiar, who was subject to her call, who had power to inspire her when she sought direction, or to bring up the dead that she might learn of them respecting future events. Now such a pretence as this bears the evidence of "a lying vanity" on the very face of it. We have no proof of the existence of any such fact as a person's having authority and power over an invisible spirit. Spirits are subject to the control of God, but it remains to be shown that they are ever thus put into subjection to the will of man. We must wait till a new system of philosophy and religion is constructed before we can give credit to any such notion. The Seventy, however, denominated her, as we have before said, a ventriloquist, eggastrimuthos; and they frequently speak of such persons as speaking from the belly, oi ek tees koilais phoaousin. "From this it is evident that the art of the ventriloquist, so well known now, was known then, and it is highly probable, that the secret of the art of the soothsayers consisted very much in this—in being able to throw the voice with various modifications into different places, so that it would seem to come from a grave, or from an image of a dead person, that was made to appear at the proper time."—Barnes on Isaiah viii. 19.

The woman pretended, it will be observed, that she did not at all suspect her visitor to be Saul the king, until she discovered it by the power of her art. Let us cross-examine this point a little. Saul, in some fit of zeal and perhaps to make some atonement for his disobedience in other respects, had recently executed the penalty of the law on those who practiced necromancy and divination; and, as the narrative informs us, "had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land." Or as some have supposed, he may have taken this measure because they had freely predicted his approaching ruin; although after the well known prophecies of Samuel to that effect, the present position of his affairs, and the growing influence of David, there "needed no ghost to come from the grave to tell them this." Whatever the motive, Saul, it seems, had lately cut them off from the land, so that if any now remained, they kept themselves in disguise, and practiced their arts with caution and secrecy. But now the half distracted Saul directs his servants to seek him a woman that had a familiar spirit. "And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor." How did they know there was such a woman at Endor? Either because they were in her confidence, and perhaps for her advantage and safety, kept her secretly informed of the movements of the king; or, what seems more probable from the narrative, because, in obedience to his directions, they had just traversed the land, and made diligent search for such a woman, till they found her. In either case, there is a strong presumptive evidence that she had heard of the king's wishes and state of mind, and was prepared to expect a call from him. It seems hardly credible, under the circumstances, that inquiry for such a woman should have been made through the land by the king's orders, and she not have heard of it.

But let us follow along the track of the story, and look for further evidence on this point. Saul disguises himself by putting on other raiment, takes with him two men as attendants, and makes his way to the woman's house by night—the darkness better suiting his disguise, while it would not at all tend to dissipate his superstitious feelings, nor to hinder the success of magic arts. The night is generally chosen for such craft. Saul arrives at the place, and announces his errand to the woman, by saying, "I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee." Then he stands before her, head and neck taller than any other man in all Israel, or, as the sacred description is, "from his shoulders and upwards he was higher than any of the people," and yet this good honest woman has not the least suspicion who he is! Oh no; it would not be for her advantage to know as much as that just at present.

Now such a man might so disguise himself as to pass along the way unrecognized in the night; but could he present himself before an observing, quick-sighted woman, in her own house, without her at least conjecturing in a moment who he was? We give the sex more credit for sharpness, than to believe that. Nor does it appear that he took any particular pains to feign himself another man, after he entered her door, except by keeping on the raiment he had assumed. And there was his tone of voice—had the woman never heard Saul speak before, that she should not recognize him by that? And then he came with attendants, as if he were a person of some rank. And there was perhaps also the prepaid fee—he would be likely to hand her such a princely reward as she would only expect from a king, especially as he would naturally anticipate the needed cogency of such a motive to overcome her fear of detection and punishment; for as Henry observes, "though no mention is made of her fee, no doubt she demanded, and had a large one." And yet she pretends not to suspect at all who he is! "Behold, thou knowest," she says—and no doubt she knew how to suit her tone and manner to the occasion—"Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, and how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land; wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?"

How could she have spoken better, if well knowing who he was, she was artfully seeking to draw from him some pledge of protection? And her aim was successful; for "Saul sware to her by the Lord, saying, as the Lord liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing." Thus he put himself completely in her power, giving her a sworn license to impose upon him with impunity, as much as she would; and well did she improve it. But why did she place so much evident reliance upon his oath, if, as she pretended, she knew not who he was? She was not so stupid as to imagine that such an assurance from an ordinary citizen would afford her any protection against the law and the king. And yet she appears to have been perfectly satisfied with his word, and ready to proceed at his service. What further evidence do we need that in all this she was playing a game of deception with her visitor, and artfully drawing him into her power? And if she could so skilfully act the part of a dissembler and impostor at the outset, she could act it all the way through; and we are prepared to expect more of the same craft from her, as we go on.

Her next artifice is to pretend an awful pain at discovering by the mysterious power of her magic, that her visitor is no other than Saul the king! Resting in the given assurance of safety, she proceeds to ask, "Whom shall I bring up to thee? And he said bring me up Samuel." At this point there is evidently a chasm in the story. We are not told what she did in the meantime; what mysterious divination she pretended to practice; what strange rappings, what horrible peepings and mutterings were heard; what unaccountable table-movings occurred; what spells or enchantments were used to bring up the dead. The sacred writer passes over all this in profound silence, as too ridiculous and absurd to be mentioned. But the next we read is, "And when the woman saw Samuel"—and we can hardly forbear the impression that the narrator means to be understood as relating this in a tone of significant irony—"And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice; and the woman spake to Saul saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul." This was admirably well turned, and just such a trick as we might expect a cunning sorceress to play. All on a sudden she is terror-struck with the discovery, just that moment made through the wonderful power of her wonderful art, that her visitor is none other than king Saul himself! and in a tone of surprise and consternation, she screams out at the top of her voice, as only such a witch could scream. "Why hast thou deceived me?" she gasps out to the startled, awe-smitten man before her, "for thou art Saul!"—as if she had that instant found out by the circuitous way of the invisible world, what she had all along known by the simple use of her senses! A woman who could throw dust in a man's eyes as well as that, may be presumed capable of rendering him totally blind before she has done with him.

But what is the meaning of that "loud voice" with which she cried out? Did she intend to be heard all over the house when she vociferated, "for thou art Saul?" Did she wish some person who was secreted in another room, or behind the scenes, for the purpose of acting in collusion with her, to be distinctly and unmistakably informed who her visitor was, that when he came to play the part of Samuel, he might suit his words and actions to the person addressed? for a woman who could deceive the king so far, might deceive him still farther, by pretending to be the shade of Samuel, which, in reality, was nothing else than the living substance of some cunning person who was stationed in a convenient place to help her carry out her imposition. Is there any thing incredible in the supposition that there might have been such an assistant in her secret service; or, if not, that she feigned Samuel herself, by the art of ventriloquism, as has been suggested? On either supposition it is not difficult to account for all that occurred, without resorting to the idea of supernatural agency.

It should next be observed that the woman offered Saul no opportunity of seeing the pretended apparition. She was so kind as to do all the seeing herself, while she merely left him to do the hearing. For when she professed to be surprised and alarmed at discovering who Saul was, he said unto her, "Be not afraid; for what sawest thou?" implying that he himself saw nothing. "And the woman said unto Saul, I saw Gods ascending out of the earth." This was taking a new advantage of her victim. Her reply was another cunning device for throwing an air of mystery around her craft, and deceiving the king into the idea of something marvellous. Gods ascending out of the earth! What an absurdity! But poor Saul was already too much blinded to see it. "And he said unto her, what form is he of?"—still implying that he saw nothing himself, and that his only thought was of Samuel. "And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle." Probably she had many a time seen the living Samuel, and knew how to give such a description of his personal appearance and dress, as Saul would immediately recognize. "And Saul perceived"—it is not said that he saw or beheld; but he perceived or understood by the description—"that it was Samuel; and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself." In the original the reading is, "And Saul perceived that it was Samuel himself"—the latter word being omitted by our translators. Some critics have laid great stress upon this pronoun himself, as going to show that the veritable Samuel must, in some form, have been there. But we regard it as only another significant, if not ironical stroke of the writer, designed to make the delusive impression on Saul's mind appear the more preposterous; as much as to say, "so bewildered and demented was Saul, that he verily thought it to be the identical Samuel himself."

This is enough to show the cunning adroitness of the woman, and that she was successfully imposing upon Saul's imagination by mere trickery.

3. We now take up the pretended apparition itself, to see how much of the veritable Samuel we can find in that; Saul, the meanwhile, be it remembered, seeing no shade or ghost of Samuel himself, but only hearing, from first to last, what he supposed to be his voice.

And we are disposed, at the outset, to question somewhat the soundness of our apparition's views respecting the state of the dead. He began by asking Saul, "Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up?" Bring him up from whence? Samuel was buried at Ramah, some fifty or sixty miles distant from Endor; and we should, therefore, hardly expect him to speak in this manner of being brought up bodily from the grave. This evidently was not the intended meaning of the supposed ghost; but he adopts the old pagan notion that departed spirits have their abode beneath the earth, in a certain imaginary under-world, where they rest for the present in a sort of half-conscious, lethargic state, from which Samuel is represented as being aroused at the request of Saul. If Samuel himself had actually come from the spirit-world to converse with Saul, we think he would not have made such a blunder as to talk about being disturbed in his rest or quietude, or to speak of being brought up from some imaginary shades beneath, instead of being brought down from the realms of light and glory, where such godly men as he are received to dwell with Christ. We cannot but think that our ghost shows himself none too intelligent for one who comes directly from the invisible world, and who must be supposed to know more about it than we mortals on earth, who have nothing but our Bibles to inform us. And we are sometimes provoked to question, whether many of the professed spirits that are brought up in these days, have improved their advantages and learned as much from their intercourse with the other world as might have been expected. But the deluded Saul perceived no incongruity, or marks of pagan ignorance, in the question of the supposed Samuel; and he seriously replied to it, "I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war with me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets nor by dreams; therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do."

We are next disposed to question the superior knowledge of the unseen apparition concerning the condition and prospects of Saul. What did he tell him that might not have been equally well told by almost any common person, who was tolerably acquainted with the facts which must, at that time, have generally been known in Israel? What more than what might have been told at this day, who is familiar with the history of Saul's reign? The pretended Samuel proceeds to say, "Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the Lord is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy? And the Lord hath done to him—done for himself—as he spake by me; for the Lord hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbor, even to David; because thou obeyedst not the voice of the Lord, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the Lord done this thing unto thee this day." It needed no spirit from the other world to remind Saul of all this; for who in Israel did not know of his disobeying the word of the Lord in regard to Amalek, and of the rebuke and warning that Samuel gave him on the occasion, when he said, "The Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine that is better that thou?"—and every one understood that neighbor to be David.

But now the hidden spectre ventures upon the more hazardous experiment of offering a prediction; and here we shall find him more cautious and wary in his mode of expression. "Moreover the Lord will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines; and to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me; the Lord shall also deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines." Here are two events foretold which appear to have been subsequently fulfilled; one is, that the Philistines would gain the battle in the coming encounter; the other is, that Saul and his sons would be with the supposed Samuel, be this expression understood as it may.

In regard to the first, it may be said, that in the existing posture of affairs, nothing was more probable. The Philistines had already gathered together their whole army against Israel, under the conduct of Achish, the powerful king of Gath. David and his six hundred brave warriors were with them in the field, had fought victoriously in their battles, appeared to be in their interest, and as they had been outlawed and treated as enemies by Saul, it was but natural to suppose that they would now serve as allies to the Philistines in the approaching struggle, although, as the event proved, they did not. And it was also well understood that the Lord had chosen and appointed David to the kingdom, and that a crisis to that end must be near at hand. Add to all this, that Saul himself, as his remark had just shown, was strongly apprehensive of defeat; was exceedingly depressed in spirits, feeling that God had departed from him; and that his men of war, knowing how things stood, and having their confidence in him and his cause greatly weakened on account of his scandalous treatment of David, partook of the same foreboding and disheartening frame of mind; and what was more to be expected than that the Philistines would win the day? What great risk was there in predicting such an issue? And if the Philistines triumphed, what was more probable than that Saul and his sons should be singled out for slaughter? Saul would readily be distinguished by his stature, and perhaps both he and his sons by their royal armor and commanding station.

But aside from this probability, the form of expression, "to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me," is very ambiguous, as the responses of heathen oracles almost always, and designedly, are. For example, "when Crœsus was on the point of invading the Medes, he consulted the oracle of Delphi on the success of that war, and was answered, that by passing the river Halys he would ruin a great empire. What empire, his own or that of his enemies? He was to guess that; but whatever the event might be, the oracle could not fail of being in the right." So of the same God's answer to Pyrrus: "Aio te, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse." Similar is the example before us. The expression might be construed to mean either this thing or that, to suit the event. In the first place, it is not clear that Saul's death did occur on the morrow, or the very next day after this prediction. In the next place, the word to-morrow is, in Hebrew, quite ambiguous; in some passages meaning to-morrow in the common acceptation of the term, in others meaning the future indefinitely. As in Exodus we read, "It shall be when thy son asketh thee in time to come." In the margin it stands "to-morrow," the same word that is used here. And so in Joshua, "When your children ask their fathers in time to come"—Hebrew, "to-morrow"—"what mean ye by these stones?" etc. And so in other instances.

Had the event, therefore, made it convenient to understand the prediction to be, "in time to come shalt thou and thy sons be with me," there is nothing in the language to hinder such an interpretation. The cunning ghost does not venture even so far as to say that Saul and his sons would be slain in battle; and whether they died the next day, or a month, or a year, or ten years afterwards, the prediction, in point of time, could not turn out amiss. In like manner the phrase, "shalt be with me," might be understood to mean this thing or that thing. Should the event require it, it might be construed to mean, "thou shalt be with me among the dead, or in the other world." But here again we might question the correctness of the apparition's religious views, in supposing that such a man as Saul would be admitted to the same society as the holy Samuel in the other world. Or if Saul had not happened to be slain in battle, but had lived for years afterward, the woman might have claimed that the expression was intended to mean "thou shalt be with me among the living;" for if she pretended that Samuel, though dead, was now among the living, she might pretend the same thing again, employing the second lie to save the first, as is very common. Putting the whole expression together, therefore, it was capable of being twisted into almost any shape that the witch might desire; as, "To-morrow thou shalt be with me among the dead"—or, "In time to come thou shalt be with me among the dead"—or, "To-morrow, or in time to come, thou shalt be with me among the living." The prediction, it must be acknowledged, was pretty ingeniously framed; but when we try to pin it down to some definite point, it proves, after all, to be a very slippery affair.

On the whole, then, do we need any further evidence that the woman's pretended Samuel, whom the king from beginning to end was not privileged to see with his eyes, was all a cheat; and that the sacred writer expected it to be so understood, purposely adopting the style he has in relating the story, to make the whole thing appear the more ridiculous and contemptible? And what is this but a fair specimen of the real character of all manner of pretended divination, or communicating with departed spirits, whether in ancient or modern times? There may be, and probably are at times, some phenomena connected with such arts that cannot easily be explained; and phenomena of this kind are purposely caught up and mingled with the trickery, because they help to give it an air of marvelousness. But it is too much to believe that there is any thing supernatural or miraculous in these things.

We need not, however, stay to make that application of this narrative to the pretensions of modern spiritualism of which it is capable. The thing speaks for itself. It is one example illustrating the deceivableness of all arts of the kind, and showing that they alike deserve to be treated with the same incredulous ridicule and contempt. They are lying, mischievous cheats throughout; and as wicked as they are false and demoralizing. We say to our friends, let them alone; let them perish in disgrace for want of attention. God's holy religion makes known to us all that we need to know, ought to know, or can know, of spirits and the unseen world; and affords us the only safe guide to wisdom, happiness, and heaven.

The melancholy example of Saul shows that an unsettled state of religious faith and character; a fickle, unscrupulous recreant in duty; a restless, unhappy, foreboding conscience, is precisely adapted to render a person superstitious, and to lay him open to the arts of the impostor. It is a fearful thing to get into such a state; to have no settled confidence in God and his word; no well grounded principles and habits of religion; no freedom of access to the throne of divine grace in heaven's appointed way; no truthful and abiding source of happiness within—let a person get into such a state, and he is ready to believe almost any thing but the truth; to be duped by almost any thing that appeals to his wild and skeptical religiousness of feeling and credulity. If we would escape the power of deceivers and be wise, we must have faith in God and his testimony; be satisfied to know his revealed will, and to walk in his ways; keeping the heart pure and honest in its convictions, and the time and thoughts occupied with the performance of plain, unquestionable duty.

HOW CAN A SINNER BE PARDONED?

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

ON what principle can the Lord bless those whom he has cursed? If God is immutable, and his work perfect, it must stand. If the law given to Adam for the government of his race was good, and the penalty just, it must not be changed. That is, it must always require obedience, and punish disobedience with death. Therefore any provision for the pardon of the sinner against this law, must acknowledge the authority and the righteousness of the law. It must approve what the law approves, and condemn what the law condemns. It must not in any way compromise the law. The gospel must not be against the law, but for the law. It must not amend the law, but confirm it. The law must measure the gospel, and not the gospel the law. God gave the law. In the gospel he must honor it. He cannot deny himself.

On what principle, then, does the gospel propose to pardon and bless?

It is on the principle of surety; in which one party satisfies a just claim for another. It does not set aside the claim, but satisfies it. It does not weaken it, but confirms it. It is a principle that business men well understand.

I will illustrate the principle as applied to business.

Suppose ten men are indebted to a bank $1,000 each, making $10,000. They are insolvent, and cannot pay the debt.

Now suppose that a benevolent individual, who knows the circumstances of these debtors, of his own free will deposits in the bank $10,000; a sum equal to the whole indebtedness of the insolvent party, for their benefit. This friend says to the banker, I make this deposit that these debtors may be pardoned. But I do not wish to pardon in a way that will demoralize them, or in any way weaken their sense of obligation to the bank, or to the law. To secure loyalty, I will impose upon them these conditions: they must acknowledge the righteousness of the claim against them, and of the law under which the claim is held, and me as their only deliverer. Upon complying with these conditions you may give them up their papers. Some complied with the conditions and were pardoned. But the claims of the law were not set aside. Some refused to comply with the conditions, and they were not pardoned, but remained subject to the provisions of the law.

In this illustration we can see how an offender may be pardoned on account of what an innocent one does, and yet the integrity of the law be maintained.

It is on this principle that God proposes to pardon and bless those who have sinned. The law says, "Thou shalt surely die." The gospel says, God gave his Son that he might die for the transgressor. Christ gave his life for the life of the world, that whosoever should believe on him might not perish but have everlasting life.

This plan was obscurely hinted at, in the garden, before the curse was pronounced upon the world. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." It was more fully brought out in God's promise to Abraham, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The nations were not to be blessed on account of what they should do, as the procuring cause of their blessings, but on account of what another should do. The seed of Abraham was to bless the nations. Here we have the principle plainly stated. The nations shall be blessed on account of what the seed shall do. The seed shall be the means of the blessing, instead of any thing that the nations can do independently of the seed.

This principle is very distinctly brought out in all the sacrifices of the law of Moses. They were a shadow of the sacrifice of Christ. They must be without blemish to shadow forth the spotless character of Christ. The blood of the victim must be shed, and the life thus taken to represent the death of the Son of God. These sacrifices were slain to make reconciliation for the sins of the people, to show that Christ must be slain for the sins of the people, to reconcile them to God by his own blood. The law given to Moses, as a whole, was a shadow pointing to Christ as the one who should give his life for the life of the world. This sacrifice was to be the basis of reconciliation to God, the only ground of the sinner's pardon. To this fact the general tenor of the Scriptures bear witness. Isaiah liii., the whole chapter. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed; upon him was laid the iniquity of us all; for the transgression of my people was he stricken. His soul was made an offering for sin; it was poured out unto death for transgressions.—Rom. v. 6, 8. For when we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For God commended his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners Christ died for us.

1 John ii. 2.—He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

1 Pet. ii. 24.—Who his own self bear our sin in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead unto sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins. In whom also we have peace with God through the blood of his cross. And we, who were sometime alienated and enemies in our mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled, in the body of his flesh, through death, to present us holy, and unblamable, and unreprovable in his sight. Christ died for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

Thus we have the principle distinctly stated, upon which the gospel proposes to pardon and to bless.

Christ lived an unblamable life; he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet he did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. Therefore, he did not deserve to die on his own account. But he died for us while we were sinners that we might live. He laid down his life for the life of the world. He was made a curse for us, that he might redeem us from the curse. He was raised from the dead for our justification, that we might be raised to a justified life. His name, therefore, is the only name by which a sinner can be pardoned and blessed.

His life has been deposited for the life of the world. God has accepted the deposit, and declared himself well pleased with it. The value of his life was equal to the value of the life of the world. Therefore, the world may be pardoned on account of the value of this deposit, by complying with the conditions of the gospel.

In this provision for the pardon of the sinner and for blessing the world, the integrity of the law of the kingdom is fully maintained. The penalty of the law is not set aside, but is fully allowed, and its terms cancelled, by him who purchased the world by his own life, in whom God was well pleased. The Saviour paid the debt. He died that the sinner who should believe on him might not perish finally in death but live. The demand of the law is met in the death of Christ, and the sinner who accepts him is made free on his account. In this way God can be just, and yet justify a sinner who repents, for the sake of Christ. In this arrangement God is honored, both in the law of the kingdom, and in the gospel of the kingdom.

The terms of the gospel in my next.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Feb. 1870.

FROM W. H. FORD.

BR. STORRS: Thinking that it might be interesting to you to hear from us in the far West, I will give you a brief sketch of the good effects of the gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ. You will please bear in mind, that the people of our county have been raised and educated under the teachings of the orthodox schools, and it could not be expected that they would surrender their faith without a great struggle; but it is gratifying to us to see the word of God with its soul cheering truths marching on, mounting the top wave and sending conviction to the hearts of many who have heretofore stood in hostile array against the harmonious word of God. There is a spirit of investigation going on here, such as was never before in our midst; and I am trying to do my part as an humble laborer in my Master's cause. The few sermons that Br. Shocky preached here, have thoroughly aroused the people, and they are searching for themselves, determined to call no man father in their investigation, and it has been but a short time since I heard an old man of more than sixty winters, exclaim, I thank God that my eyes have been opened to behold the word of God in its purity. But there are many who still hold to the heathen notions of the inherent immortality of the soul, and the eternal sufferings of one part of God's creation. We can only pray as did the Psalmist, Lord give them understanding that they may live. It is understanding that the people want; for it is impossible for any one to obey the laws of God until he knows what the law demands at his hands. "He that wandereth from the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Prov. xxi. 16. Thus we see from the inspired writings of the prophet, that understanding of God's law is greatly necessary to our salvation; and how diligent we should be in our search of the Scriptures to try and understand the law of God, as promulgated by the prophets and apostles.

Now, dear reader, a few words to you. Have you any friends that are still believing the serpent's lie, "Thou shalt not surely die?" If so, delay not a moment, but send and get pamphlets and books and give them. Remembering the word of God, "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." Our life is short and fleeting, and we should do all in our power to spread the word of God to erring mankind. The theology of the day proclaims God as one of the most cruel tyrants that ever exercised jurisdiction over mankind. They tell you that God will eternally torment one part of his own offspring, without mitigation and without end; thus reproaching God's holy character, with what men call cruelty and revenge. Arouse, then dear reader, and make one effort in defence of God's word. God will bless you for so doing.

"THY KINGDOM COME."—We ask that his kingdom may come, because that as yet we see not all things subject to Christ; we see not yet how the stone is cut out of the mountain without human help, which breaks into pieces and reduces to nothing the image described by Daniel: or how the only rock, which is Christ, doth possess and obtain the empire of the whole world, given him of the Father. As yet Antichrist is not slain; whence it is that we desire and pray that at length it may come to pass and be fulfilled; and that Christ alone may reign with his saints, according to the divine promises; and that he may live, and have dominion in the world.—Archbishop Cranmer, A. D. 1850.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 2, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

BY some mistake, our printer failed to supply the number of papers last week that we expected; and, in consequence, some subscribers, whose names came in afterward, could not be supplied with that number. We regret the disappointment, but are unable to remedy it.

IMMORTALITY: THE CONFLICT GOES ON.

A FEW weeks since we gave our readers an article from the "Methodist Home Journal," deprecating the inroads the Life views were making "in and out of the church; in and out of the ministry." It seems the conflict is begun. Last week "The Christian Advocate" of this city contained an article on "Immortality and Adventism." We read the article under the impression that the author was the venerable and highly esteemed Editor of "The Methodist Quarterly Review," D. D. Whedon, D.D. We were amazed to find that one so well read, intelligent and venerable, should put forth such an article; we could hardly credit our senses, and again looked at the author's name at the head of the article; and, lo, it was "D. A. Whedon, D. D." We were glad to be thus relieved; and the respect we entertained for D. D. Whedon remained unimpaired.

As to D. A. Whedon, we know nothing of him except what this article discloses; and we were reminded of an old story, in the early years of Methodism, when it was given as a reason why Methodists had no Doctors of Divinity among them, that their "divinity was not sick." It would seem by the number of "D. D.'s" now existing that they have discovered that some sort of disease or sickness exists in their theology. We clearly see what it is, if they do not; and the article before us develops its character; they are afflicted with what Dr. D. A. Whedon affirms is of long standing; for he says, "The belief in [inherent] immortality is one of the universal convictions of the race." . . . "In every nation ever known, in every race that has ever lived, in every age of this changing world we find it."

Here the disease stands out by proclamation of a "D. D." of the Methodist E. Church. It would seem to be a constitutional or hereditary disease. No wonder "Doctors of Divinity" are needed; for such diseases are hard to eradicate. But what seems peculiar in this case is, that the Doctor is needed to prevent a cure! and to reconcile the patients to bear the sickness, though it is certain to end with the largest portion of the race in "eternal torments." A terrible disease that, truly! But the Doctor cries, "peace, peace;" the disease is on you, and it is impossible to shake it off, or to cure it, for it is universal and hereditary! If that be so, may we not as well dispense with the Doctors, and let the disease run its course?

But the Doctors do not always agree. So it happens in this case. Let the following extract, from the Lectures of the late Archbishop Whately on "Scripture Revelations Concerning a Future State," stand along side of the assertion of Dr. D. A. Whedon about all nations and every race believing in inherent immortality. The Archbishop says:

"The ancient heathens did but conjecture, without proof, respecting a future state. And there is this remarkable circumstance to be noticed in addition; that those who taught the doctrine (as the ancient heathen lawgivers themselves did, from a persuasion of its importance for men's conduct), do not seem themselves to have believed what they taught, but to have thought merely of the expediency of inculcating this belief on the vulgar.

"It does not appear, however, that they had much success in impressing their doctrine on the mass of the people: for though a state of future rewards and punishments was commonly talked of among them, it seems to have been regarded as little more than an amusing fable. It does not appear, from the account of their own writers, that men's lives were ever influenced by any such belief. . . . Even those who had the firmest faith in the power of their gods, looked to them for temporal deliverance only, and for their preservation in this life, and had not only no belief, but no suspicion even, that these Beings had any power to reward and punish beyond the grave;—that there was any truth in the popular tales respecting a future state.

"It may be thought, however, by some, that the wisest of the heathen philosophers, though they did not hold the notions of the vulgar as to the particulars of a future state of rewards and punishments, yet had convinced themselves (as in their writings they profess) of the immortality of the soul. And it is true that they had, in a certain sense; but in such a sense as in fact makes the doctrine amount to nothing at all. They imagined that the souls of men, and of all other animals, were not created by God, but were themselves parts of the divine mind, from which they were separated, when united with bodies; and to which they would return and be reunited, on quitting those bodies; so that the soul, according to this notion, was immortal both ways; that is, not only was to have no end, but had no beginning; and was to return after death into the same condition in which it was before our birth; a state without any distinct personal existence, or consciousness. It was the substance of which the soul is composed, that (according to this doctrine) was eternal, rather than the soul itself; which, as a distinct being, was swallowed up and put an end to. Now it would be ridiculous to speak of any consolation, or any moral restraint, or any other effect whatever, springing from the belief of such a future state as this, which consists in becoming, after death, the same as we were before birth. To all practical purposes, it is the same thing as annihilation."

Such was the "belief in immortality," which Dr. D. A. Whedon would have us believe is proof of the truth of inherent immortality as he and others of his school hold it in these days; and he very triumphantly asks us, "Why not explain this universal conviction in a way that shall divest it of power?" and he answers, "Simply because a universal conviction is a true one:" and we answer, "Simply because" there never was such "a universal conviction;" as Archbishop Whately has abundantly shown; and that is a sufficient "explanation" to overthrow the assumed position of Dr. D. A. Whedon, and to "divest it of power" in the minds of such as are not incurably diseased with inherent immortality.

> Immortality does not follow and depend on the resurrection, but the resurrection of the body is made necessary by the continual existence of the soul.

This, to us, is singular logic. Does not "immortality follow and depend on the resurrection" so far as "the body" is concerned? Can our learned friend deny or disprove this? We need only to ask the question; no sophistry can evade that fact. "But," says our friend, "the resurrection of the body is made necessary by the continual existence of the soul." Where is the proof of this assertion? It is not a self-evident truth; and not a text of Scripture affirms it, that we are aware of. It looks very much like a "prescription" not laid down in the Book; and hence dangerous to take, even though prescribed by a Doctor. If the soul of Abel has been in conscious existence for six thousand years, without "the resurrection of the body," by what logic can it be proved its resurrection is made necessary by the soul's continual existence? Would the immortal soul die if the body is not raised? In what sense, then, is it necessary to raise it? We leave our learned friend to explain his problem.

What the Dr. says of the "Advent Christian Quarterly" we leave for others. We have never seen that magazine, and have no connection with it. Our friend in speaking of our views of death says,

> The destructionists have a fancy for attaching peculiar significations to certain words which are thus forced into a support of their theory. Such is the word death, which they interpret as meaning cessation of existence. It is doubtful if it ever has this signification. A bird dies, but it is a bird still, though a dead bird. Every particle of matter in it still exists, and will exist forever. A man dies, but he is not annihilated. Nothing has ceased but that mysterious something which we call life, which, however, is not the thinking principle.

So, at last, we have immortal "birds," as well as immortal men. Because every particle of a "dead bird will exist forever," therefore its existence has not ceased! Immortal birds! How they must sing, seeing there is no "cessation of existence:" they are "still birds, though dead birds." "A man dies," says our friend. That is just what we say: it is the man that dies—and he is a dead man, and "the dead know not any thing."—Eccl. ix. 5. But, adds our learned friend, "Nothing has ceased but the mysterious something which we call life, which, however, is not the thinking principle."

How does our friend know but "the mysterious something which we call life, is the thinking principle?" Will he pretend that the Hebrew word, nephesh, translated soul, in the Old Testament, is not also translated life? and will he affirm that the Greek words psuche and psukeen translated soul, in the New Testament, are not also translated life? How then does he know that the "mysterious" thing "we call life, is not the thinking principle?" The Psalmist says of man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Psa. cxlvi. 5. His "thinking principle" has somehow become inoperative when he dies; though the Doctors may deny it.

It is proper that we should disabuse our friend's mind on one point. He says, we "interpret the word death as meaning cessation of existence." This is not correct. We do no such thing. It is the cessation of living existence. A very important distinction; which spoils his "bird" illustration. We believe when a man is dead he has ceased to be a living man; and hence the necessity of the resurrection to restore life—or a living existence; and the resurrection from the dead is the grand theme of the gospel—"Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Cor. xv. 23. This theme filled the minds and preaching of Christ and his Apostles; but has very little to do in these days in the ministrations of believers in inherent immortality. And why should it have, if their theory is true? It will trouble them to tell what use there is of a resurrection of the body, if the soul is so active, free and happy without, as they say the saints are. It will not do for them to tell us, they will be happier after such resurrection; for they maintain the saints are in heaven in the presence of God; and David says, "In Thy presence is fulness of joy."—Psa. xvi. 11. What more do they need?

THE WICKED DEAD.

WE made some remarks last week on Eld. Waggoner's attempted "Vindication of the Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Unjust." We will add a few more at this time.

The grand error of our friend W. is, in imputing to us his own ideas; as if we supposed or taught that dying and death are the same thing; whereas the penalty of the Divine law is not reached till death has become a fixed reality. Death, though entered into by our nature being mortal, is not a fixed state or reality, to any of Adam's race, except by or for their own sins. If their sins are pardoned, they are released from the binding power of death. Hence our friend W.'s question, "Do they really believe that God executes the penalty of sins after they are forgiven?" is answered negatively: if He did execute the penalty, there could be no deliverance from death: but of the unjust it is said, "His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins."—Prov. v. 22. His death, then, is a fixed reality; and he cannot be removed from the power of death, unless his sins are first removed; and if removed so as to loose their cords, or binding power, and he is restored to life, he is in a justified state, and "cannot die any more;" and he is a child of God, because a child "of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 35, 36.

What now becomes of W.'s assertion, that, "According to the theory we call in question, the righteous, or justified, suffer the same penalty that the wicked suffer." Our readers can see that Eld. W. confounds what is clearly separable. Death comes through from Adam unto and upon all his race; but death holds no man in its power, or bondage, except for their own sins. If one goes down into death freed from his personal sins, through the grace of God, in Christ, it is "not possible that he should be holden of it," (Acts ii. 24), because he is a member of "Christ's body:" and as death could not hold the Head so it cannot hold a member of His body.

As a very large portion of Eld. W.'s remarks are founded on an entire neglect of the above plain distinction in relation to death, it will not be expected that we should follow him in detail; it would be only to correct his misconceptions of our position by repeating the same things. When W. says, we "have every one of the justified paying the same forfeit that the condemned have to pay," he speaks without due consideration, or from misconception, as our previous remarks show. It is no such thing. Death is a fixed and eternal state to the condemned, and their sins hold them there. Death, to the pardoned, is a temporary state, and it has no power to hold them an hour, unless by the choice of God, or Christ, who is "the resurrection and the life:" their sins were pardoned—the cords removed—the sting extracted, and when the Son of God pleases He will use "the keys of death and hades," unlock the door and let out the members of His Body; and then lock the door eternally against those who died in their own sins—their death is made perpetual, or eternal.

Christ "openeth, and no man shutteth. He shutteth and no man openeth."—Rev. iii. 7. He "executeth the judgment," as the Father hath committed it to His hands. His enemies once in death, are in it eternally—death to them is an unalterable state. They forfeited eternal life by rejecting or neglecting to lay hold of it when set before them; and the forfeiture is made, or manifested as final and eternal "at the resurrection of the just."

"SPIRITUALISM."

SOME of our friends who oppose this "strong delusion," of the last days, "think to do God service," by attributing the phenomenon to demons, or fallen angels. We don't call in question their sincerity or honesty in thus doing, yet we think them entirely mistaken in the matter. God is not dependent upon any such imaginary agencies to carry on His work of judgment. We regard the whole matter as a part of the direct judgment of God on men and women who love not the truth, and are really saying, "Give us lies; prophesy unto us deceit." True, they have not made use of this form of speech, but that is substantially their language. They hate the truth, and go after diviners who will give them something more palatable than the words of God. Hence, says Paul, "For this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. Paul tells us why God sends this "strong delusion;" it is, "Because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved." "Spiritiim," we regard as a direct judgment of God on the wilful rejectors of the truth; and there is no more need of invisible spirits in this case, than in that of Saul and the Witch of Endor. Both are the work of lying impostors; or the works of the flesh, to which men and women have unrestrainedly given themselves up, rejecting the truth and its restraints. But, says one, "I have heard the demons talk with an audible voice." You think so, honestly, we have no doubt; and Saul honestly thought he heard Samuel's ghost talk, while the lying woman was practicing ventriloquism to deceive poor deluded Saul. Ventriloquism is not so difficult an art, as some suppose.

But leaving that art out of the question, this "strong delusion" is a direct judgment from God on the rejectors of His truth in these last days; and it needs no other explanation, by a believer in the Bible as a revelation from God, than that God has sent it as a judgment on unbelievers, and to warn His people of the danger of taking heed to new revelations, and lightly esteeming the truth He has given us. This prying into things not revealed, and overlooking those which are, and refusing to be governed by what is made known to us, because we cannot now know them more perfectly, is the high-road to "Spiritism" and eternal death.

Let us not waste time in attempting to explain the phenomenon called "Spiritualism," but accept Paul' declaration that it is a "strong delusion," inflicted by God on men and women who "love not the truth," but hate its restraints and demands upon them. The Lord Jesus will soon be revealed from heaven taking vengeance on such as follow this lying vanity, and obey not the gospel; and they will then "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of His power," whom they have despised, and under whose yoke they refused to serve. Treat Spiritism, as every Christian should and ought to treat it, viz., As God's judgment and last warning to the unbelieving and ungodly world. If they heed it not as such, they will go on, and go down to eternal death and perish forever, in their own corruption, like natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed.—2 Peter ii. 12.

SAUL AND THE WITCH OF ENDOR.

WE finish the article on this subject, commenced last week, taken from the "New Englander," a Quarterly Magazine of the Congregational order. "The Methodist Quarterly Review," of October last, took the same view of the case as we have reproduced from the "New Englander." The author of the article on this subject in "The Methodist Quarterly Review," says:

"We understand that the Witch of Endor, was a clairvoyant of extraordinary power; that she could spontaneously place herself in sensational intercourse with the souls of those who came to inquire of her; and that with this power she united the practice of lying and deceit as she found occasion to serve her own dark purposes. We hope to show by fair and worthy criticism, that, upon this hypothesis, the narrative before us is capable of a happy and consistent explanation; and at the proper places in the course of the discussion, we shall urge what we regard as insuperable objections to the commonly received interpretation, which assumes an actual appearance of Samuel."—M. Q. R., page 532.

Thus we have from two prominent sources—Congregational and Methodist—an admission that the view generally taken, by what are called "Orthodox divines," is untenable in this matter. True, they may still hold fast to the idea of the conscious existence of soul entities, after death; but this case is no longer considered as proving such to be the fact.

It may be "Spiritism" that has driven them to take this view of Saul's visit to the Witch of Endor; and the same cause, if nothing else, will, sooner or later, lead them to abandon every text in the Bible on which they have relied to support the idea of the conscious state of dead men, before the resurrection. "Spiritism" is the legitimate child of the "orthodox" notion of soul entities, which survive in consciousness after death.

KNOWLEDGE.

How much may be known, or how far knowledge may extend, depends upon the subject before us. Some things can be known more perfectly than others; and the same things more fully at an advanced period, or under improved advantages. Of some things we may have sufficient knowledge for all necessary purposes without hardly an approach to a perfect knowledge of the nature and properties of the object, thing, or person. We may know many things of it and about it, and yet be profoundly ignorant of its most essential nature. No one doubts but what the Almighty Maker is, in some things, beyond the scrutiny of finite minds. What is revealed of Him may be known. So far it is our privilege and duty to labor to know Him, and not to do it, is a sin. But beyond that revelation the man who attempts to explore spends his energies for nought, and most likely bewilders himself, and others.

Because many things, and all things necessary to our profit here, and our eternal life hereafter, may be known of the person of our Lord Jesus Christ, does it follow that there is nothing in His person and nature that is beyond human scrutiny?

When Jesus saith, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father," we know of course, that He is "the Son of God;" but does it hence follow, that we can know the full meaning of the phrase, Son of God? or, in what sense, way or manner, that relationship exists? May there not be a secret in that relationship which is known to no created being, and only to the Father? It seems to us highly probable that such is the fact; and the words of Jesus to us, clearly express that fact when He said, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father." And it appears, to our mind, that He intended to teach all men, everywhere, that all attempts to gratify human curiosity in such investigation would prove abortive and mischievous, and tend to draw away the mind from the facts revealed concerning Him as our Lord and Redeemer. Who can doubt, that studies the history of the Church for the past eighteen centuries, but what the attempt to define just who the Son is, and to make their imaginary discoveries a test of character and fellowship, has made more discord, strife, and bloodshed, than any other controversy in the bodies calling themselves Christian?

Had the words of Jesus—"No man knoweth who the SON is, but the Father"—been allowed to stand undisputed, would not all this have been avoided? We think it would; and highly as we esteem and love those who may differ from us in our conclusion of our Lord's teaching in this text, we must still believe for ourself, that the present translation expresses just what the Son of God designed to teach; and we cannot accept the construction some have endeavored to put on the "but" changing it to "if not."

In the first place—It would be as if our Lord had said, "If my Father does not know who the Son is, no man does." This is a contrast so incongruous that, at first sight, it repels our mind, and leads to its rejection. It might be called a truism so self-evident as not to need to be expressed. If it be said that Donegan and Robinson give the meaning of the original words translated "but" to signify "if not, unless, except," yet the word "except" is quite as likely to express the Saviour's idea, as "if not," and more so, for the reason we have assigned. "But, or except the Father" makes a more harmonious sense than "if not," and certainly corresponds best with the Scripture declaration that God's mind is unsearchable and His ways past finding out; and so far as our knowledge extends, what work of God is more inscrutable than that of His sending a personage into the world endowed with such wisdom and power as His Son possessed? Is there nothing unsearchable in this? And does it not seem likely that that personage would claim that there was something pertaining to Him that was beyond human comprehension? Something known to no one "except the Father?"

We care not to dwell upon the subject. It may with truth be said of Jesus, "He spake as never man spake." Take a few examples. "Behold I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy." This He said only two verses before the language, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father." Did any other man ever speak in such language "I give" etc.? Truly might He say, No man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father, seeing He speaks as if the power he communicated was directly from himself. When applied to, to heal the leper, He said "I will; be thou clean: and immediately" the leper "was cleansed." "The Son quickeneth whom he will."—John v. 21. "Damsel I say unto thee, arise;" and the dead arose.—Mark v. 41. "Young man I say unto thee arise;" and the widow's son awoke from the dead while being carried to his burial.—Luke vii. 14.

It is needless to multiply instances of that independent form of expression, which none of the disciples ever used, and which would be blasphemy if used by any other person than the Son of God; and the use of such language by Him, proves the truth of His testimony, that "No man knoweth who the Son is, but (or, except) the Father." There, we leave the subject.

Burning of the World.

BY ELD. T. K. ALLEN.

Br. Storrs: I have read your article on the burning of the world in answer to Br. Chase, and there were several points in it that struck me with great force, viz: Peter when he spoke of the world that then was being overflowed with water perished, qualified it by saying, in chap. ii. 5, that God brought the flood upon the world of the ungodly. It was the world of ungodly men that were destroyed, and not the physical world, for that still remains. If then it was the world of ungodly men that were destroyed, then, by the same rule of reason, the world that now is and that shall be destroyed by fire, referred to by the same apostle, is the world of ungodly men, and not earth's geographical surface, which agrees with Eccl. i. 4. "One generation passeth away and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth forever." Psa. civ. 5, "Who laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be removed forever." Prov. x. 30, "The righteous shall never be removed; but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth," etc.

Another point that struck me was, the promise of God to Noah and his posterity: "I will not again curse the ground for man's sake; neither will I again smite every living thing as I have done."—Gen. viii. 21. That God has not only promised not to destroy the world again with water, but that he promised not to destroy every living thing with fire, as he had done, is clearly embraced in these words, "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake." Which is in harmony with the general tenor of the Scriptures.

To me there is nothing more plainly taught than that God sets up his everlasting kingdom in the days of Gentile rule; and not after they have been broken to pieces and passed away. When that kingdom shall be once set up, it shall never be destroyed, but shall break in pieces all these kingdoms; and it shall stand forever: so then there is no place here for the destruction of the physical earth by literal fire. It is evident when the kingdom of God is set up, the King will sit upon the holy hill of Zion.—Psa. ii. 6. At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it.—Jer. iii. 17. Then "the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and he shall judge among many people and rebuke strong nations afar off."—Micah iv. 2, 3. "He shall have dominion, also, from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth; all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him."—Psa. lxxii.

Beside, there are very many other Scriptures that harmonize most beautifully with Dan, ii. 44, most emphatically showing that God's kingdom will be set up while the Gentile nations are in existence; and when once set up, Jesus Christ is to reign upon the throne of his father David forever. "And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey him."—Dan. vii. 27.

I repeat, I see no place here for the burning of the world by literal fire; and inasmuch as it is not in harmony with a great majority of Scripture testimony, I will venture to say I see no necessity for it. God can cleanse the earth and make it new without it. For when the cause is removed the effect will cease. Sin is the cause of the groaning creation. Remove the cause and then the groaning creation shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Then the lower heavens or regions of air shall no more be agitated with furious storms and tempests, torn by hurricanes, no more pestilential blasts, siroccos and suffocating winds; then the earth shall bring forth no more thorns, briars or thistles, no more useless and fetid weeds or poisonous plants. Then the Lord God shall wipe away the tears and sorrows of his people, and there shall be no more death. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that we look for such things, let us be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless.

It is a comfort to Christians apart to think that their prayers meet before a throne of grace, and their persons will meet before a throne of glory.

The Resurrection Life.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

It is asserted by church historians that the one blessed hope which animated and sustained the early martyrs, was the resurrection of the dead. Believing they should rise again at the last day they went joyfully to their martyrdom, suffering incredible tortures with heroic fortitude, in the expectation of the resurrection life to be realized at our Lord's last advent. Is it any marvel that such hope inspired them when the Holy Scriptures were in their hands? Is not the divine word full of promises of resurrection joys? Rev. Edward Bickersteth states upon careful examination, that at least one verse in thirty of the New Testament points onward to the resurrection and the immortal life then to follow. And we know that the word "resurrection" itself—a word whose very accent is enough to quicken the dead—occurs no less than forty times in our common version. Numerous other words have also a similar import and refer to the same event. Allowing the truth of the statement of Bickersteth, the resurrection life is alluded to in some two hundred and sixty-five verses, by our Lord and his apostles and evangelists. It is for the advent, the judgment, the resurrection and the eternal life which is to follow these, that all men are bidden prepare. "Prepare for death," writes the Rev. William Anderson, "is almost all the cry of the modern pulpit, whereas I do not recollect of one instance of it in the whole of the apostolic writings." But of the resurrection of the dead, Dr. Adam Clarke declares, that "there is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect." At the present day it scarcely finds mention in funeral sermons or in the religious periodicals.

Can any one tell why this and its twin doctrine, the blessed advent, is so much ignored by the ministry of these times, and treated as of no account, either as a motive to Christian action, or a warning to sinners? Has the hope of the gospel or the incentive to repentance changed since the days of the apostles and martyrs? I would like to know. Just think of it—every thirtieth New Testament verse bearing on this blessed doctrine, and yet there are ten thousand pulpits in America in which you will not hear it preached in a whole year! And the religious organs are equally silent. I have taken "The Advance," a leading Congregationalist paper, for the past twelve months, but do not recollect that the Second Advent and resurrection was ever referred to in its columns during all this time—save it might be incidentally. The same thing might be said of the "Observer," the "Congregationalist," the Christian Advocate and Journal," the "Methodist," the "Independent," and numerous others. Only three of either of these great religious organs contain more reading than is found in the New Testament, and a careful estimate shows that should they publish the recurrection doctrine as fully and persistently as did Jesus and Paul, each and every weekly paper would make mention of it nearly ninety times. We supposed that Chr stian papers were gotten up not only to report the doings and progress of "our Church" but more especially to present gospel hopes and gospel joys. Whereas the truth is, one may search the organs of the various denominations in vain for an adventual or a resurrection theme. Sometimes a bare mention of them is made. But the thing is more likely to be incidental rather than as a motive or an object of ardent desire or sacred hope.

Pray what is the matter, brethren? Is your divinity sick, and is there no balm in Gilead? The advent and resurrection stare us in the face in three or four places on every two pages of the last will and testament of Jesus, but men don't see it. Why, every pulpit in the world should ring with it; every religious newspaper blazon it forth repeatedly and persistently: the glorious doctrine that Dr. Hody asserts was held by all the early orthodox Christians, and which Dr. Clarke says the apostles continually insisted on. Is there not danger of falling in love with death and the grave? Of ignoring the expectation for which Paul was accused and bound with his chain? Danger indeed of really losing sight of the faith and hope of the blessed gospel?—Advent Herald.

"Communion with God—What it is."

"Communion with God, is an expression often in my mouth, but which sinks no further; I know the word but neither its blessed import, nor glorious extent. My prayers and practice jar; for while I beg it with my lips, I struggle not to attain it in my life. Ah! what a stranger am I to that which I would fain have flattered myself I was acquainted with! Alas what know I of walking with God—of that joy which is found in believing? What know I of the lasting and abiding impressions of his inexpressible love! What of that transforming vision and assimilating sight which is enjoyed below, whereby the soul is changed into the same image from glory to glory! What do I know of dwelling in his presence all the day long! What of pouring out my soul in prayer to him! and wrestling with him for the blessing! How seldom is my meditation of him sweet! But union is the basis of communion; for how can those walk or talk together that are not agreed? O then be joined to the Lord, and become one spirit! But my soul, mistake not communion, for it lies not in a flaming profession nor in the performance of the Christian duties, as reading, hearing, praying, praising, though enjoyed in these; nor in the greatest parts and brightest talents; nor in lofty expressions in prayer; nor in the knowledge of divine things; What is it then? It is just a dwelling in and with God, and God dwelling in and with the soul. It is God's love going out on the soul, and the soul in love going out on God. God dwells in the duty with supplies of grace, in the meditation as its subject, and in the heart as a portion and chief good. And the soul dwells in God as her ultimate end, dilates in his fulness, riots in his bliss. The soul that is blessed with such a communion, favored with such a fellowship knows no other object for her love; no other subject for her thoughts; no other employment for her faculties; no higher degree of happiness for her attainments, than consummate communion; no other beloved for her affection; no other end for her existence.

"Nor is this all. In communion with God the soul shares of his fulness, communicates of his glory, drinks at his pleasures, satiates herself with his love, participates of communicable perfections, enters into his joy, and partakes of the divine nature. O life of angels! O paradise of love! O ecstasy of bliss! The soul is always with God; now in prayer, then in praise; now in meditation then in ejaculation: she has not a complaint but she tells to God; not a grief but she makes known to him; not a sin but she mourns over to him; not a request, not a desire, but she reveals to him. O that holy intimacy that is contracted between the soul and God! that freedom of converse, that wrestling with God in prayer, disputing about the blessing! 'Let me go.' 'I will not let thee go until thou bless me.' This is the life of heaven on earth, God come down to man, or rather man taken up to God.

"Now my soul what thinkest thou of all this? Ah! the carnal mind is enmity against God, and against communion with God. Then I must be either crucified to the world, or cursed with the world. It is not a Sabbath day's devotion, a rapture in time of praise or prayer, and returning greedily to the world. Communion is another thing than I have hitherto taken it to be. It is constant and continual. I should endeavor always to keep my soul in an heavenly frame, even in earthly affairs; thus the angels even in messages to our world carry heaven with them. Although I must mind the necessary affairs of this life, yet I should carry God to the field with me, and to the closet, to the street, and to my table. I should work, and walk, fall asleep, and awake in his presence; and talk with him on my bed, when all around me keep silence; and when hurried away with vain rovings, my soul should still return to God as her centre, as her resting place.

"O the pleasure that is in this life of communion with God! it is a young heaven, with which in the highest degree of perfection all the saints in glory are blessed. Then, Lord, begin this life of communion in my soul, to which I am too much of a stranger; destroy everything that would destroy it; and as I would desire to live with thee hereafter, so let me endeavor to live with thee here, and thus improve for eternity, and prepare for the world to come."—James Meikley, late Surgeon at Carnworth.

Letters and Extracts.

From A. Pennell.

Br. Storrs: I see in the last Herald you make some statement of the financial condition of the paper, not the most encouraging, nor altogether, the most discouraging. A person conducting a train on the old apostolic track, that leads directly to immortality and eternal life, must calculate his funds will, at times run rather low, and that the stock of such a company, will sink below par in the popular market.

But that any one taking stock in such a company, and not paying up his subscription and forfeiting his stock, is more than I can account for. It cannot be that they have made shipwreck of faith, or lost confidence in success. I have thought it may be with some or many of the brethren, as it has been with me. I have been trying, and patiently waiting, and partially hoping, to get some passengers to take this train, to sell some tickets, to collect some fare to send along with mine. And at times would almost resolve that I would not send even for myself, if I could not get some more to send with it. Why, to think of the ten times ten thousand who, on some important points are in the darkness of heathenism, who ought to take this paper and read it, and walk in the light of it, and then to think of sending one lonely subscription, why it almost makes the cold chills run over one! This certainly does not look much like converting the world, and yet it is about as good evidence of it, as any that can be found.

This, then, is my apology for not sending my subscription before. Poor though it may be, it is the best I have. Now if there are others in the same trouble, I would advise them to wait no longer, but forward your subscription without delay; for you cannot afford to have your names blotted out of the list of believers of "No life out of Christ." I enclose five dollars, and you may send one copy to ——. Yours looking for life at the coming of Jesus.

Honeoye, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1870.

From Polly G. Pitts.

Br. Storrs: I write a few lines, and send you a new subscriber. O, how I love the Herald. I feel that it is God's messenger. I feel to-day as Jesus expressed himself, when he rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. O what a blessed thing is truth; how purifying how exalting.

Taking up a few days ago, the Herald of Life for Aug. 11, 1869, my eye fell on an article from the pen of Dr. Leask, Editor of the "Rainbow," England. The heading of the article was, "Training for service in the Ages to Come." O how the blessed truth that ran through the article, reconciled me to all of God's dealings with me, however painful at the time. He asks, "Why are we saved by grace? Why called and chosen? Why adopted into the divine family? Why justified and sanctified? Why made the objects of special care, and the subjects of special immunities and privileges?" Such questions as these are of paramount importance, because the correct answer to them will bring us into moral and mental sympathy with God's unveilings of the future, and lead us gratefully to appreciate the wisdom and love of his dealings with us at present, however painful those dealings may be to our natural feelings. I hope our brothers and sisters will read it again, and it may be to them as it has been to me, a fruitful subject of thought. O, glorious thought, to be trained for God's service in the Ages to come. O the beauty of holiness; how good to "worship God in spirit and in truth."

I hope Br. Rondthaler may still keep writing for the Herald; that God may bless him abundantly; and as he freely receives, may he freely give. I was much edified by his letters; it made me think of what a gentleman told me the other day. He said he had a block of crystal quartz, and it was so clear that you could see lines of pure silver running through and through it. I do bless God that I can see the bright line of living truth running through and through the Herald of Life. O what light God hath given us, the light of life, of eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord; and No life out of Him. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. Amen, so be it. I can see the bright lines running through Br. Campbell's article on the burning of the world; and Br. Grim's on the passage, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." My views have been like his for years, as a general thing, or in most points. May the Lord bless Sister E. Wood, in her labors of love to the sick and needy, and to those that are perishing for the lack of knowledge. My prayers shall go with her in her daily ministration, and with all the precious ones that are training for service in "The Ages to Come."

Your Sister hoping through Jesus to be gathered with all the elect of God when he makes up his jewels in his everlasting kingdom.

This is my birthday, Feb. 22, 1870; and I am 75 years old. Bless the Lord for this life, and much more for the promise of the life which is to come.

Fredericksbug, Iowa.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

Br. Storrs: And all the dear children of God; I often think I will not try to write any more, for fear of taxing the patience of our Editor, and taking up space that might be better occupied. But we shall have no misgivings if Br. Storrs throws it under the table, as he is the best judge in the matter. What I want to say is by way of expressing my feelings in gratitude to God and his stewards for all the favors bestowed. May their reward be great in the kingdom and new earth territory. Amen. Now that we are no longer confined at home on account of sickness, we feel like hoisting sail once more. But which way to steer is somewhat perplexing. We feel deeply on the important command to work while the day lasts for the night cometh wherein no man can work. No, nor ever will see the light, but will sleep a perpetual sleep. But not so with the saints; of the most high God. For their life is hid with Christ in God; so that when Christ the Life-giver shall appear, then shall we all appear with him in glory. Glory to God, how we love to talk and write about the blessed truths in the Bible, and how we love to read the Herald of Life. In the four just received, we find one or two letters from Br. S. L. Walter, which caused a new spring of joy, to the flowing of tears, so glad was I to hear from him and that he is doing battle for God. We also found the name of Br. Forester, M. E. Green, Z. Campbell, W. S. Campbell, and R. Clinkenbard, and many more that we love, though we have never seen them in the flesh. May we soon meet to part no more, is the prayer of your Brother in hepe of eternal life, which God who cannot lie, promised before the age began.

Grafton, Ill., Feb. 14, 1870.

From Henry A. Troeger.

Br. Storrs: Having read your appeal to the subscribers of the Herald for assistance, I thought I would endeavor to do a little something, and succeeded in obtaining one subscriber for the dear Herald, at your offer; and then concluded I would send it to another, praying that the good Lord will send His blessing with it.

I endeavor in my own weak way, to spread the truth; and the least advance by the friends of orthodoxy, is sufficient to bring forth what little of the Law and Testimony, which I have at command in my defence, and through the plainness of the same, I often have the satisfaction of being called insane, crazy, and heretical, but these epithets are merely a covering for the nakedness of their arguments, as was fully proved a few days ago, when I happened to drop into the office of one of our business men and was immediately greeted with, "There comes one of our crazy men." Knowing the cause of this greeting, I did not wait for a second call for the defence of the truth as it is in Jesus, but started with the penalty and atonement, and ended with Paul's argument upon the condition of the righteous dead, consequent upon the resurrection or non-resurrection of Christ.

When I had finished, he said, "Why Troeger, you ought to go to preaching; but one thing I will admit, that the Bible all the way through, gives more direct evidence in support of the theory of eternal death to the wicked, than any other."

Please find enclosed four dollars. Three, for three subscriptions to the Herald, and the balance for some of the Campaign Documents.

I am very happy to hear that Br. Rondthaler, is willing to write for the benefit of Moravians and others throughout the country, who have learned to believe as he does, and I hope he will continue to write for the Herald. Your Br. in Jesus our Life.

Sandwich, Ill., Feb. 16, 1870.

John B. Witham, Epping, N. H., writes: I am a believer in the doctrine of the Apostles, and "No life out of Christ," who is our only Life-giver. I have been blessed while reading on the subject of the coming kingdom, and of putting on immortality when our Lord and Saviour comes. The subject has unfolded more light and love to me, in six months, than all the preaching of inherent immortality in the past. It has brought me clearly to see where Life is to be found. O, how long has our world been blinded by false teaching, saying that mortal man has immortality. Some hard speeches are uttered against me, because I talk Life only in Christ. There is but one in this place in this view except myself: but I trust we shall soon have more. A number of our neighbors read our papers. My prayer is, that the truth, of Life only through Christ, may be promulgated by all God's faithful ministers. God give success to the Herald of Life. How glorious is the light that shines so bright and clear; that shows us where the Life is; and tells us not to fear. Your Br. in Christ. Pray for me, brethren.

D. J., & M. M. Weaver, write from Russelville, Mass.: This whole neighborhood is stirred. Some are raging; but mostly all are studying the Bible, and say it was never read so much before. You may depend we are looked at as curious folks. But the Lord will settle these things for us. All we have to do is to present the truth in love, and the Lord will give the increase.

Eld. J. C. Wheeler, North Turner Bridge, Me., sends two new subscribers for a year, and writes: Soon I will send you more. The truth is spreading gloriously in Maine. I am in hopes, by another summer we shall have one of the largest camp-meetings in the Union; and hope it may be so that you can come and comfort the hearts of the children in this State: many are desirous to see you. God bless you in your labor of love. Yours, in hope of "Life only in Christ."

The "Other Side."

A Doctor in Mass., to whom some one sent the "Herald of Life, and paid for it six months, writes us:

Whenever the term of my subscription expires you may discontinue my paper. I think when you come to the "other side," you will find yourself just a trifle mistaken. If I were sure that the general tenor of the Bible sustained your views, I would toss my copy of that book into the stove.

Question by the Editor.

How much reverence does such a spirit manifest for the Bible? He might as well burn it at once; for, if it don't teach to suit him he would "toss it into the stove."

OBITUARY.

Died in Bristol, Conn., Feb. 14th, of congestion of the lungs, the twin sons of Br. and Sr. E. M. Curtiss, aged two months. The triumph of the enemy will be but short. The parents being in the covenant, by believing in J sus, their children are holy, and God will save all such in his everlasting kingdom. A High Challenge.

The following was sent us by Br. Lyndall, New Albany, Ind., with a request to insert it in the Herald of Life. The text of Scripture, with which it is introduced, is by Br. Lyndall:

"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isai. viii. 20.

The following has been sent to the "Courier-Journal," of Louisville, from Winchester, Tenn., with a request for publication: (And was so published Dec. 1, 1869.)

1. The undersigned denies that God is necessarily immaterial because he is a Spirit.

2. Denies that there is an immaterial being in existence. Immateriality is nothingness.

3. Denies that God Almighty and Jesus Christ are one in person—denies that the Holy Spirit is a person—and denies that the three ones are one.

4. Denies that the Gospel is preached in the Catholic, Protestant, Baptist, Campbellite or Jewish Churches.

5. Denies that the Church is the Kingdom of God, or that the Kingdom of God has come.

6. Denies that any man has an immortal soul, or that the Bible teaches such a doctrine.

7. Denies that any but the righteous—believers of the Gospel—will ever be resurrected to life.

8. Denies that there is an eternal hell of conscious misery in store for any one.

9. Denies that God is such a demon as the doctrine of eternal suffering in hell-fire and brimstone represents him to be.

10. Denies the Millennium is to be established by the "foolishness of preaching."

Upon the issues involved in the above propositions, I am ready to meet all the preachers in the State of Tennessee or the United States, in public discussion. Discussion is the great bulwark of Truth. The mighty oak, with its roots extending far into the earth, can laugh at the storm and the tempest; but the miserable sapling which has no roots at all can flourish only in the sunshine. Come out, then, gentlemen, and "let us reason together," and remember that "he that will not reason is a bigot, he that does not reason is a fool, and he that dare not reason is a knave."

My sole object is to develop truth, expose error, and enlighten the people.

Two laws are more adequate to the regulation of the whole christian community, than all political institutions together—namely, the love of God, and that of our neighbor."

The spirit of Christ sweetly calms the soul of a suffering believer, not by taking away all sense of pain, but by overcoming it with a sense of his love.

Said a member of a church to another member: "I can give five dollars for this object and not feel it." "Then," said his companion, "give ten and feel it. Did not the Saviour feel what he did for you?"

Paradise.

O Paradise! I long for thee:
Thy waters, fruits, and flowers;
Dull pain would leave me, could I breathe
The perfume of thy bowers.

O Paradise! a happy pair
Once had a home in thee;
By sin they lost it, died and brought
A mortal life to me.

O Paradise! sin's blasting breath,
Has on thy beauties fed;
And where the rose and lily grew,
Grow thorns and briars instead.

Yet, Paradise, with thankful tears,
I often proudly cry,
Not in my lovely Paradise,
Did guilty Adam die.

Soon, Paradise, another pair
Shall make thee their abode;
The Bridegroom, Christ—the Bride shall be
The ransomed church of God.

O Paradise, loved Paradise
Restored, improved, redeemed,
I'll find thy new-made charms more sweet
Than ever mortal dreamed.

O Paradise, thro' all the earth
God's will shall then be done,
Each saint shall have eternal life
Through God's beloved Son.

Two Resurrections.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

Br. Storrs: I once believed as many Adventists doubtless do yet, that two literal resurrections are taught in the xxth chapter of Revelation. One of the righteous, and the other of the wicked; with a period of one thousand years between them. But having become convinced that this is an error, I desire to place before the readers of the Herald for their candid consideration, what appears to me to be the truth in this matter.

That at least two resurrections are taught in this chapter, cannot be denied without an utter disregard of the most ordinary rules of language. For instance. In v. 4, we read of certain ones who "lived and reigned with Christ the thousand years." And in v. 5, "But the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years were ended: this (the living and reigning with Christ) is the first resurrection."

This word "first," is entirely superfluous, unless the resurrection to which it is attached is to be followed by a second. In fact, the sentence "This is the first resurrection," teaches that another resurrection will follow as clearly as though it was written in so many words; for the word "first," is a numeral adjective of order, and tells us where in the order of resurrections the living and reigning with Christ belongs, viz., It is the first in order.

It is also said in v. 6, "Blessed and holy is he who has a part in the first resurrection; over these, the second death has no power." This teaches by implication that those whose part is in the second resurrection are not necessarily beyond the reach of the second death.

The object of this article is to show that both these resurrections pertain to the righteous. The first to the "First-fruits."—The second to the "Harvest" and that neither of them are the literal resurrection.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

It is said of those who were "Beheaded because of the testimony of Jesus, and because of the word of God, and who did not worship the beast, nor his image, and did not receive the mark on their forehead, and on their hand," that "They lived and reigned with Christ the thousand years." V. 4. Many expositors understanding the words, "Lived and reigned"—to mean the literal resurrection of the just, and literal reign with Christ on his throne, and locate the binding of the Dragon in the future, after the second advent of Christ.

If however it can be proven by the words of Christ and his apostles, that the living and reigning with Christ has been going on ever since men began to believe in the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and to confess that he "is Lord," the theory of a future binding of the Dragon, and a thousand years reign of Christ on the earth before the curse is removed, and "the death" abolished, and the "Restoration" inaugurated, must fall to the ground. Let all who read this article lay aside preconceived opinions, and consider well and faithfully the testimony of the witnesses, that will be presented in this article; remembering that it is only the mind of the flesh that gets stirred up when favorite theories are opposed.

"THEY LIVED."

Literally, a resurrection is a restoration of dead persons to life, a reliving. Consequently, if it can be shown by competent and reliable witnesses, that there has been a reliving of dead persons throughout the entire gospel dispensation, we will have proven that the first resurrection reaches from the resurrection of Christ—the head—until the "full number of the gentiles have come in,"—Rom. xi. 25,—completing the fullness of the body.

To the testimony. What saith the Scriptures?

"For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all then were all dead."—2 Cor. v. 14. "But Jesus said unto him, Follow me, and let the dead bury the dead."—Matt. viii. 22. "But the favor bestowed, is not in all respects like the offence; for, if by the offence of one, the many have died," etc.—Rom. v. 15.—Anderson. "The mind of the flesh is death."—Rom. viii. 6. "Whereas he saith, Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Eph. v. 14. Comp. John viii. 12.

If this testimony does not fully establish the fact that the natural state of man is a state of death, then I am at a loss to know what language would do it.

But it may be asked, On what principle of language can persons in possession of natural life be truthfully called dead? I answer—Being separated from the life of God, by a sentence which dooms them to the "blackness of darkness forever," to "utterly perish in their own corruption," unless rescued by a union with Christ the Life-giver; they are, to God, who calls things that are not as though they were, already dead, having been turned over to the dominion of death. And on the same principle, those who are thus translated back into the kingdom of the Son of God, i. e., into life, are said to have passed out of death (power of darkness) into life (the kingdom of His dear Son). And although they may sleep in Jesus yet to God they are not dead, any more than is the child, locked in the unconsciousness of healthful slumber, dead to the affectionate mother. For "he knoweth them that are his;" and that he can as easily awake them to conscious existence, as the mother can her infant. Hence, even though they sleep—unto him they live.

Having proven, by the word of truth, that all men are dead until they become "new creatures in Christ Jesus," I now invite the reader's attention to the following testimony affirmative of the resurrection of some of these dead persons. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."—1 John iii. 14. "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. These things I have written unto you, that you who believe on the name of the Son of God may know that you have eternal life."—1 John v. 12, 13.

"But God who is rich in mercy for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened (made us alive) together with Christ; (by grace ye are saved), and hath raised us up together and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—Eph. ii. 4, 5, 6. "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death into life." (The word for word translation reads, "Has passed out of the death into the life.") "Verily, verily I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live."—John v. 24, 25. I believe that this last verse is very generally understood by "Adventists" to have reference to the restoration of Lazarus and the widow's son to temporal life, but I am satisfied that the context will not admit of such an application of this passage. Besides, it is evident that the Saviour was not speaking without a figure; for a person who is literally dead, cannot literally hear. In order to hear there must be life. But the dead of v. 25, hear; and the result of their hearing is—they live. V. 24, is the key to this. In it Jesus says, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed out of death into life." The construction of the Saviour's language in v. 25, seems to me to forbid the attempt to cramp his meaning in the restoration of these two persons to temporal life. "The hour is coming and now is," shows clearly that the Saviour had his mind on something which was then in the future, more than in the then present; hence he continues, v.'s 26, 27, "For as the Father has life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also:" showing that the living of the dead that hear is intimately connected with the execution of the judgment.

The Revelator informs us that those composing the first resurrection have passed out of the realm of the second death. "On these the second death hath no authority." Christ says, those who hear his words and believe on him that sent him, "Shall not come into condemnation, but is passed (ek tou thanatou eis teen zooeen), out of the death into the life."

And Paul says, "Giving thanks unto the Father . . . who hath delivered us from the power of darkness and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son."—Col. i. 12, 13.

We have now proven by the words of Jesus and his apostles that the natural condition of all men is a state of death, and that those who have become new creatures in Christ Jesus have passed out of death into life—were raised with him, and shall not come into condemnation.

We will now prove by the same witnesses, that "Over these the second death hath no power;" thereby showing that they are "the first resurrection."

"Verily, verily I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath eternal life. I am the bread of life. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is that bread which cometh down from heaven; that a man may eat thereof and not die. I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever."—John vi. 47–51. "This is that bread which came down from heaven, not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead, he that eateth of this bread shall live forever."—Verse 58.

Something befel the fathers in the wilderness which those who eat of the bread that came down from heaven should escape. What was it? Jesus calls it death. It could not have been mere temporal death, for that befalls all alike. John x. 27, 28, will explain what Jesus means by "shall not die." "My sheep hear my voice and I know them, and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." Why? Because, "I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 39, 40, 44, 54. The difference then, between the death of the fathers that ate manna in the wilderness, and that of those that eat the bread that came down from heaven is this: The fathers will have no resurrection, for they have perished, and will be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death. The Christian only sleeps. His life is hid with Christ in God. Those who are in him live with him. Although to man they have to all appearances perished like the others, to Christ they still live, for their lives are in his possession. They have eternal life, hence over them the "second death" has no power. They are not under its dominion. The law of life, which is in Christ Jesus, freed them from the law of sin and death, and he will "raise them up at the last day." This "first resurrection" is called in Rev. xiv. 4, "The first fruits to God and the Lamb." They were shown to John standing on Mount Zion with the Lamb. Not on the literal Mount, for the coming of the one like the Son of Man had not yet taken place. Verse 14. They were sealed in their foreheads with the seal of the living God.—chap. vii. 2–8; i. e., had become partakers of the Holy Spirit after having believed the gospel.—Eph. i. 13; iv, 30, and had thus passed out of death into life, because the Holy Spirit is life.—Rom. viii. 10.

The symbolic number of the whole congregation of sealed ones is 144,000.—Rev. xiv. 1. The symbol of the first proclamation of the gospel (which is yet unfinished and under which the 144,000 are sealed) is an "Angel ascending from the sun's rising, having the seal of the living God."—Rev. vii. 2. These sealed ones are "redeemed from the earth;" i. e., Having been "called according to a purpose" and sealed with the "Holy Spirit"—"The Spirit of sonship"—they are children of God, and joint heirs with Christ; hence, they cannot die, for they are to bear the image of the heavenly, and are to be made pillars in the "Temple of God and go no more out;"—Rev. iii. 12; therefore they must be redeemed from the power of the "second death," i. e., "redeemed from the earth."

The Pope's Infallibility.

We copy the following from the "Journal of Commerce" of this city, of Thursday, Feb. 17th. It cannot fail to interest our readers. "Infallible" men are likely to come to grief among all sects and parties. The Lord hasten their overthrow.

SOME FRENCH VIEWS OF THE ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.

Paris, Jan. 25, 1870.

At a time when the Roman Council is so much talked about, and so little seems able to be learnt respecting it, even at Rome itself, it may not be uninteresting to your readers to hear some utterances on the subject that have been put forth among us here. I shall therefore make no apology for speaking of a religious, or rather perhaps I should call it a theological incident, which has created almost as great a sensation in French ecclesiastical, as the untoward event at Auteuil did lately in political circles. You have so recently had the Pere Hyacinthe among you in America, and he met with so cordial a reception, that I presume you will feel desirous of learning of any further outburst of clerical feeling which has taken place in the same direction. We have just had an example that Father Hyacinthe is not the enfant terrible whom the extavagant pretensions of the Ultramontane party have raised up within the bosom of their own church. A "Letter to the Archbishop of Mechlin," in Belgium, has just been published by the Pere Gratry, which gives even a greater "wigging" to the Papal party at Rome than your own townsman, Bishop Cleveland Coxe, of Western New York, recently administered to Pope Pius IX. himself. You will naturally ask who the Pere Gratry is. He is a priest of the oratory, a professor of theology at the Sorbonne, a member of the French Academy, a doctor theologian, preacher and writer of the first rank.

What is also significant, perhaps, is the fact that he has frequently been chosen to preach a series of sermons at the chapel of the Tuileries, and is understood to have given great satisfaction then to his "imperial" audience. Well, the Pere Gratry has not exactly thrown his cowl and his sandals in the Pope's face, like Pere Hyacinthe, because, though a priest, he is not a monk, and has not therefore either cowl or sandals to throw. But he has thrown such a defiance against, and such a shower of vituperative epithets and abuse upon, the entire Papal party at the Vatican, that he is certainly quite right to have made up his mind beforehand, as he expresses himself in fact to have done at the end of his letter—to be "ready to suffer whatever he may be called upon to suffer," for such an act of courage and independence. And in truth I have rarely seen a stronger illustration of the "tantæne onimis cœlestibus iræ" than is afforded by the earnest and irate pen of the learned French Oratorian. Mercy on us, how he does belabor his opponents! Knaves, fools, forgers, liars; falsification, interpolation, fraud, craft, deceit and guile—such are the qualifications, epithets and qualities he bestows on them and their doings with unbounded liberality. His "letter," which is only a first instalment, and promises more to come in the same style hereafter was published in the Gazette de France, an old fashioned Gallican organ of very limited circulation. But so great were the curiosity and interest excited by this article, that the day after it appeared not a copy of the Gazette was to be had for love or money, and I encountered the greatest difficulty in getting hold of a number of the journal. The letter is far too long for me to do more than to give you a general idea of the spirit and tone of its contents.

The leading object of it is to show that Pope Honorius was condemned for heresy by three councils and ever so many popes, and that therefore a pope cannot be pronounced infallible and incapable of falling into error as such. He begins by telling the Archbishop of Mechlin, who holds the contrary opinion, that the reason he does so, is, that he, like St. Thomas Aquinas and others before him, has been "cheated by false documents." "I mean," he says, "by falsifications properly so called." "I speak," he adds, "of fraudulent interpolations and mutilations introduced into the plainest and most respected texts and authorities by writers and theologians of bad faith." "You have been deceived, monseigneur, by lies properly so called, and by forgeries knowingly and willfully practiced." This is the way the Pere Gratry begins, and then he proceeds to show in detail how the "school" in question, the Papal or ultramontane party that is, carried on their machinations. But first he just finishes off "Monseigneur Manning," as he calls him, the English Roman Catholic primate and Archbishop of Westminster, by telling him that he stands simply excommunicated ipso facto, as a heretic himself for having recently published that the letters of Honorius, condemned as heretical by the Sixth Council, were, on the contrary, correct and orthodox. By a fine piece of satire, too, the Father tells the English archbishop that he falls precisely under that species of excommunication called latæ sententiæ, that is, which is real though not openly declared, and which is pronounced against such cases as his own "by Pius IX. in his late Bull, Article I.,' to which the learned father refers him! This is certainly a fine stroke of irony to make Dr. Manning fall under the sentence of excommunication at the hands of the very Pope of whose infallibility he is the acknowledged and chosen champion.

It would tax the patience of your ordinary readers too much for me to attempt to follow the Pere Gratry through all his exposures of the "long tradition of lies and fraud" of which he accuses his adversaries, and to whom he applies the "divine and terrible" words of Job to his false friends: "Has God need of your lies? And does he stand in need of your craftinesses for his service?" But just to give an example or two: All the Roman breviaries, down to 1520, contained the name of Pope Honorius as having been anathematized and declared a heretic by the Church. "I have searched the breviaries of all the libraries of Paris," writes the Pere Gratry, "and they all declare the same thing." But when he opens the existing breviary, what does he find? The name of Honorius has disappeared, has been simply left out! "The scribe who was entrusted with the last 'reform' of the Roman breviary has simply mutilated the passages," because, as he adds, "this well-authenticated condemnation of a pope for heresy was the unassailable obstacle to the definition of the new dogma of infallibility." He then shows numerous instances of "lies, forgeries and fabricated authorities" fraudulently introduced into the same breviary on purpose to uphold the doctrine in question. But instead of quoting them, I will just cite what the Pere Gratry tells us of his own experiences, and as having happened to himself in recent times, with reference to such doings and opinions. We all know the story of the condemnation of Galileo, which has often been asserted by Catholic writers to be only a piece of Protestant scandal. But what says the Pere Gratry on the subject? "An Italian bishop" he writes, "made to me to myself in person, the following declaration respecting the condemnation of Galileo: 'Yes without doubt,' he said, 'Galileo was right, and his judges knew he was right: but in those days that too dangerous truth would have scandalized the faithful. This is why the Church condemned him, and it did rightly.' These very words were said to myself." And again the Pere Gratry asks indignantly "Has God need of your lies?" "and did the Word of God stand in need of such a monstrous piece of knavery practiced in a solemn judgment?" There is a great deal more of the same sort, but the details are too long to quote. Never, he says, was there a "history of more audacious knavery, or a more insolent suppression of the most important facts." He sums up the character of the Roman breviary by describing it as a "long series of frauds, terminating in a last and solemn lie!" The "systematic falsification" of the Roman breviary alone, he says, ought to prevent the proclamation of the new dogma or anything of so suspicious a character, "seeing that it is so closely allied to lying!" And it is a learned Catholic priest and theologian who thus speaks and writes and publishes upon his own Church's prayer-book! One can but hold up one's hands in amazement, and be thankful that there can at least be no room for the charge of any "Protestant scandal" here. "Out of thine own mouth will I condemn thee," says the Scripture; and surely the text is well illustrated by the above strange and startling exposure.

I must leave other topics to a future occasion; but I think your readers will not be sorry to learn the bent which theological feeling is taking in high quarters in this country at a great religious crisis like the present.

Children's Department.

Good and Bad Apples.

One day Robert's father saw him playing with some boys who were rude and unmannerly. He had observed for some time a change for the worse in his son; and now he knew the cause. He was very sorry; but he said nothing to Robert at the time.

In the evening he brought from the garden six beautiful rosy-cheeked apples, put them on a plate and presented them to Robert. He was much pleased at his father's kindness, and thanked him. "You must lay them aside for a few days, that they may become mellow," said the father; and Robert cheerfully placed the plate with the apples in his mother's store-room.

Just as he was putting them aside, his father laid on the plate a seventh apple, which was quite rotten, and desired him to allow it to remain there.

"But, father," said Robert, "the rotten apple will spoil all the others."

"Do you think so? Why should not the fresh apples rather make the rotten one fresh?" said his father. And with these words he shut the door of the room.

Eight days afterward, he asked his son to open the door, and take out the apples. But what a sight presented itself! The six apples, which had been so sound and rosy-cheeked, were now quite rotten, and spread a bad smell through the room.

"O papa!" cried he, "did I not tell you that the rotten apple would spoil the good ones? yet you did not listen to me."

"My boy," said the father, "have I not told you often that the company of bad children will make you bad? Yet you do not listen to me. See in the condition of the apples that which will happen to you if you keep company with wicked boys."

Robert did not forget the lesson. When any of his former playfellows asked him to join in their sports, he thought of the rotten apples, and kept himself apart from them.

The Evening Lesson.

"Brush up the stove hearth, Jenny," said Mrs. Goodwin, "and wipe up the zinc nicely. Take all those clean clothes, wet and dry, and lay them in the basket, and make the room look as cheerful as you can, before father and the boys get home."

"Well, mother," said Jenny, a little discontentedly, "I don't know that it is any worse for them to have a little discomfort once in a while in doors, than it is for us to have so much trouble all the time. They have no idea how hard it is to get up clean clothes for them every week, nor how much discomfort we have to put up with."

"Neither do we know how hard it is to work all day in the fields to get food for us all at home. But you are tired to-night my dear, and you never can feel very happy with your hair in such disorder. Run right away and bathe your face, and brush up a little, and you will find your spirits are wonderfully enlivened."

Jenny went away with a reluctant step, to do as she was bid; but after a while she came down again, looking fifty per cent., at least, better than she did before. Her hair was brushed back smoothly from her rosy sun-kissed cheeks, and her plain calico dress and gingham apron looked better than many an elegant ball-room costume. She did not need to be told now to make the room as tidy as possible; she stepped about lightly here and there putting to rights one little nook and another—drew father's arm-chair up to the sun-set window where he loved best to sit; and saw that the lounge was cleared of all incumbrances, so that Ned might throw himself down and rest after his favorite fashion.

"I knew that it would rest you, if you put yourself in better trim," said mother, "even though you were tired. I need not ask you if you do not feel better; your looks tell very plainly. It always pays to be neat and orderly. It is worth more than a great sum of money to have home the pleasantest spot in the world to fathers and brothers. It never would be, if we adopted Mrs. Halsey's plan."

"No, indeed, mother, I cannot even bear to go there on an errand. I do not see how her family can endure to live in a home so constantly 'in the suds.' She never dresses up herself unless she goes to a funeral; and her children are little frights, with thin outgrown soiled dresses on, half the summer. I used to pity them when they went to school."

"Well, Jenny, every time we permit an untidy room that could be put to rights as well as left, or allow supper-time to find us with a soiled work-dress on, when we might put on a clean one, we take a step in that direction. Untidy people do not become so all at once; but bad habits grow faster than cucumbers. You cannot hold them in check, unless you fairly root them out. All the little delicacies and refinements of life that we cultivate are good for the heart as well as the body. They make us more gentle and thoughtful of the comfort of others, and help us form nobler and more beautiful characters, and that is our great life work here, my daughter—the formation of right characters. Nothing is trifling which bears upon this great work."

As a rose after a shower, bent down by tear-drops, waits for a passing breeze or a kindly hand to shake its branches, that lightened, it may stand once more upon its stem, so one who is bowed down with afflictions, longs for a friend to lift him out of his sorrows and bid him once more to rejoice. Happy is the man who has that in his soul, which acts upon the dejected like April airs upon violet roots.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price. 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A RICH PARENTHESIS.

IN the opening of his first epistle, the mind of the apostle John is burdened with a great thought which human language is unable fully to express. Yet, as he knows its immense value to the whole body of divine truth, as a sun in a planetary system, essential to its very existence, he is anxious so to present it that no one may mistake his meaning. The human mind may not comprehend its breadth, and length, and depth, and height, yet it may be correctly realized as far as the mind is able. We may see that it means something of transcendent importance, though all that it means we may not grasp now, nor perhaps in the ages to come. Accordingly, he arrests attention by an emphatic assurance, as an honest and truthful witness, that he had heard, seen, steadily looked upon, and touched the Word of Life; and then before he proceeds with his letter, pens this grand parenthesis: "For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us."

Is there any thing in the Bible more striking and important than that? There is apparent repetition in John's introductory words, but it is language trembling under the weight of its burden; it is the loving heart lingering on a theme of surpassing interest; it is the facets of a great brilliant throwing light in every direction; and the strength of the revelation is condensed in the parenthesis. We do not care to vindicate the apostle from the charge of tautology, which those who know more of philology than theology bring against him. Loved truths hang upon the lips like fragrance on the rose, and John's aim was not elegance of diction—though he is often elegant even to sublimity—but exactness in doctrine, that we might know the love which God has to us, and return our tribute of filial adoration.

The apostle sees around him a world of mortals: the failure of the first man was of course the failure of all men to rise above the state of mortality; the possible prize of Eden has been lost; and corruption, sin, and death are co-extensive with the human race. Yet there is no tone of disappointment in his words, as if man's highest conception, that of immortality, were altogether a delusion. No, so far from that, his heart is bounding at the very thought, and he says, "I write this unto you that your joy may be full." The possibility of immortality is not a mistake, only you are to look for it far above and beyond the human race; not in Eden but in heaven; not in man but in Christ; for "the Eternal Life was with the Father," away back, far, far back, long before months and years began to be, or the measuring line of time was put into the hands of mortals. But the period determined by perfect wisdom has come, the fulness of time for the incarnation of the Logos; and the Eternal Life which was with the Father has been manifested unto us. The Word, the Life, the Eternal Life, has come from the Father to give sonship and life everlasting to so many as receive him; and we declare this unto you that ye also may have fellowship, communion, participation with us in this divine and permanent life; and truly our fellowship—I speak of myself and my brethren who are in Christ—is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.

This paraphrase of the apostle's great testimony is not submitted to our readers as either perfect or exhaustive, but we believe it is accurate so far as it goes; that is to say, it fairly sketches the outline of this Scripture, and of all other Scriptures that speak on the subject—immortality only in Jesus Christ. Man has no natural immortality stretching out into eternity, but he who was in the beginning with God comes down to men to give the superhuman boon to all who "believe on him to life everlasting." The inspired witness-bearer, the beloved John, who knew his Lord and the sublime object of his Lord's incarnation as fully as ever man was privileged to know them, needs no corroborative testimony; yet the doctrine is of such paramount importance, sheds such light on the entire revelation of God, exhibits so fully the true import of the terms regeneration, redemption, atonement, salvation, perish, life, death, justified, sanctified, and the like; and unfolds so delightfully the character of our heavenly Father and kinsman Redeemer, that we shall transcribe a few passages for the reader, in the full belief that he will regard them not as the words of men but, as they are in truth, the words of the living God, meaning strictly and literally what they say.

"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life; for God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John iii. 14–16.

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."—Chap. x. 27, 28.

"Father, the hour is come. Glorify thy Son, that thy son also may glorify thee; as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—Chap. xvii. 1–3.

"I am come that they might have life."—Chap. x. 10.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life."—Chap. v. 24.

"This is the Father's will who hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one who seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."—Chap. vi. 39, 40, 47.

"To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality (God will render) eternal life."—Rom. ii. 7.

"That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."—Chap. v. 21.

"What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Chap. vi. 21–23.

"He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. vi. 8.

"Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long suffering, for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting."—1 Tim. i. 16.

"Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses."—Chap. vi. 12.

"In hope of eternal life which God that cannot lie promised before the world began."—Titus i. 2.

"That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life."—Chap. iii. 7.

"This is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life."—1 John ii. 25.

"And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. These things have I written unto you that believe in the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God. We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life."—Chap. v. 11–13, 20.

"Your life is hid with Christ in God. Christ our life."—Col. iii. 3, 4.

"Because I live, ye shall live also."—John xiv. 19.

Why all this—and the Bible has a hundred times more than this on the subject—if it be not the purpose of the Spirit to impress upon men that there is no such thing as immortality except in God's beloved Son, and that the gift of "eternal life" to believers in him is a most marvellous honor? We, any of us, live FOREVER? By our philosophical, poetical, and pagan "immortality of the soul" we have simply talked ourselves blind. Surely, to live forever can only be predicated of God, or of one to whom God communicates of his own life. Now this is strictly true. It is really the case that in the new creation in Christ Jesus, we are made partakers of his life; the "divine nature is imparted; we are "born from above," "born of God," "born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." It was to put away sin, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to make us children of God, and to give us this wonderful, divine, deathless life, that the Son of God, the Eternal Life, was manifested among us. Look again at the beginning of John's letter. What is this? "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." Surely there is something here to correct our vain conceptions of man, and to exalt our ideas of God's infinite love. So far from individual independent immortality being an attribute of man as such, it is not even an attribute of the saved. What! not even Christians partakers of independent immortality? No; their life as God's sons who shall live forever, is a matter of fellowship with the Father and the Son; that is to say, they participate this divine and eternal life in common with the Father and the Son. This is the wonderful and glorious doctrine of the New Testament on this subject; they are one body of which the life is Christ. It is Christ's life in them, by the Holy Spirit, not their own, that gives them immortality. "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." That is the language which each of them must use if he would speak scripturally on this great subject. Christ came to give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him, but this life is not a grant so given as that each who receives it can henceforth live separate from, and independently of, Christ the giver. The eternal life-spring is in him; out of that they are constantly sustained; because he lives they live; they are one body in him, and they enjoy the certain prospect of immortality; because He, their "life," is the glorious Son of God who, with the Father, only hath immortality.

One word more. We have throughout this article used the term "immortality" as the equivalent of eternal life, or deathlessness; but the Greek word is incorruption—incorruptibility always carrying the idea of perfect purity in resurrection-life; a sinful immortality being an absurdity and impossibility utterly unknown to the word of God. If, therefore, it be heterodox to deny the evil, we accept the epithet with all its consequences, as we prefer truth to orthodoxy, and the teaching of the Holy Spirit to that of modern theology.—The Rainbow.

WHERE ARE WE?

BY N. H. BARBOUR.

WE believe "the time of the end" to be a period of 75 years, during which time the prophecies were to end; and that most of the prophetic periods did so end, as then understood, in 1843. That our disappointment was the result of misapprehension of events, and not from a mistaken view of prophecy.

There are about twenty different prophetic and typical periods which end during "the time of the end;" only one of which carries us to the end itself, viz: "The thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Every one of the other periods have something to transpire after they terminate. Thus, after the 1,290 days there is a waiting time. "Blessed is he that waiteth," etc. After the 2,300 days, "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." After the "times of the Gentiles," there was a cry to be made (Isai. xl. 1, 2,) "Comfort ye my people, and cry unto her (Jerusalem) that her appointed time is accomplished."—Margin. The burden of that cry in 1843 was, "The time is accomplished."

The jubilee trump was sounded in 1843, calling on the people of God to prepare for the restitution of all things. Under the law it was blown on the tenth day of the seventh month of the year which preceded the jubilee. We heard the glorious call, and thought we were going to take possession of our inheritance even while the trump was yet sounding, regardless of the tarrying time.

My dear friends, do we not all believe "the virgins went forth" at that call?

"Oh fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." Did not our Lord tell us, plainly, there should be a dark and trying time after that "going forth?" "And while the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." If you make a feast and say that they all eat and drank, who would question the fact, or say that only half of them eat, and the others drank? It does not mean that we have been sleeping to other truths. I thank God for the many rich and glorious truths which we have seen since 1843. That parable referred to the time. "Then the kingdom of heaven was likened to virgins who went forth to meet the bridegroom." And was not the very soul of that movement definite time? And it is in that particular we have all slept, if our Lord meant what he said.

Everything is coming out just as it was laid down. The whole movement, from first to last, is one great unit. And when the cry is made, "all those virgins will arise and trim their lamps."

But you will say, "There have been several cries" already; and if they were only the restless yearning of the heart during this long night of sleep, and another cry is made, how shall we know but what that may also be a dream?

This is a fair question, and if it cannot be answered in a perfectly satisfactory manner, I will, with sorrow, admit that all my arguments must fall to the ground.

A builder has nearly completed a beautiful structure; every joint is fitted with remarkable accuracy. The foundation is fixed so deep and solid that the fiercest war of the elements cannot shake it. He retires to rest, and in his dreams sets himself to pulling down the beautiful edifice, and with the debris builds fantastic houses; which he again and again throws down, for material wherewith to continue his work. By and by the morning streaks the eastern sky: he wakes and resumes his labor where he had left off the day before. Not pulling down, but, with systematic patience, adding stone to stone, until the whole structure is complete in all its parts. Would he not know, would his neighbors not know, that he was "clothed and in his right mind?"

And how is it with this glorious movement in which so many started for the better land? And as they entered the ranks, each one left behind the root of bitterness, schisms, jealousies, and sectarian dogmas; and in their stead took sweet charity, with one heart and one purpose we joined hands, to meet our Lord.

Did sound argument ever overthrow one single position which we then took in relation to the time? Did any man convince us that the 2,300 days, or the seven times of the Gentiles, or the great jubilee, did not end at that time? Never, never. The passing of the time is all that ever did, or could have shaken our confidence. Has the great key of the whole prophecy, the event which ushered in the "time of the end," and thus unsealed the vision, viz: the taking away the dominion of Papacy in 1798, been called in question, or shown to be false?

It was soon restored again, it is true, or how could the remainder of the prophecy have been fulfilled? It was restored that it might be consumed and destroyed, as at this day. Is not its dominion (its political power), consumed and destroyed until even now it is ready to perish? And yet it must last till Jesus comes.

The evidences for 1873 are far greater and more convincing than they were in 1843, simply because we have all that we then had, standing just where they then stood, unshaken, immovable, and yet giving their whole weight of evidence. Those periods do not and could not reach to the end, for there was a tarrying time to follow, that all the jots and tittles might be fulfilled. They simply reached into "the time of the end;" to the point where the virgins were to go forth; after which we were to be in darkness for a season; and then more light, on which to base the second cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

My dear brethren, there is an overwhelming mass of evidence to show that the tarrying time was to be just thirty years. Not simply that the 1,335 days reach to that date, but from many, very many other sources, made up of "jots and tittles, not one of which can in any wise fail."

It is not surprising that Adventists, as a body, have been perfectly unapproachable on the subject of time. How could they be otherwise? If such arguments as we had in 1843, so consistent with themselves, and with our best convictions, so entirely above and beyond the power of human reason to overthrow; if time had indeed proved them worthless, how could we, as honest men and Christians, again venture out on arguments of less, or even equal strength? How could we again trust to the clearest human interpretations of prophetic time? Such has always been my feelings in this matter since 1843, until the present time. But now we see that we were right, and were not mistaken in the prophetic periods, only in a few points which referred to the tarrying, and which were necessary that prophecy might be fulfilled. We had all the light and all the truth on the time which it was possible for us to hold, and yet go forth to meet the bridegroom. Should our faith fail because we have had the pillar of cloud as well as the pillar of fire? Thank God it is even now passing to the rear; and the command is, "Speak unto the people that they go forward."

Our course has been just as it was marked out for us. Our going forth to meet the bridegroom was right, and in fulfilment of prophecy. We have passed the darkness of the tarrying in fulfilment of prophecy, and that is right. And soon the cry will go forth "Behold the bridegroom cometh;" and, blessed be God, that is right, and in fulfilment of prophecy. And how can we waver now?

Brethren, lift your heads a little above the mist, and you will see the old ship, which has so gallantly withstood the storm, with rigging taut and sound and banners floating high. Our Pilot cannot fail us. Never fear; we shall soon enter port. But oh, be careful that your vessels are well filled with oil.

Oh, how my heart yearns over those who are still under the cloud. Up, brothers, and shake the mist from your vision. And you, who are out of Christ, come to-day; eternal life is still offered freely; and although it is the eleventh hour, the wages are life eternal; full pay.

In 1843 I thought my faith was strong; but now it seems almost as though I could lay hold of the portals of the eternal city. And in my heart I can say, Father, it is enough. My vessel is full and running over. Pour out to others.

We have been taught that the "oil" in our lamps was faith. No, no. We may have faith in error. "Thy word is a light to my path." "Thy word is truth." It is the truth that gives light. Buy the truth and sell it not, "for, behold the bridegroom cometh." Some have thought the door must be shut when this second cry is made. If the parable taught that, it must have been since 1843, for, only the five wise ones, who started, go in. Praise God, the door is open wide; and I believe will be, until Jesus comes and shuts it himself.

I am earnestly praying for the way to be made clear to preach these truths, and will gladly avail myself of every opportunity.

Address to care of American Institute, Cooper Union, New York.

Yours, in the blessed hope.

THE SAINTS' SATISFACTION.

WHEN SHALL WE BE SATISFIED?

DAVID responds: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness." John answers: "When He shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." "And whosoever hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as He is pure;" thus recognizing the same desire for purification of heart which can only insure satisfaction. To him who is sleeping in Christ, the consummation will be at the "resurrection of the just"—that resurrection, which was the object of Paul's joyful hopes and intense desires. Instantaneous will be the transformation; "in a moment: in the twinkling of an eye;" "the corruptible will put on incorruption—the mortal, immortality." This indeed will be a victory over death and the grave, that may well call forth joyful acclamations which shall ring through the whole universe. How little can human conception form any idea of the grandeur of miraculous power manifested in this instantaneous act. After the praying, the hoping, the toiling, the fearing, the doubting of a lifetime, to find the sum of all our hopes and expectations realized in the twinkling of an eye!

The satisfaction will be perfect and without the least alloy. They shall rise in His likeness. What more could they ask? And yet are they not promised a partnership with Him in the sovereignty over the world? "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him." "Heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ." In view of our sinfulness and infirmities, it seems almost presumptuous to think such a thing possible. And yet it would be greater presumption to doubt His own words. The condescension of an Almighty Ruler toward the creatures of his own hand is indeed incomprehensible. O, that it would excite the most ardent devotion now, and that it would stimulate to the most thorough consecration of body, soul, and spirit to him!

And yet another element in the satisfaction of these risen, glorified saints will be their union with their transformed brethren in the flesh. Both classes are represented in these texts—those who awake in His likeness—the resurrection saints, and the translated saints, whose assimilation to him shall be accomplished by the sight of his glory and by personal contact with him—not, however, without miraculous interposition. This shall be exerted in both instances.

As it is evident this sweet hope of perfect satisfaction cannot be accomplished until the realization of "that blessed hope" which indeed comprehends the other, should we not earnestly pray for the speedy coming of that day for which all creation groans and sighs? Our selfish unwillingness to bear the burden and heat of the day, and to carry patiently the cross imposed by our Lord, may indeed dispose us to lay our burden down, ere our allotted portion of work, suffering, and waiting is accomplished. But if we are animated by no such selfish principle, but because we desire to see his glory exhibited in the earth and in humanity, and because we so yearn for our own moral and physical renovation, and because we so ardently wish for his sweet companionship that impatient love cannot brook the long delay—then indeed should we hope, and pray, and watch, and earnestly look for that glorious day. We are commanded to "covet earnestly the best gifts;" and to all that the holy Book asserts as our prerogative, we do ourselves an irreparable injury if we do not aspire with all our hearts. But let us so watch and pray that we may be accounted worthy to be in the translation or resurrection. O, Lord, grant us soon that satisfaction! "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Selected.

TALKATIVE persons seldom read. This is among the few truths which appear the more strange the more we reflect upon them. For what is reading but silent conversation?

THE BURNING OF THE WORLD.

REMARKS BY B. MATTHIAS.

I DO not believe in the burning of the world, as some present the subject. I do not, first, Because the doctrine is not found in what Jesus and his apostles call the Scriptures. The nearest approach to the idea is found in Isa. xxiv. 19, 20, "The earth is clean dissolved." This is one of the figures to represent the disaster to the earth, or some portion of it. If you will read chapter xiii. you will find this is spoken of Babylon. But some of the other forms, "The earth is utterly broken down, . . . moved exceedingly, . . . shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be moved like a cottage. . . . It shall fall and not rise again."—Verses 20, 21. Jeremiah nor Ezekiel say any thing that approaches such a calamity to the world. Jeremiah says as much as this, and it is applicable to Judah, "I beheld the earth, and lo! it was without form and void. And the heavens: and they had no light: I beheld the mountains, and lo! they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld and lo! there was no man; and the birds of the heavens were fled."—Jer. iv. 23, 24.

Malachi says, "The day of the Lord shall burn as an oven; and the wicked will be stubble." I think it is not safe to insist upon an extreme interpretation of the burning, except we are prepared to prove that the proud and wicked are literal stubble. And then it is the day that burns; a hot day; a day of severe judgment. Here we are naturally referred to the "tares of the field;" the same is the world, which is the "kingdom."

Our Lord never taught the burning of the world, as we perceive. Well, try the "tares." They are bound and burned. As this is done to tares, so offenders are dealt with. "He shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom" such, and "cast them into the furnace of fire. There shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. So shall it be in the end of the world," not after the end.—Matt. xiii. 40.

But the net and fishes, we think, teaches the same; and none can talk of fire in this case. "So shall it be in the end of the world."—Matt. xiii. 48, 49. When our Lord speaks of his immediate coming, in Matt. xxiv., he does not speak of fire at all. "All the tribes of the earth shall mourn. The powers of the heavens shall be shaken."—Verses 29, 30. In Luke xxi., "On the earth distress of nations with perplexity. The sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear."—Verses 25, 26. Then the friendly caution, "Watch and pray that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things, that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of man. Worthy to escape the burning up? No; but the things that were to come to pass, and they had just been named.

Matthew xxv. contains the phrases everlasting fire, and "everlasting punishment." And it is in the end of the world. This must be the same as the punishment of the tares and of the lake of fire, for these go into the punishment prepared for the devil and his angels. The devil and his angels can be no other than the red dragon, now out of the bottomless pit, called "the scarlet-colored beast," and ten kings. Just as sure as truth, the lake of fire is the same punishment spoken of in the previous instances. It is the receptacle of the tares, the goats, the bad fishes, the bad governments, bad organizations, institutions, and all that do wickedly; "the fearful, the unbelievers, the abominable, and all liars, the devil, and death and hell."

All this is consistent with protracted distresses, vexation, disappointment, despair, and death, wailing and gnashing of teeth. These are not the effects of death by burning. If it is, nobody outside would know it.

We must not overlook a declaration of the Lord in the days of Noah. "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake: for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; neither will I again smite any more every living thing as I have done."—Gen. viii. 21. He made a covenant with the beasts and all creatures; and set his bow in the cloud as a witness. But say you, That is, not by water. What! sorry that he had done this by water, and at the same time intend to use a fiercer agent next time! Men may be wise enough to reconcile these difficulties, but what of the brutes? They are made a party to the covenant. I am sure they would not think roasting alive would be better than drowning.

VALUE no man for his opinion, but esteem him according as his life corresponds with the rules of piety and justice. A man's actions, not his conceptions, render him valuable.

DEATH may remove from us the great and good, but the force of their actions still remains.

A Difficulty.

BY IRA FANCHER.

"Five texts hinder my believing the 'Life Views,' viz: John v. 29; 1 Cor. xv. 22; Isa. xxvi. 19; Dan. xii. 2; Acts xxiv. 15."

So say many that I meet. They say "some of the above texts hinder" them from believing the wicked dead will not be raised to life again, although the word life is not found in any one of them, as applied to the wicked. But still they think it means that.

Now, 1st. Let us try John v. 29. That says of the good, they shall be raised to life. Not so with those that have done evil; but they are to the resurrection of damnation; which we all admit is eternal death.

2d. 1 Cor. xv. 22. For as in Adam all die (or, as I believe), all that die in Adam, lay dead to all eternity; or, as one of the prophets has it, "sleep a perpetual sleep and not awake," even so in Christ shall all be made alive or, all that die in Christ, or in the Lord, as we read in Rev. xiv., are blessed from henceforth, or from the time we read "the hour of his judgment is come," in the same chapter.

3d. Isa. xxvi. 19. No difficulty here; all is plain. It merely teaches that God's dead men shall live again, or be resurrected to life; for their reward is eternal life, as says Jesus, "In the resurrection they are equal to the angels, neither can they die any more." That is just as long as I want to live. None of the wicked are God's dead men, for they die in Adam. And still more; if all are raised, then all are in the resurrection and "equal to the angels; neither can they die any more;" and so universal salvation is true from this stand-point.

4th. Dan. xii. 2, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Now, every one knows that many out of a multitude don't mean all; and then, after all, the antediluvians, except eight, were drowned; the cities of the plains destroyed; those terrible battles fought in the Old Tertament, and when God's armies failed, He threw great stones down out of heaven and dashed them to pieces; and He sent out one angel and killed 185,000 in one night; then the prophet says, after this takes place, Isa. xxvi. 14, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." Amen. "Therefore thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Many say, "Well, we don't think all those that died back there, just as God said they should;" and as a spiritualist lady told me the other day, she did not believe in the God of the Old Testament, for he was so cruel. But the God of the New Testament, I showed her, has declared that those that will not have Christ to reign over them shall be brought before him and slain or killed; and no one contends that they will be raised to life and killed over again.

5th. Acts xxiv. 15. Paul in this case merely says that his accusers, that were so bitter against him, because he preached Jesus and the resurrection, confessed that they believed in a resurrection of the just and unjust; not that he believed the unjust would be raised to life; for he tells us, in 1 Cor. xv., that, "it is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. For the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible." Now, if the Apostle meant just and unjust, then universal salvation is true. But I can say with Paul, I want to attain to a resurrection out from among the dead ones, if I have to die. But if alive, and found loving his appearance at that day, it will be good enough. Glory to God in the highest. Brethren and sisters, let us be ready and waiting, is my daily prayer. Amen.

From Almira West.

Br. Storrs: I have waited week after week, hoping that I should have the money to send you for the Herald; but I have not been able to get it, and cannot tell certainly when I shall; yet trust it will not be long. I surely feel a great desire to do much more for the cause than I have ever done, but I have not the means, and therefore I am deprived of a great pleasure. I do not know but you will think that I am losing my interest in this great cause by doing so little and keeping so silent, but I can assure you that I am more firm in the doctrine of No Life out of Christ, to-day, than I have ever been.

I am very sorry that there is no preacher of our faith in this part of the State. It seems to me that we are left to grope in darkness. I am thankful that I have seen a way of light, though I did not first see it here; and I desire to let my light shine that others may see the light as it is in Christ. I have sought opportunity to speak of Christ as the only hope of Life from the dead; and I am satisfied that many are almost persuaded to believe. I earnestly hope some one will come this way and proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus.

I shall not think strange, nor be offended if my paper ceases to come after this, as I cannot yet pay for it. However, I shall miss it so much. But it will be just and right.

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 28, 1870.

Caleb Thompson, Providence, R. I., writes: The Life views are gaining ground with us. The great truth of "No Life out of Christ" will prevail. Its enemies are bitter, but truth is mighty. If men will reason and allow the Bible to be the guide, all opposition will be conquered; so let us put on courage, and humbly proclaim the truth.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 9, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Responsibility.

Enough perhaps is said in the standing head of this paper on the subject. Yet, as some seem not to understand it, we may add a few remarks.

The "Life and Advent Union" was formed as a Business Association. It was never intended to be a "church" in the sense in which that term is used. Its object and the conditions of membership, are stated in the first two articles of its Constitution as follows:

Article I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

The object is further stated, weekly in the "motto" of the paper, and in a note at the left hand of the head.

The "Union" is responsible for no sentiments which appear in the paper other than those in the above "Articles," and its "motto and note," whether by correspondents or its Editor. It indulges correspondents in a large liberty of expression though differing from the general views of the "Union," leaving readers to judge as to the value or correctness of sentiments advanced.

The "Union" appoints its Editor and surrounds him with a "Board of Directors" as Counselors, whose advice is of great importance in conducting the paper; and they are, as they should be, mostly residents of New York, because thus they are at hand for consultation.

It is true, that only on special occasions when doubts arise in the Editor's mind of the utility of communications sent for insertion, does he trouble the Directors by asking advice; but when it is asked and received, the Editor always follows it.

Various articles are admitted into our columns containing sentiments which should not be attributed to the Union, the Editor, or the Directors, as if held by them, or being approved by them; but we all wish to be as liberal as possible to those of differing sentiments, believing our readers generally are intelligent enough to discern between truth and error; nor do we think of responding to every sentiment that does not meet our approval, believing it better to let it pass without provoking further controversy.

From these statements it is not to be inferred that we publish every communication sent us, or that we exclude nothing that may be found in those we do publish. We use the best judgment we have in all these matters; and our correspondents generally seem satisfied with this course, and we are quite sure it has saved a vast amount of useless labor and expense.

The Sunday Magazine for March is received. Interesting both in appearance and matter as usual. A first class magazine. If we do not agree with every sentiment it contains, we admire the ability with which it is conducted. The contents for this month are as follows:

The Struggle in Ferrara; On the Miracles of our Lord; Wm. Burns, the Missionary to China; Sunday on a Remote Colonial Farm; The Golden Mice and Emrods; Three French Hymns; How to Study the Old Testament; A Thanksgiving for Life and Health; Episodes in an Obscure Life; The Portrait of Charity; Footprints of the Apostles; The companions of St. Paul, and Supplement—Notes for readers out of the Way.—Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

From the same publishers we have received the March No. of Good Words. We have not been able to examine the matter of it, but its mechanical appearance is attractive, and its contents seem interesting with some very fine engravings.

Good Health for March is received. It is a journal of Physical and Mental Culture. A fine Magazine for the object. The publisher says:

The success which has attended the publication of "Good Health," and placed it permanently among the Current Literature of the day, has made it necessary to remove the office of publication, as also our Book-selling and Publishing Business, to No. 11, Bromfield St. Boston, [Mass.], where, in future, all communications should be addressed.

Alexander Moore.

The Resurrection: or A Bible Contrast; Demonstrating that only the Righteous shall have a Future Life.

This is a tract of 24 pages, by J. S. Potter, East Boston, Mass. It is worthy of a serious perusal, and is calculated to open the eyes of candid readers. There are, unfortunately a few typographical errors, the principal of which is on page 8, where for "Genesis," read Gesenius.—Address the Author, 67 Bennington St., East Boston, Mass.

We have received the March number. It seems to be an interesting periodical; but we have not time to examine it closely. Terms: Yearly, $1. Single copy, 10 cents.

Immortality: D. A. Wheden, D.D.

We made some remarks last week on Dr. Wheden's performance in "The Christian Advocate" on the Immortality question. We trust it may not have been in vain on him or others. Let us look at his statements still further. On the text, "God only hath immortality," Dr. Wheden says:

> As implying an independent, underived immortality, it is true that God only has it. Ours is derived, but it is inherent also. However it comes, it comes to us not as individuals, but as a race, and as a property of humanity, if it comes at all. It comes through Christ, indeed, but because the race itself was continued through him after Adam's trangression. The race, with all its characteristics, was to be continued in a new probation, and the probation was not for an eternal existence but for an eternal glory. This gospel of "life and immortality," or of an immortal heavenly life, was brought to light out of the uncovered counsels of eternity and preached at once to Adam in Paradise.

Here is a mixture of truth and error. The first sentence in this extract is an unquestioned truth. In the next sentence he admits our immortality "is derived," but says, "it is inherent also;" i. e., it is "inborn," or "naturally pertaining to us." If naturally pertaining to us, or inborn, it cannot of course be lost—it is proof against omnipotence itself; no power can deprive us of it. And as no power can deprive us of it, so no power can cause us to suffer, because suffering is an encroachment on the life principle, and if continued, unarrested, inevitably would result in the total destruction of the life principle. As immortality makes impossible such a destruction, so it makes suffering impossible; and hence the orthodox hell is an impossibility; and as Dr Wheden says, inherent immortality "comes to us as a race, and comes to all," "eternal glory," just as certainly "comes to the race, and comes to all;" because immortality cannot suffer, and must therefore inevitably make its possessor uninterruptedly happy, by removing not only all suffering, but all fear of the possibility of suffering. Thus we are Doctored into Universal salvation.

The Doctor tells us that immortality "comes through Christ, indeed, but because the race itself was continued through him after Adam's transgression." So the race is now immortal because the continuance of it was through Christ. Be it so, if you will have it, Doctor; but then you only make universal salvation the more certain, because the immortality is now of grace, and not merely by creation. The "eternal existence" of any man was not dependent on his being good or bad: that existence was secured beyond a possibility of failure, as our friend would have us believe: man was on "probation for an eternal glory," he tells us. But Paul tells us that men are on probation for "honor, glory, and immortality."—Rom. ii. 7. But Paul was not a "D. D.," and was foolish enough to warn us to "beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."—Col. ii. 8. If inherent immortality is proved to be the possession "of the race" it must be done by "the rudiments of the world and the traditions of men:" that is the grand appeal of our friend, as we showed last week; and how well we succeeded, let others judge.

Saith Dr. Wheden, "This gospel of 'life and immortality,' or of an immortal heavenly life, was brought to light out of the uncovered counsels of eternity, and preached at once to Adam in Paradise." But who preached it there, he saith not. If he had quoted "Thou shalt not surely die," his proof would have been perfect by adding, "Ye shall be as Gods." We think he could find nowhere in the Bible such a perfect and comprehensive testimony in favor of "inherent immortality;" and we think that is the seed and root of the doctrine. It is so beyond a doubt in our mind.

Christ and his apostles taught life and immortality as conditional, depending on individual conduct—"To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor and immortality," said Paul, "God will render eternal life."—Rom. ii. 6, 7. Our Lord Jesus taught that, "This is the will of Him who sent me, that every one who seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 40. And Paul saith, "at the last trump"—of course at the last day—"the dead shall be raised incorruptible." He adds, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. xv. 52, 53.

Here is a problem for the Doctors to solve. Something puts on immortality at the resurrection, at the last day. What is it? Paul says, that which puts it on was previously mortal. He does not recognize any part of man as previously immortal: a strange omission, if modern theology is true. According to that view, it is not the soul that puts on immortality; for that was never any thing else but immortal. The soul then did not put on the body again, as some theologians maintain, because that which puts on immortality was prior to this time mortal; and that which is "raised up at the last day" was the "him" that "believeth in Jesus," according to our Lord's words in John vi. 40. Turn which way the Doctors will, the sword of truth hews their Agags in pieces.

> God certainly created man at first to live forever. With this view he made him in his own image—a little lower than the angels, and yet in his own image. If one look into a mirror he will see his image, a representation or resemblance of himself. God's image cannot be physical and visible, for he is without body or form. He therefore gave man such a body as pleased him. But the inner man, the spiritual man, "the image of God," is modeled after his nature.

That "God at first created man to live forever," may be admitted in a qualified sense; that is, He made man so to live conditionally, or if man developed himself in harmony with his Maker; but that life was not inherent in man, else the tree of life would not have been needed. Beside, the threatening of death, in case of disobedience, would have been a deception, if man was created so that he could not die. But we shall see presently where our Doctor's theory leads. In his remarks he repudiates the idea that the image of God, in which man was created, was "physical and visible;" the reason he assigns, is "God is without body or form."

Thus he sweeps away the theological idea that "Christ is God," for He had both body and form. But we shall enter into no controversy on the "Trinity" question with him; we wished only to call attention to the fact that our opposers have to lay their own theology in ruins, to get at ours.

"The image," the Doctor tells us, was "the inner man, the spiritual man." Unfortunately for his "tradition," it flatly contradicts Paul, who learned his doctrine by direct revelation; for saith he, "I neither learned it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."—Gal. i. 12. Thus taught and instructed, he doubtless was as likely to know what constituted man's nature and attributes, as any one in modern times, whatever titles they may wear.

Let us ask Paul, Had man a "spiritual" nature at his creation? Thus he answers—"That was not first which was spiritual, but that which was natural:" (psuchikon, animal). "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. xv. 45, 46. Thus Paul flatly opposes the theology of Dr. Whedon. The spiritual man is the second Adam; and a spiritual nature is not by creation, but by a re-creation in Christ Jesus; and "if any man be in Christ he is a new creature;" or, a new creation.—2 Cor. v. 17. Why? Because he becomes a "partaker of the Divine nature."—2 Pet. i. 4. It is then, and not till then, that he has the "inner man;" in embryo at first, but if fed and nourished it will increase and grow stronger "day by day."—2 Cor. iv. 16. We will not enlarge here as we might, showing the utterly baseless assumption of the idea that man inherently has a spiritual element in his nature. God was careful at the outset, to guard against such a calamity as a spiritual being inflicting on himself a state of perpetual alienation from himself.

We admit "the spiritual man . . . is modeled after God's nature:" but we do not admit that any such nature existed in man by creation or natural birth; and we think we have sufficiently shown in this matter that modern orthodoxy is utterly at war with the Word, and is a fruitful source of error and pride.

Dr. Whedon goes on to say:

> Every attribute of the Almighty possible to a being that derives its existence from another, was in some measure given to man. Power, wisdom, knowledge, goodness were his, and being too. We cannot conceive of power, wisdom, or goodness, given to the image of God, as transient or intermittent, nor can we of being. If not transient or intermittent this being becomes immortality. This, then, was an original characteristic of the race, to belong to every member of it.

Thus, with a few strokes of his pen, our friend plunges headlong into universal salvation, and denies the existence of sin. "Goodness" is one of the "attributes of the Almighty" that "was given to man" by creation; and none of the attributes of God "given to the image of God," (meaning man by his creation) "are transient or intermittent;" that is, they cannot go and come by fits, or be lost; but must and will abide forever. Thus, as "goodness" is one of these attributes of God bestowed on man at his creation, it was impossible for him to lose it; and it is all a deception to talk about sin, because sin is the opposite of goodness, and that cannot "intermit" or be "transient."

If our friend has not proved inherent immortality in man, he has proved, if his logic is not worthless, that sin is an impossibility; and all the talk about sin and sinners, found in the Bible and in theology, is an "amusing fable," as Archbishop Whately said the heathen regarded the teaching of immortality among themselves to be. It may be talked of to keep the ignorant and "vulgar in awe," by the wise ones, but it is no such thing in fact.

It is a righteous thing that God has so ordered that error shall die of its own sting. "Man is inherently immortal," says the Doctor. "He was created with the attributes of God, in some measure," he adds. "They are neither transient nor intermittent," he affirms. "Goodness is one of these attributes," he tells us. Do we need any stronger logic to prove sin an impossibility? and that there is no such thing as sin on earth?

Thus do they make "the commandments of God of none effect by their traditions" of inherent immortality, and of a natural Spiritual nature in man which makes him deathless. Universalists should thank you, and Spiritualists give you glory in all their assemblies.

Queries.

Much has been written in the Herald of late on the subject of church organizations, and I have been noting the pros and cons with interest, as I have long been unable to recognize any existing denomination as the church of Christ. I perfectly agree with yourself that an authority other than we now possess is required before the church on an apostolic basis can be established and organized; but I would like to know, if you please, what your opinion is in regard to this authority—does it not lead us further? "How can you preach except you be sent?"

I have long thought that we need this authority to preach, worship and attend to the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. Explanation from you will be thankfully received by your loving friend and seeker after truth.

William Sunter.

Response by the Editor.

We are not disposed, at this time, to enter upon a protracted statement of our views on the topics embraced in the above inquiries. We remark, briefly, The old organizations will undoubtedly stand till the Lord's return, worthless and mischievous as they are; but let not the professed believers in the Advent nigh be guilty of adding to their number, which is only to make a further division of "the body of Christ," and thereby increase the sins already committed by the promoters and abettors of these organizations. They doubtless think to do God service; but it is too often evident that self-agrandizement has more to do in this work than a concern for truth or purity. If the Lord wants preachers, He knows where to find them, and how to "send" them. Man-made and man-sent preachers very generally show they have no higher commission, and go out for party purposes. The whole body of Christ are a Royal priesthood, and the Bible contains the only authoritative creed. By this the Body is to be guided, and this is the grand Preacher which they should send forth to preach. Let the Bible preach; and truly, "How can it preach except it be sent?" The Apostle adds, "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. x. 17. It is the word of God, and not the speculations of men, that is the saving instrument to lead men to Christ and life eternal. The freer that Word can be sent out to do its preaching, the more likely it is to accomplish that for which God has appointed it. He has pledged himself saying, "So shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth; it shall not return void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper whereto I sent it."—Isa. lv. 11.

The great trouble of these days is, multitudes, claiming to be sent to preach the gospel, act (we say not designedly, but in fact) like those anciently, of whom the Saviour said, "Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."—Matt. xxiii. 13. They burden the Gospel with the traditions of men, and impose rites and ceremonies upon men which are only necessary to keep up party lines and divide the body of Christ; thus driving multitudes to reject the whole truth, because so manifestly absurd and contradictory are the practices of its professed teachers.

As to ordinances, there are none enjoined in the Bible but what may be attended to without any preacher's assistance when "two or three" meet in Christ's name; no need of a professional preacher in any of these matters; for, saith Jesus, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."—Matt. xviii. 20. Has the Gospel any rites or ceremonies that cannot then and there be performed? Must we, if we happen to be all "laymen," run away for a professional minister, if we wish to eat the Lord's Supper, or do any thing else we may think the word demands of us?. To admit such are necessary, is to admit lordships over the body of Christ, and to admit them as having an authority above the Head, who saith "There am I" where two or three are "met in My name."

Let those who will, still wear the swaddling clothes of baby-hood in religion; but let others follow Christ, and him only; looking to him and trusting in him as "all in all" to his body, the church; remembering "that all ye are brethren"—one common family, having equal rights and privileges, and having one common Head.

Christ's church will be organized, duly, and perfectly when He returns from heaven; and not till then. Let imitators have their way, even though they make an Idol. God will destroy all such idols along with the wicked governments of the world.

A Query.

I wish to ask if Jonah was alive and conscious while in the fish's belly? If so, was not Jesus alive and conscious while in the grave? I have said, I thought Jonah prayed after he was thrown out on to land, and not while he was in the fish. Please say what you think of it, if not too unimportant to think of.

Gilbert Smith.

Nothing in Bible history is too unimportant to think about; but it may not be so important to think of some things as of others. In answer to the above, we only give an opinion without arguing the question. Our opinion is, and has been for years, that Jonah did not remain conscious, if at all, only a few moments after he was swallowed up by the fish; and that to all intents and purposes he was dead, having neither breath nor consciousness; and the restoration to life resulted from two causes: 1st. His blood remained liquid and warm: 2d. The air acting instantly on his lungs when thrown from the stomach of the fish, life and consciousness returned, and then he saw and realized the peril he had been in, and prayed most earnestly.

A TWELVE-DAYS PREACHING TOUR.

On Saturday afternoon, February 12th, I left home for Hartford, Conn., where, on Sunday, the 13th, in Talcott & Post's Hall, I preached two discourses on Life only in Christ to encouragingly large and deeply interested audiences. In the evening we had an excellent prayer and conference meeting in the same place. At noon I accompanied a number of our friends to the funeral of a dear sister in Christ, Mrs. Smith, who, with her husband, though both members of the Baptist church, had embraced the Life views during the last few months, and whose sole trust in her sickness and death was that she would awake in the likeness of her Lord "at the resurrection of the just." Our sister was twenty-eight years of age, was a devoted Christian, and rejoiced exceedingly in the precious views of divine truth which shed such a bright lustre upon the closing experiences of her pilgrimage.

Before submitting to the critical surgical operation (for the removal of a tumor), from the effects of which she died, she had committed to writing a detailed statement of her religious faith, so that it might be read by her mother—a Baptist and not a Life-believer—after her own departure.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Crane, Baptist pastor in Hartford; and, in their references to the state of the righteous in death, were in accord neither with the faith cherished by the departed one, nor (if I mistake not), with the teachings of the Bible. In the somewhat extended remarks with which the brother followed his reading of selections from the Scriptures, he made not a single allusion to the resurrection of the dead. Afterwards, however, in his prayer, a reference to the present felicity of the disembodied soul, was accompanied by a recognition of a future revival of the deserted body.

My own subject in the afternoon afforded me occasion for a distinct testimony on the subject of our hope concerning the holy dead; and in the evening meeting I endeavored to turn a like opportunity to good account (Br. Smith being with us, though I was unaware of the fact until the meeting had closed). It may be proper to add that Br. Smith and his wife had their attention called to the Life views by Rev. Samuel F. Clapp and his wife —all of whom had boarded at the same place.

On Monday, 14th, I left Hartford for New Boston, Mass., but failing to connect with the stage for that day at Winsted, I remained at the latter place over night—the guest of Br. Joseph B. Eggleston. Br. Walter Stickney called to see me. By invitation from these two brethren, both Life-believers, I visited Winsted in December, 1865, and delivered a short course of lectures on the Life question in Camp's Hall. Mrs. Carrie C. Belden, of New Boston, came to Winsted to hear those lectures; and, as a result of the lectures and of conversations on the subject during my stay, she rejoicingly embraced the doctrine that only the justified will be delivered from the dominion of death. From this position she has never wavered since.

Tuesday, 15th, Brn. Eggleston and Stickney, Sister E., and their friends Mr. and Mrs. P. accompanied me (in two teams) to New Boston, a place twelve miles north of Winsted. Of course we were cordially welcomed by Sister Belden and her family. That evening, and again on Wednesday evening (on the latter evening to an audience three or four times as large as that of the former evening), I presented the word of life in the hall of the place. In reference to these meetings, Sister Belden, in a letter to my wife, dated the 18th, said: "I drank in every word with perfect delight. O! the precious 'gospel;' how sweet it sounds to our ears, and how it fills every desire of our hearts if we only apply it aright. Our brother showed on the first evening what the Hope of the Christian is; and on the second, what would eventually become of the wicked. And it did seem to me that no one who listened could resist the conviction that it was God's unerring truth." In a later epistle, to the writer, Sister Belden says: "I think your visit to us will be productive of much good; and your last sermon, especially, seemed to reach the hearts of some. Mr. W., one of the merchants here, told me that he was going to study the Bible for himself, to see if these things were so. I cannot express to you how much my own heart has been cheered and comforted by your visit and labor of love; and I pray that God's richest blessings may ever attend you and yours."

Mr. Belden's business has for some years past been in Albany; and it is his intention to remove his family thither this spring—a purpose which, on various accounts, gratifies me much.

Thursday evening, 17th, found me at Forestville, Conn., the guest of Br. J. W. Whiting—himself and wife firm Life believers. I preached in the evening, and was blessed with much freedom in unfolding the Life theme to attentive listeners. If the Lord will, I design that this my first visit to F. shall not be my last.

The rain storm of Friday did not prevent my having an excellent visit at the home of Br. and Sister Beach, in New Britain (where I met Br. S. W. Bishop, whom I had not seen in over two years), but it did prevent our attempting to hold the meeting appointed for the evening in the chapel.

On Saturday, 19th, just before leaving Hartford for Meriden, an invitation (forwarded from Salem), to spend an evening or two with the New Haven Church reached me, and I immediately telegraphed that I would be with them on Tuesday evening, 22d.

In West Meriden I preached three times on Sunday, 20th, and again on Monday evening. Our congregations were large, and the Life theme was listened to with much interest. Lyceum discussions during the present winter have done much to awaken the existing interest. All our brethren in W. M. are Life believers; and their well-directed efforts in behalf of the truth give promise of a good harvest. My visit among them was a most happy one. One of their number Br. Whitehead, in a business letter sent me since I came away, says: "If you only knew what a feast your visit has been to us, you would rejoice that the Lord ever sent you to Meriden. We will not attempt to give Br. Wendell any praise, but give it all to the Lord. I will write again when I find out more concerning the interest of the people on the subject."

On Tuesday afternoon, 22d, I was taken into Cheshire to preach (in the Advent Chapel), the funeral sermon of Charles Franklin Bailey, a young man in his eighteenth year. He lived and died a Christian; and his last utterance—reminding me of the last words of our lamented brother, George F. Storrs —was, "Precious Jesus!" His precious Saviour will remember him "at the last day." Blessed assurance!

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings I spoke in the Chapel of our brethren in New Haven—on the Life question the first evening; on man's nature and the state of the dead the second.

Leaving New Haven late in the evening, I reached home in time to breakfast with my own dear ones on the morning of the 24th. Had been away twelve days and preached twelve times. My prayer is that my imperfect labors may be watered with the blessing of God.

On my way to Hartford, on the evening of the 12th, our train halted twenty minutes in Springfield. I took advantage of this to make a call in S., and some thief took advantage of my absence from the car, and stole my leather travelling bag! The bag was a valuable one; and as its contents included a considerable quantity of wearing apparel, I was subjected to an amount of inconvenience, that ought to impress upon my mind a lesson of caution. The bag was not taken through mistake; for I had hid it under the short corner seat behind the car door. When I left the car in S., I felt under the seat and found the bag there. Two persons, who I at the time thought looked rather suspicious, saw me take this precaution; and I have no doubt but that they stole my bag. When I returned to the train they were gone.

Among the letters stolen with the bag was one received that very evening from our sister, Mrs. C. C. Williams, of Butler, Mo. In it she inquired whether I am the Brother Wendell whom she heard preach, in a tent meeting, twenty or more years ago, in Western New York. I take this occasion to thank her for her interesting letter, and also to say that Eld. Jonas Wendell, an uncle of mine, is the person to whom she refers. He lives in Edinborough, Pa., and is in his 55th year. His nephew, the writer of this, is not yet forty-one (was born June 23, 1829).

II.

In Winsted, I learned that Moses Hull, in a debate he and Br. Grant, of the Crisis, had just held there, urged as proof of consciousness in death the words of Jesus (Matt. xxii. 32): "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living;" and that Eld. G. explained the term "dead" in the passage to mean "the eternally dead!" That interpretation is true, but it kills Eld. G.'s notion of the revival of such as have not Jehovah for their God. Will our brother ever see this?

Christ in the Flesh.

REMARKS BY W. PATTERSON.

Br. Storrs: In the Herald of Life of Feb. 23, Br. Sweetland asks for light on 2 Cor. v. 16. "Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more." "Salvation is of the Jews," and such was the deep rooted national prejudice of the Jews, that they thought and acted as if salvation was for them, and them alone. It was several years after the death and resurrection of Christ, before the gospel was formally proclaimed to any but Jews. Even the Apostles required extraordinary instructions before they could overcome this prejudice, and have a clear perception "that God is no respecter of persons; but he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him." But when they got a clear perception of the mystery that was hidden for ages, how "that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and of the same body and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel," they were "not disobedient to the heavenly vision," but proclaimed "the unsearchable riches of Christ" to all, irrespective of nationality. Paul took delight in informing the churches, that in Christ Jesus "there is neither Jew nor Greek;" all are one in Christ Jesus, all partakers of the "common salvation."

This passage we are considering is one of that class. Paul had "kinsmen according to the flesh;" that is, they were Jews. Jesus was a Jew. Paul and the other Apostles once thought he only was for salvation to the Jews. Paul prefaces this remark by saying, "for the love of Christ constraineth us." Us, who? Paul was a Jew, the Corinthians were Greeks; here the us brings the Jew and Gentile into equality; "because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead." Here Jew and Gentile being in the same condition, they were visited with the same salvation; "were all dead." "Christ died for all."

Now I will quote the passage as rendered in the emphatic Diaglott—"So that we from this time, respect no one on account of flesh, and even if we esteemed Christ on account of flesh, yet now, we no longer regard him." Paul's ideas were enlarged; he no longer regarded Jesus as a Jew, merely for the salvation of the Jews. Hence he follows this expression by saying, "That God was in Christ reconciling [the Jews? no], the WORLD unto himself."

So I am inclined to think this expression has no reference to the present existence of Christ.

The other passage in Eph. v. 30, "We are members of his body," that is of the mystical body of Christ, "and of his flesh, and of his bones," looks very much like an interpolation by some officious transcriber. Some manuscripts lack this expression.

Letters and Extracts.

From Joseph Laciar.

Br. Storrs: I find that there is getting to be an increased demand for information on the glorious truths we are laboring to promulgate. The tracts that I have given away in the past, have not been confined to this place alone, but owing to the plan I have adopted for bringing them to the notice of persons, they frequently fall into the hands of those who are entire strangers to me. I have always about half a dozen of these messengers on my glass show-case, a place at once so conspicuous as to be noticed by customers coming into my store; so that persons coming in to have medicines put up will pick up one of these tracts and read while I am getting things ready for them; and, as the case generally is, they find some point on which to ask a question, to dispute, condemn, etc. This of course opens the conversation, which may last from five minutes to an hour or more, and closes with an invitation to investigate for themselves by taking some tracts with them. In many cases time does not permit me to speak much, or at all with them; so they take one or more along, and it is the last I see or hear of them, or the individuals; but the truth marches on, and cannot be intercepted.

I have lately observed some most encouraging results; and I would say to all such brethren as are in business, and take a deep interest in spreading these last dispensational truths, to make it a matter of interest to place some of these tracts in the most conspicuous place you have in your store, and tell any customer who picks them up to read, "you are welcome to take that with you, and read it; I think you will find something of such interest as you may never have come across," etc. Some words of inducement spoken at the right time, may often be the very means of making the reading interesting. And if they are persons who have already the spirit of grace, so as to be interested in religious reading, they will, no doubt, be benefitted thereby, and God in His mercy will bless the word when sown into good soil.

Let not the work be slackened, while the day lasts; and as we are in the very last times of this age, let us all take heed that our lamps are bright and filled, and that our Saviour will not find any of us idle.

What we have said about the manner of distributing tracts, etc., by one situated as we are ourself, we speak from experience, having been engaged daily in preaching that way. You will sometimes have to bear a little reproach for Christ's sake, but these we know are light affairs, when placed in comparison with the peace it affords you in knowing that you are filling your offices as servants of Christ, faithfully while he is absent, letting your lights shine to everybody who touches your presence; and above all, the glorious promise is still in store for us, ready to be revealed at his coming, when He will say, "Well done thou good and faithful servant," etc.

It matters not whether we have the ability to preach the word publicly or not; whether we are possessed of ten talents, or only one; we will receive our rewards according as we have made use of those talents. We are told that on whom the Lord has conferred the ability to use or handle only one talent, of the same will he also, only require at his coming. Whatsoever we can do therefore, let us be employed at, in the Lord's vineyard, be it ever so little that we can do. "The harvest is great and the laborers are few;" let those who feel that they can do nothing of importance, pray the good Lord, that he will send forth faithful laborers, and they will accomplish a great deal, and will not fail to reap the rich reward of eternal life, through Jesus our Life-giver. Amen. Your brother in Christ.

From Joel S. Richards.

Br. Storrs: I really thank you for sendme the Herald of Life since last July.

I am receiving much light and comfort, and it is possible I may be able to see what now seems probable, none will live again except those IN Christ.

As many of my ideas are established on grounds made to seem correct because of rendering of words, etc., as the learned have shown, it is difficult for me (an uneducated person) to readily understand how to give satisfactory answers to questions some ingenious persons present against the views now being looked into.

By reading the many articles written by you and your correspondents, I obtain good instruction and assistance in way of getting a general idea of the doctrine promulgated; but I need much help in getting at particular and special points and parts, which may be easy and simple to the learned and enlightened.

I am anxious and in earnest to rightly understand all I may, pertaining to the Plan of Redemption as given us in the Scriptures. It is not my desire to keep in with any, unless for the truth's sake.

I see works alluded to which must be important for those of us seeking light. Judge Halsted's "Theology of the Bible" seems to be one much prized; but I am unable to purchase it. It seems to be a fund of knowledge so I judge from your paper. I have not seen it, neither have I seen many works written by those holding the peculiar views advocated by yourself and others through the Herald of Life.

The ideas pertaining to "The Ages to Come," are mostly new to me. I am not prepared to give reasons for or against those. They are different from the ideas I have cherished. I altogether am not sure but there is a vastly greater amount of truth not fully understood than most have supposed.

Rockport, Me., March 1, 1870.

From Dr. J. W. Bechtle.

Br. Storrs: Through mercy and goodness I am still alive, surrounded by all that I need to make me comfortable. I am still battling for the Herald of Life. I send you a new subscriber. He is a man about sixty years of age, teaching school. I came in contact with him on the doctrine of the Bible. I soon got him to see there is no life out of Christ. He asked me where he might obtain information on this doctrine? I told him to subscribe for the Herald of Life. I had two numbers in my pocket and showed them to him and told him to keep them until his came. He took them thankfully. He will wield an influence in his neighborhood for good to the Herald and the cause of Christ, as he is well booked in the Scriptures. He asked me a number of questions on the law, the judgment, hell, resurrection, etc. He was satisfied with my answers. I told him if eternal torment is the penalty for sin, then Christ never met the demands of the law, as Christ never went to eternal torment. Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth in Him. I am called infidel, universalist, and many other hard names, for advancing the doctrine of No life out of Christ, but with Paul I can say, None of these things move me. Thank God none of my enemies thus far have been able to put me to shame, or to confound me on the glorious doctrine of No life out of Christ.

O for light and wisdom from the Eternal Spirit, to unfold the holy Scriptures to all who may ask of me explanations. I can truly say with David, The Lord has made me wiser than all my teachers and enemies. Glory to God, my hope is full of immortality in Christ. Since I have seen the glories of No life only in Christ, I see Jesus in a more glorious light. O how his power, his glory, his love, his mercy, all expand before my raptured vision. O how the great scheme of redemption spreads out before me as I look on him as the Saviour of the world, as did the fields of Canaan to Moses, from the top of Pisgah.

May the good Lord give us all more exalted views of Christ and his glorious gospel, as preached to us by the apostles and Himself, so that we may put to silence the ignorance of ignorant and ungodly men. May God bless and sustain you in all your labors of love. I cannot help saying, I thank God that two such men as Br. Schaff, and Br. Bishop, from the United Brethren Conference have been added to the number of Believers of Life only in Christ. They are excellent men. May God open an effectual door to them to promulgate the truth as it is in Jesus. O may they be giants in the cause. The light is breaking, God is working. Let us thank God, and take courage. I am lending my Herald to my neighbors all round. I think I shall have a number of subscribers by and by. O for patience to bide God's time! O let us work on in full assurance of hope! If God be for us, who can be against us?

I did not receive my Herald this week, but I read the old one over, and it seemed new. O may I never be deprived of the friendly visit of the dear Herald while I live. Next to the Bible I prize it. I speak of it at all times, and in most places. Some people are now willing to read it. To-day there was a fine intelligent lady here for the Herald. I loaned her one or two numbers before. She says it is a much better paper than she at first took it to be. I told her the more she reads it, the better she will like it; and I invited her to call every week for it, as she was welcome to read and lend it to her neighbors. Yours waiting for the coming of the Lord. Love to all the dear brethren and writers for the Herald of Life.

Harrisburg, Pa. Feb. 28, 1870.

From La Fayette Norris.

Br. Storrs: To-day I listened to a sermon by a Free Will Baptist woman. It was an excellent practical sermon on Christian duties. The Free Will Baptists are holding a protracted meeting at this place, and quite a number are being "converted," as the phrase is. But I doubt if in six months time many of the converts can be found. At least this has been the experience in years past. In thinking the matter over, I asked myself where the trouble was. I concluded first of all, that it was not for want of good practical sermons on Christian duties; although a few popular sins are never touched. I have come to the conclusion that the trouble is, want of sufficient incentives to action; a lack of the faith once delivered to the saints. Not one in a hundred have faith enough to believe in a literal resurrection; hence they try to climb up to heaven some other way, and they have a faith as dreamy and shadowy as their fancied immortal soul is. Hence, as the excitement dies away, not having a well grounded faith they backslide until the next revival meeting. The fact is, as a brother said in Manchester, "as a people we are preached to death." I hope you will not be deterred from preaching doctrinal sermons, by the Pharisees of the day. If a man will not turn from the error of his ways, after believing in the glorious plan of salvation, and the future life to the righteous, then no amount of practical sermons will keep him from sinning. The Bible well read will post him as to what is sin, and he will be careful to shun it in every form if he is in earnest and has a living faith. Many of the Advent people and preachers have lost their power by ceasing to preach doctrinal sermons, and doing like the churches of the day, preaching only practical sermons so called.

I wish to utter my protest against trying to explain the resurrection in any other way, than in its most literal sense. We as a people believe that the resurrection is our only hope of a future life, and it seems to me, that the farther we get this from a strictly literal sense, the less interest we will take in it. If we are to have a natural body in the resurrection, why not be composed of the same particles of matter that we were composed of at death? Where is the impossibility of the thing? The same body of our Saviour that was laid in the tomb, was raised to life; and analogy would lead us to suppose that at the resurrection every one of the bodies of the saints would be raised. Then why not go the further and believe that the very dust of all the saints that crumbled back to dust shall be raised in the resurrection? This is my belief, my firm faith; and I write thus because I find some Adventists, even, that do not believe in a resurrection quite so literal. I presume all Life Believers hold that the doctrine of the resurrection is what distinguishes the Christian religion from all other religions; if so, ought we not to be very careful how we believe it?

I, for one, am a disbeliever in these protracted or revival meetings, so called, as a means of converting sinners. And I find they are discarded by many thinking men of good morals. Such men see the ridiculousness of the thing. But these things have become a necessity with the nominal churches. Having discarded the vitalizing element of Christianity, God's love as exhibited in the punishment of the wicked, and the literal resurrection of the saints and their glorious reign on the earth, they have no other way, of getting members into their churches but these "revival meetings," which simply means to get up all the excitement that is possible.

Campton, Iowa, Feb. 20, 1870.

From L. W. Bragg.

Beloved Pilgrims in the Lord: Still my courage is good in the Lord; feeling him to be my only hope and joy, and eternal salvation. His precious promise to go with us to the end of the world, never was more precious and heart-cheering than now. On it we can stand unmoved among the many dark clouds that arise to obscure the bright vision of the soon coming and ever glorious kingdom which is to abide forever; in which the now despised pilgrim band is to be glorified with a body like the glorious Life-giver our everlasting Head and King. This blessed, glorious and purifying hope, of seeing Jesus as he is, and being made like him, and that very soon, inspires my poor unworthy (and sometimes fainting) heart, with courage to renew my covenant choice with the Lord, to joyfully suffer on for Jesus and truth's sake, until the truth is really vindicated in the consummation of the long desired hope of seeing Jesus face to face. We find it truly comforting and heart cheering to meet with now and then, a pilgrim stranger to Zion's eternal glories. Such can truly comfort one another with the words of inspiration, that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven." This we can never give up until we can say, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us."

Dear Pilgrims, put on courage in the Lord. Though the enemy come in like a flood, the Lord never has forgotten his precious promise to lift up his Spirit as a (glorious) standard. Thank his dear name. Though discouraging feelings often come in to press my spirits down, and to darken mine understanding of what the will of the Lord is, yet faith overcomes, thank the good Lord, and will make the prize sure.

Every advanced step for glory, is disputed ground by the enemy of all righteousness; and we must resist him steadfast in the faith, with a non-conformity to any of his insinuations, which are very many in this day of prevailing evil, and unless we are kept by the mighty power of God, through faith unto salvation eternal, we are sure to fall, sink, and perish after all. O Lord deliver me! is still my prayer. I feel the need of special help from on high, to stand continually in a justified state before the Lord by faith. Without this state of justification before the Lord, by faith, I see no promise of eternal life. The conditions are, If the Spirit dwell in us, which raised up Christ from the dead, then by the Spirit we shall be quickened to life, and live with Jesus forever.

Dear Pilgrim of faith, pray for me that I may stand in the will of the Lord by faith, with the spirit of adoption continually renewed upon me. That I may have the washing of regeneration and the renewal of the Holy Ghost daily. The Lord help us not to sleep as do others, but that we may watch and be sober. Most all are drowned in the spirit of the world in some form, and are staggering at the fulfilment of the word of God. From a pilgrim in the gospel hope and love.

Orrington, Me., Feb. 27, 1870.

From Dr. John Billings.

Br. Storrs: I wish to say through the Herald, to friends in the East, that I feel very grateful to them for their kind remembrance of me in my days of trial and sickness; and especially Br. Mayo, of Lynn, Mass., for sending me the Herald when I was not able to get it for myself. The paper has never seemed so precious as it does now. It seems hard to wait so long as a week for it to return. It is like greeting an old friend; and I do most earnestly pray God for its continuance, and that the blessing of the Holy Spirit may continue as a dictator to those that contribute for its columns.

How really cheering it is to one who feels lonely and sick, and deprived sometimes of the necessaries of life, to know they have a friend somewhere that feels for them, and feels in the right way. While we are scattered as we are, it would be but a little, yea, a very trifling affair, for the many to relieve the burdens of the few, and by so doing drive gloom and almost despair from their abodes, and fill their houses with hope and cheerfulness. My mind has never weighed this subject as it has since I have been sick; and if others have not been faulty on this subject I am satisfied I have been, but I was not aware of it. And I hope I may ever feel for others in trouble as I would have them feel for me. I am satisfied that the lessons I have learned in my trials and sickness have and will prove a blessing to me.

My health is very poor now: have not been able to go from my house for a number of days, yet I expect to soon, or as soon as the weather is milder. My nervous system has been so shaken that my right arm has been almost paralyzed; so much so, I could not write. It is bad now, but I can scribble a little. It is improving slowly. My throat and lungs are some better, but not enough to fill my appointments once in four weeks. I shall not be able to preach again before May or June. But I want to be doing something now. If some of the brethren will send Br. Storrs a few dollars for "Campaign" tracts, so he can send them to me, I can set them to preaching, and perhaps they will do as well or better than I can.

To God, first, be thanks; then to the brethren East for their kind remembrance of one so unworthy in my hours of sadness; for I really felt as though I was left alone, forsaken of all but the Lord. He has sustained me, and his almighty arms have been around me to hold me up, for which I thank him, and for that blessed promise which was first made to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 15, and quoted by Paul in Heb. xiii. 5, 6, for our comfort. I have proved it to be true.

Mary Flickner, Delton, Wis., writes: I enclose seven dollars; five of which I have earned with my needle, stitch by stitch. We are poor, and have use for money in many ways; but seeing your notice that you would send the remaining numbers of the Herald of Life, of this volume, to any one for $1, and desiring to do what we can for the truth, and to spread as far as possible the doctrine of Life only through Christ, we have come to the conclusion that we could not do better than to put the money in the Bank of Heaven; and may the Lord take care of the result. Five dollars for five subscribers; and two dollars for Campaign Documents. And may the God of all grace watch over and protect you, and give you all strength to herald these blessed truths, until the coming of His Son, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, hoping for life and immortality through Him who has said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

Remarks by the Editor.

It makes us feel ashamed of our few sacrifices when such a noble spirit is manifested as that of our sister in the above. It looks like "the widow's mite;" a sacrifice which few of us understand or practice, we fear. May the Lord bless this effort, and we all be stirred up to greater diligence and sacrifice in promulgating His truth.

Filling Orders for Tracts.

We have been delayed in this matter, by having exhausted three or four of the Campaign Documents. We shall have in a new edition this week, and will then complete the orders. Br. Laciar's order is received.

We have nearly exhausted the thousand recently printed on "The Judgment," paid for by Br. E. Wolcott. He writes us that he will pay for another 1,000; so, we shall soon print them and send them on their mission.

Let the friends of the Life views help us forward in the Tract cause; it is doing a good work.

THE EVERGREEN MOUNTAINS OF LIFE.

Revised for the HERALD OF LIFE by A. CHANDLER, Des Doines, Iowa, from the popular poem of JAMES G. CLARK.

There's a land soon to come, 'mid the hills we are told.
Of Judah's fair groves of olives and pine,
Where the pure waters wander through valleys of gold,
And life is a treasure sublime;
'Tis the land of our God; 'tis the home of the blest,
Where ages of splendor forever will roll,
When the way weary traveller reaches his rest,
'Mid the evergreen mountains of life.

Sin's veil is yet over that beautiful land,
But the prophets have told of its bliss,
And our visions are brightened as its breezes are fanned,
Upon the Christian here fainting in this;
And we earnestly wish for its holy repose,
For our spirits are torn with temptations and woe,
And we are longing to drink from the river, that flows
From the evergreen mountains of life.

O! the stars never tread the blue heavens at night,
But we think, there Jesus has trod—
And the day never smiles from the palace of light,
But we feel the bright smile of our God;
For we are travelling like pilgrims
Through changes and gloom,
To a kingdom, where pleasures unceasingly bloom,
And our guide is the glory that shines through the tomb,
From the ever pure fountain of life.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

IN some remarks made by Br. Larkin, on an article of mine published Jan. 5, he seems to take exceptions; and if he is wrong he wishes to be corrected. It is by exchanging commodities that we obtain the necessary things for this life; so, in like manner by exchanging views we are enabled to arrive at the truth. Paul says, Without controversy great is the mystery of Godliness. Whether Paul meant that by "controversy" the mystery would be made plain, I will not now inquire; but one thing is certain, that by controversy, in these last days, the most sublime truths have been cleared of the rubbish by which they have been obscured for ages in consequence of the usurped authority that has been exercised over God's heritage by the Mystery Babylon, and her daughters. I, for one, go in for "controversy" in a liberal way, and christian spirit, and if it cannot be had in that way, let us have it even in "envy and strife," as Paul says, "every way whether in pretence or in truth," so that the truth "is preached."

Our Br. asks, "Is the hindering power of Paul, the Antichrist of 2 John 7?" The exception which our brother takes is, whether Paganism was the hindering power, or John's Antichrist. He inclines to the former, for, he says, "This hindering power must have been, at least in part, Pagan Rome." If this view is correct, to which I have no objection, then the hindering power must have been taken out of the way when the church in A. D. 313, chose "Constantine and his family as the protector of the Christian world," and conferred upon him the honors of a "second David" to fight the "battles of the Lord." Whichever view is taken, it is fatal to the views entertained by our brother of the Man of Sin yet to be developed, for Paul says, "And then shall that wicked be revealed," and not 1,500 or more years afterwards. There is one thing that must be admitted, that an "iniquity" was to work in Paul's day that would sap the vitality of the church, in consequence of which, the Man of Sin, or wicked one, would be revealed. That this "falling away" was manifested by the church in choosing Constantine as the "Second David" to "fight their battles," instead of trusting him who said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and "lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world." What was the cause of this declension in the church? Mosheim in his history of the Church says, "Of all the different systems of philosophy that were received about the time of our Saviour, none was so detrimental to the Christian religion as that which is styled gnostic, or Science, by which they pretended to teach the way to the true knowledge of the Deity. They corrupted all the doctrines of Christ and the apostles in such a manner as to reconcile them all to their own. They believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, but they rejected his humanity, or, that he had a true body. They rejected the resurrection of the body." Mosheim refers us to Timothy vi. 20; Col. ii. 8, and the Epistles of John as having their fulfilment. In 1 Tim. vi. 20, we read, "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust; avoid profane and vain babblings and oppositions of SCIENCE, falsely so called." Again Col. ii. 8, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men," etc. It is impossible to mistake who Paul referred to. It was that class which John calls Antichrist, who denied that Christ had come in the flesh. Their doctrines were all mysteries. Mosheim, in alluding to these teachers in the third century says, they had filled the church with the "Mystery of Iniquity." I know that some will say that John spake of "The Antichrist." Which of the "many antichrists" he applies the definite article to, I do not know; but he says, "And every spirit which confesseth not that Jesus the Messiah hath come in the flesh is not of God; but he is of the false Messiah of whom ye have heard that he cometh; and now is he already in the world." We see by this that "The Antichrist" was manifested in John's day. But says one, "The Antichrist" was to deny the Father and the Son; one who denied all Gods—an "ATHEIST." John asks the question, "Who is false but he that denieth that Jesus is the Messiah? And that person is a false Messiah. He that denieth the Father, denieth the Son; and he that denieth the Son, also believeth not the father."—1 John ii. 22. Again. "And this is the testimony of God which he hath testified concerning his Son. . . . And whosoever believeth not God hath made him a liar, by not believing the testimony which God hath testified concerning his Son." John fully explains what he means by denying the Father and the Son, it is by disbelieving what God had testified concerning his Son; by rejecting what God had said, of course, was to deny the Son also.

There is no prophecy in the Bible that has had a more perfect fulfilment, even of the true Messiah, than that of the false Messiah. I have yet to learn that John even intimated that what he said was to have a double fulfilment. In giving the history of Antichrist, I have shown the beginning and end of Antichrist so far as prophecy is concerned, or until those who proclaimed "One incarnate nature of Christ," denying that Christ had come in the flesh, who was superseded by a power more blasphemous than Antichrist, and more desolating to the church.

Mark the decrees of Chalcedon which were sanctioned by over 500 Bishops. "It was declared that the decrees of Chalcedon might be supported even by blood," or by the sword. Fifty millions have been put to death by that abomination of desolation, and if we are to have another Man of Sin, yet in the future, that will drive a better business than the Catholic church, it must be some time in the future, at least 1,000 years; for there is nothing but ignorance and superstition, which go hand and hand, that would ever tolerate such a state of things. That can never be; for the Scriptures say, knowledge will increase after the time of the end commences.

In reference to the development of the Man of Sin, our brother asked, "Now suppose the majority vote at this council, A. D. 451, Chalcedon, and the Imperial power that sustained the act of it, had been applied in confirming and establishing the act or creed of the other Council, would it not then have been as much Roman Catholic as the one they accepted?" In the first place, we have no business to "suppose" anything; it is facts we want, and not ifs nor ands. The facts are, that a war was waged by the two factions which shook the Empire from centre to circumference, and victory turned on the side of those that laid the corner stone of Catholicity at the council of Chalcedon. The epistles of Leo the Great, Bishop of Rome, was the ground-work upon which that structure was erected.

Again. The doctrine of "One incarnate nature in Christ" was never as I can learn, believed by a Roman bishop, but was confined to the Eastern church, which always held the supremacy in the church until A. D. 451, at the Council of Chalcedon. Again. Whether Paul meant that the Antichrist was the hindering power or obstacle, it is manifest that the Antichrist had to be overcome before the development of the Man of Sin.

The question now arises, Is the pope the Man of sin? The first objection is, that he was to sit in the temple of God; and if the Pope is the Man of sin, "Then St. Peter's church at Rome, must be the temple of God." The question might be asked, Does not Paul refer to the temple of the heathen God? for he "exalteth himself above all that is called God." Now, the pagans had temples in Rome for their gods, which gods were broken to pieces and their temples made use of for the worship of Christ. His exaltation was above all that is called God, or that is worshipped. Certainly there is a plurality of gods here mentioned, and of course each one has a temple. In which one of these temples did the Man of sin sit? Certainly, if our brother is right in his quotation from the book of Revelation, the temple of God is in heaven, not in Judea. And if it should come down, it is not likely that "wicked one," would get a seat there, for he would have Michael and his angels after him and cast him out, as they did the "Old Devil." I am sure if they would not tolerate the "Old" fellow there, they would not the Young fellow. Whether it was a heathen temple this Man was to take his seat in, or whether it was the temple of the living God on earth, and that the gods here referred to were rulers, for they are called gods in Scripture, there is no difficulty of finding a place for him in history.

It is evident that the temple here referred to is a place of worship. Before Jesus came, Jerusalem was the place of worship where God made his appearance to bless the people. But, says Jesus, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." Wherever God manifests himself, there is his temple. The church is the place where God sits—Jesus Christ being its head. Did God ever have a church or temple in Rome? Paul preached there "two whole years, preaching the kingdom of God." It is quite evident that a church was formed there; and if we can believe history, many of the disciples of Jesus were slaughtered there. But you will say, the church has fallen away and God does not recognize it. With the same reasoning we might say, God did not recognize Jerusalem as his temple; for they had made a bazaar out of it, a den of robbers, and thieves. In fact it had become like Babylon mystic, a cage of every unclean and hateful bird; and yet God recognized it as a place where he is worshipped, for he says, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her plagues." Jesus is said to be the head of the church; but the Pope has usurped his authority over God's heritage—the church. I do not understand that the church is a building made with hands, for the apostle says, "The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands."

Jesus defines the church. It is where two or three are met together in his name. It is folly for men to talk of turning a man out of the church of God. If he is a Christian and he meets two or three more to worship, God is there in their midst. What are the facts in reference to the Man of sin? Does the Pope fill the picture? Says history, "On Palm Sunday a procession escorts the Pope, who is seated in a chair above the heads of the people, to the grand vestibule of the cathedral, where the procession halts for a moment at the closed doors, and the choirs at its head chant the words 'Open the gates and let the king of glory in.' To which the choirs inside reply, 'Who is the king of glory?' The doors are then thrown open, and the representative of the King of Glory is borne into the cathedral and being placed in the chair of St. Peter, the cardinals in succession approach and kiss his hand, retire one step, and make three bows or nods, one to him in front, and one on the right hand and another on the left, which are intended for the personification of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost on either side of him. The lower grades of priests, kiss his toe; afterward the Pope passeth out twirling his three fingers to the congregation representing the Holy Trinity."—Rena 19 cent., chap. 72.

The case might be rested here, but I cannot refrain from giving one more quotation out of the many. Says Bower, in his history of the Popes, "The Pope claims to be Infinite, omnipotent, incomprehensible, having all power in heaven and in earth; having been constituted Prince over all nations and all kingdoms, with a plenitude of power to root up and to plant, to destroy and to save, to raise up and pull down at his pleasure."

These facts need no comment. None of the Men of sin that ever have risen, or shall rise, can go any farther in their claims or blasphemies than the Pope. He claims three crowns, which shows his exaltation above all rulers in the Church and State. One conferred on Leo the Great at the Council of Chalcedon when they crowned him "Emperor of the Holy Catholic Church." The second one in A. D. 754, when he was crowned king of Rome. The third, in 1298, when Albert of Austria, came to the Pope to be crowned with the Imperial crown of the Cæsars, when Boniface the VIII., seized the crown and placed it on his own head, and seizing a sword that was hanging on the wall, exclaimed, "It is I who am Cæsar. It is I who am an Emperor. It is I who will defend the right of the empire." From this time we date the triple crown.—Waddington's Church History, chap. 20.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

THEY REIGNED WITH HIM THE THOUSAND YEARS.

HAVING proven by the Scriptures that those who are Christ's live with him, I will now show by the same kind of testimony, that they "reigned with him the thousand years."

Christ is the head—the church is his body. The two combined form the "perfect man,"—the "fully developed Christ." No honor can be conferred on the head without the body being—through its head—a partaker of that honor. Therefore the apostle says, "Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. viii. 30. Here are certain parties predestinated—called—justified, and glorified. Who are they? Ans. Verses 28, 29. "And we know all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, (i. e., "bear the image of the heavenly") that he might be the first-born among many brethren." So we see the called, justified, and glorified ones are the "Many Brethren." V. 31, tells who the many brethren are. "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" Also chap. ix. 23, 24, "And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory. Even us whom he hath called; not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles." Thus we see that those who were called, justified and glorified, are those who are in Christ, not only from the Jews, but also from the Gentiles. In other words, The Church, the body of Christ. And having been glorified with him, they also reign with him, as the apostle says again: "And hath raised us up together (past tense) and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—Eph. ii. 6. An example or two will show what the apostle means by the phrase "heavenly places" or, "heavenlies," as the Diaglot translates the word, epouraniois.

"To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God."—Eph. iii. 10.

"Put on the complete armor of God, that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the—diabolos—accuser; because our conflict is not with flesh and blood (only) but with the governments, with the authorities, with the potentates of this darkness; with the Spiritual things of wickedness in the heavenlies."—Eph. vi. 11, 12. Diaglott. E. V. "Principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world," etc.

The apostle here informs us that the church had a mission to make known the "manifold wisdom of God" to certain parties, called by him, "principalities and powers in the heavenlies;" and that these principalities, etc., were arrayed in opposition to the church, causing a conflict to be fought on the part of the church, with the "whole armor of God." I now ask, To whom was the church, commissioned to make known the manifold wisdom of God? Ans. "Go ye and teach All Nations," etc.—Matt. xxviii. 19. Who opposed the church in this work? Ans. The rulers—those who exercised dominion in the Roman Empire. Seeing then that the Emperors and civil magistrates opposed the church in their work of teaching all nations we cannot well mistake the apostle's meaning by the phrase "heavenly places," or, heavenlies; viz., the position of a ruler or rulers over the kingdom of men. Was Christ exalted to the position of a ruler of the nations when he ascended on high? Ans. "Which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead and set him at his own right hand in the heavenlies; far above all principality and power and might and dominion, and every name (or title) that is named, not only in this (aiooni) age, but also in that which is to come."—Eph. i. 20, 21. What is meant by the phrase "right hand?" See the following in "Appendix"—"Emphatic Diaglott," under the word "Hand." "The phrase, Sitting at the right hand of God, as applied to the Messiah, is derived from the fact that a position at the right hand of the throne of earthly monarchs was accounted the chief place of honor, dignity and power."

Now, in Daniel iv. 17, we are informed that "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." Well then, "The Most High," is the Supreme ruler in the heavenlies, i. e., over the kingdom of men; and as Christ was exalted to his, (God's) own right hand in the heavenlies, he also occupies a position as a ruler over the kingdoms of men, next to the Supreme ruler, not only in this age, but in that which is to come. This being the case, it follows that those who were "raised up together and seated together in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus" reign with him. The following is additional proof that Christ is now ruling the kingdom of men. Speaking of the resurrection, the apostle says, "But each one in his own order; Christ the first-fruit, (of them that slept) afterward, those who are Christ's at his coming. Then comes the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he (Christ) shall have put down all principality and authority and power, for he (Christ—having been exalted a ruler over all earthly powers not only in this age etc.) must reign till he has put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy—(ho thanatos) the death shall be destroyed. But when the Scriptures say, that all things are put under him (subjected to his rule) it is evident that he is excepted who did put all things under him (by making him a ruler over them.) And when all things shall have been put under him (brought into a state of submission to him), then, also, shall the Son himself be subject to him who did put all things under him (make all things subject to his rule) that God may be the all in all."—Anderson.

The apostle's teaching in the above quotation is evidently this—The Father having exalted Christ to his own right hand, in which act he makes him ruler not only over all earthly powers but also over the Angelic hosts, (the Father however retaining his throne) this dominion he, Christ, must continue to exercise until he has destroyed all enemies and subdued all things to himself, thus making ready for the restoration; then he will deliver up the—basileian—dominion (over the Angelic hosts) to God even the Father; retaining however his dominion over the nations of the earth; for this he exercises "not only in this age, but that which is to come; but in that which is to come he rules only his own subjects, inhabiting his own dominions; he will then set on his own THRONE in subjection to the Father. This throne he will never abdicate, and this—basileian—dominion he will never deliver up." This must be the apostle's meaning, because it is the teaching of the following passages:

"And Jesus came and spoke unto them saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."—Matt. xxviii. 18. "Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels, in heaven, and authorities and powers on earth, being made subject unto him."—1 Pet. iii. 22. "And there was given him dominion, and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion, over the people, nations and languages, is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away; and his kingdom which shall not be destroyed."—Dan. vii. 14. "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever: and of his kingdom there shall be No End."—Luke i. 33. "And He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you. Whom the heaven must receive (retain) until the time of restitution (restoration) of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts iii. 20, 21.

Having thus proved that Christ has been reigning over the principalities, powers and authorities of this age, even since his exaltation, and will continue to do so in that which is to come; and having the authority of the apostle for saying that those who are Christ's were "Made alive together with Christ," and were "raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus;" I cannot locate in the future what the prophets, Jesus, and the apostles, all locate in the past.

[To be concluded next week.]

THE moment a man parts with moral independence, the moment he judges of a duty, not from the inward voice, but from the interest and will of a party, the moment he commits himself to a leader or a party, and winks at evil because divisions would hurt the cause, the moment he shakes off his particular responsibility, because he is but one of the thousand or million by whom the evil is done; that moment he parts with his moral power. He is shorn of the energy of a single-hearted faith in the right and true.

MOST of the shadows that cross our path through life, are caused by our standing in our own light.

GOD sits upon his mercy-seat, and will pardon and save all who approach him aright.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR POOR BOYS;

OR, ABRAHAM LINCOLN AT THE FIVE POINTS MISSION.

REV. Edward Eggleston writes to the "Independent:"

"Among a number of instances that have floated to me while travelling through Central Illinois there is one altogether too good to be lost. I believe it to be perfectly authentic.

A respectable townsman, an old acquaintance of Mr. Lincoln was the narrator of the story to my informant, and himself a participant. According to that habit of familiarity so prevalent in the West, (by means of which a man is made to prolong his boyhood throughout his life), this gentleman is known among old friends by the name of 'Jim,' as Mr. Lincoln was always called 'Abe.' For the sake of my story, I shall have to call Mr. ——, 'Jim,' as any one of his fellow citizens would in telling it.

This gentleman relates that soon after Mr. Lincoln's Cooper Institute speech he saw a notice in the New York "Tribune," that Hon. A. Lincoln of Illinois, had delivered an address to the Sunday-school at the Five Points, which was very well received by both teachers and pupils. Knowing that Mr. Lincoln was not a professor of religion, it struck him that it was a good subject for banter, and so, seizing the paper, he started for "Old Abe's" office. Bursting into the room impulsively, he was startled to find a stranger in conversation with Mr. Lincoln, and turned to retrace his steps, when the latter called out: "Jim! what do you want?" "Nothing." "Yes you do, come back." After some entreaty, "Jim" approached Mr. Lincoln, and remarked, with a twinkle in his eye: "Well, Abe I see you've been making a speech to Sunday-school children. What's the matter?" "Sit down Jim, and I'll tell you all about that." And with that he put his feet on the stove and began.

"When Sunday morning came I did not know exactly what to do. Washburne asked me where I was going. I told him I had nowhere to go; and he proposed to take me down to the Five Points Sunday School to show me something worth seeing. I was very much interested by what I saw. Presently Mr. Pease came up and spoke to Washburne, who introduced me. Mr. Pease wanted us to speak. Washburne spoke, and then I was urged to speak. I told them I did not know anything about talking to Sunday Schools, but Mr. Pease said that there were many of them friendless and homeless, and that a few words would do them good. Washburne said I must talk. And so I rose to speak; but I tell you Jim, I didn't know what to say. I couldn't talk about Christ and religion, for I didn't know much of either but I remembered that Mr. Pease had said that many of them were homeless and friendless, and I thought of the time when I had been pinched by terrible poverty. And so I told them that I had been poor; that I remembered when my toes stuck out through my broken shoes in winter; when my arms were out at the elbows; when I shivered with the cold. And I told them there was only one rule. That was, always do the very best you can. I told them that I had always tried to do the very best I could; and that if they would follow that rule, they would get along somehow. That was about what I said; and when I got through, Mr. Pease said it was just the thing they needed. And when the school was dismissed, all the teachers came up and shook hands with me, and thanked me for it; though I did not know as I was saying anything of any account. But the next morning I saw my remarks noticed in the papers."

Just here Mr. Lincoln put his hand in his pocket, and remarked that he had never heard anything that touched him as had the songs that those children sang. With that he drew forth a little book; remarking that they had given him one of the little books from which they sang. "Did you ever hear any poetry like this, Jim?" And he began to read a piece, with all the earnestness of his great, earnest soul. In the middle of the second verse his friend "Jim" felt a choking in his throat, and a tickling in his nose. At the beginning of the third verse he saw that the stranger from the East was weeping, and his own tears fell fast. Turning toward Lincoln who was reading straight on, he saw the great blinding tears in his eyes, so that he could not possibly see the page. He was repeating that little song from memory! How often he had read it, or how long its sweet and simple accents continued to reverberate through his soul, no one can know. How much influence may that little child's song have had in bringing him to that trustful attitude toward God, which was so characteristic of him during the weary closing years of his life."

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Questions Answered.

The following Statements and Questions were sent us by our earnest friend, Rev. Wm. D. Bridge, of the Methodist E. Church.

The Response is by our beloved Br. L. C. Thorne, who was brought to Christ by the influence of the truth of "No Life out of Christ." Let the Questions and Response be read and pondered well. Br. Bridge headed his communication, "Holy Living and Immortality through Christ alone." He then proceeds as follows:

It has always been granted that there are many men whose religion is deep and sound, who are utterly heterodox respecting many received, scripturally-defended, views. The heart trusting in Jesus may fail of earthly orthodoxy but have the orthodoxy of "Life everlasting."

Hence we believe that very many Unitarians, Catholics, Universalists, etc., are "right in the sight of God" spiritually, though utterly rejecting what to the majority may seem to be "Bible truths."

The great test after all is: "By their fruits ye shall know them." And the very best method of bringing any given doctrine to judgment is by critically and candidly examining the fruitage it yields.

As a believer in the natural immortality of the race, and therefore denying the fundamental theory for which the Herald of Life is published, I have long wished that some keen, philosophic and thoughtful analysis of the results of the preaching of the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ" could be made; and if possible by some person of broad views, who has been so situated as to see the plain results attendant on the preaching of the opposing views.

1. Does the preaching of the doctrine of "Non-Immortality save through Christ" produce deeper convictions for sin, awaken backsliders more effectively, stir the sluggish in man's nature more surely, develop a more faithful, trustful, consistent piety more rapidly and permanently than the doctrine of Man's Inherent Immortality?

2. In any given place, at any given time, by pastors of contiguous churches laboring with equal zeal and fidelity, will the results of the first doctrine preached equal or surpass the second? We must not view this question from the stand-point of a sceptic, but from that of one who is at least religiously inclined, and desirous of attaining to a "knowledge of the truth."

3. There are quite a number of laborers, evangelists we may call them, now connected with those popularly denominated "Life Believers," who were formerly Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist, Dutch Reformed ministers. Can they give us the carefully analyzed results of their ministry, when laboring under the influence of both their former and their late views?

4. Can the revivals of religion among Methodists and Baptists be parallelled, in power and frequency, among Life Believers? I ask this question for light. I am led to doubt the power of the doctrine in question to convert souls. I am led to think that when a man is brought to believe that sin's penalty is "extinction of being," that there shall be no "conscious suffering for sin," that when he dies it is the "end of him," he will say to himself, "Who cares then? I am to suffer here, perhaps, pain, agony, remorse, terror, hunger, thirst, disgrace, poverty, the taunts, and judgments of men; but by and by I'm to be freed from these forever, no matter how dire and dark and damning my sin;" and so rush on madly, recklessly, ruthlessly.

I may be in error in this conviction; indeed I hope I am. I may be under a sad delusion in respect to the natural tendency of the preaching of the doctrine under discussion; and if I am I shall most cheerfully receive light and knowledge from those who are the best circumstanced to give it. I am quite sure that many holding, with myself, to the doctrine commonly received among the orthodox churches, view the necessary results of the doctrine under discussion as I have viewed them. Are we right, or are we in most egregious error?

We would not vilify our brethren in Christ; far be it from our intent; but we look back to the time in French history when men rabidly proclaimed, "Death is an endless sleep," and strode on in their wild carnival of fury and blood. And now the same doctrine (though now given us in the interests of religion), asks of us a candid reception. Can we accept it?

We can, yea, we must, yea, we will, if by its fruitage it can vindicate its divine origin. Is it equal to this task? And we are compelled to inquire, Has our orthodoxy prevailed so astonishingly despite of one utterly false ingredient in its "system of doctrines?" Have we been building our tabernacle on the false foundation of an illogical Immortality? Are we now about to revise our views, and cordially love that which we have cordially hated?

In our search for light we are candid and in earnest. It is the wise man who changes his convictions when induced by superior light: the fool never changes. Though we should guard against the false view that "change is itself improvement."

5. We return, then, to our primal question: What are the results of the preaching of that doctrine, for the assertion of which the Herald of Life is published?

I am acquainted with believers of the doctrine who are very humble and holy Christians. I know some who are generally acknowledged as "living epistles of piety." But I also have been saddened by the acquaintance of some whose vitality as Christians lay in the direction of theological polemics, discussion and irony.

Brethren, we all profess belief in Christ. Let us show the Christ-spirit, love, joy, peace, freedom from supercilious egotism, and that charity which vaunteth not itself, thinketh no evil, etc.

Striving to be found worthy of the Resurrection of the Just, I remain

Yours, in Christ,

Wm. D. Bridge.

Response to Br. Bridge by L. C. Thorne.

We have never known but one standard of appeal in determining questions of doctrine. In making up one's judgment as to what is revealed truth, it is eminently wise to have examinations both begin and end with the word of God. If a doctrine is sustained by the plain import of inspiration, let it be henceforth a part of our living faith. If, on the other hand, it is found not to be thus sustained, let it be forthwith rejected, for we must not be "wise above what is written."

It is claimed by the author of the article now under consideration, that "the great test after all is, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' And the very best method of bringing any given doctrine to judgment is by critically and candidly examining the fruitage it yields." Jesus has instructed us, "by their fruits" we shall know whether men are true or false prophets; whether they serve the world, or are "soldiers of the cross;" whether they live after the flesh, or whether they, "through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body;" in short, whether they are true or false to their professions of loyalty to Christ; but that a man's life is a proper "test" of the truth or falsity of his faith is a proposition which, in view of well known facts, suggests its own refutation. There are infidels who walk uprightly; whose dealings with their fellow-men accord with the principles of justice and right; who labor zealously and sacrifice largely for the good of others; men who judged by their intercourse with their fellow-men, might almost be thought to love their neighbors as themselves. Does the purity of their life afford proof of the truth of their belief? But it may be urged that despite all this they are ungodly. We are willing to grant it, but such a judgment cannot be based on impropriety of conduct. Then there are men in every religious denomination who hold, theoretically, the doctrines of their respective churches, but whose lives are the very opposite of those described, and who are a shame, a reproach, a disgrace to the cause of religion. Are such lives a "test" of doctrine, a proper ground of its admission or exclusion? If among advocates of any system of doctrines, a more perfect development of vital godliness is found than exists among votaries of opposing ones, the fact must indeed constitute an argument in favor of those doctrines, but cannot establish their truth. All will admit that such a standard of appeal is imperfect, and consequently improper, for, failing in some cases, it is unreliable in all. Besides, what finite mind can measure with any thing like precision, the religious experience of a given number of Christians?

In replying to the first inquiry, it would seem presumptuous to speak confidently. We believe an affirmative answer to be the correct one. Those who hold to the Bible view, as we believe, of man's nature and destiny, may be divided into two classes, viz: such as were previously professors of religion, and such as were brought to Christ through embracing the doctrines. Of the latter class is the writer. We have heard very many of both classes relate their experience, and the former universally testify that they never so fully beheld the matchless love of God in giving "His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life," as since they have learned the hopeless and lost condition from which that love would rescue them. That so much deeper and purer flows the precious current of love now than before; so much more effectively are they enabled to labor; so much more "faithful" and "trustful" do they feel to have become that their increased "joy in believing" is poured forth in the expression, "we feel we have been converted anew." Some of the latter class say, "when, as in protracted and other meetings instituted for purposes of revival, we were day after day and night after night warned to accept Christ lest, dying, we should be cast down into hell torments, the torturing, frightful horrors of which were set forth in the most soul-harrowing terms the preachers were capable of constructing, we were frightened, and we said we would serve Christ. We were new converts, and we felt happy in being counted on the Lord's side. But soon we began to contemplate with more calmness our new experience. Our fears only had been aroused, no love to God incited. We did not and could not fully believe God would inflict such objectless punishment upon his creatures, and so when our fears were allayed, we turned our backs upon the church and went again to the world, plunging the more deeply into its follies from having, as we supposed, tried religion and found it a bauble. But when we learned our mortal nature, and that all who will not accept the blessed offer of eternal life, God, in the infinity of His love, proposes to put back into nothingness from whence they were taken, and so finally have a universe free from sin and evil, we could not do other than love so good a being. When, added to this, we considered what it was God gave His Son to save man from; when we thought of the sufferings of Christ; His labors; the gross and accursed indignities He meekly bore; His extreme anguish of Spirit during that awful night in Gethsemane; His death on the cross, and all to save men from death, the very fountain of our love was stirred, and we said, "take us Lord, and do with us as thou wilt, make of us what thou wilt, only give us grace to glorify thee, to exalt the name of Jesus and proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to dying, perishing men." Others again, assure us they could not accept the endless-torment doctrine, and, not knowing but that the Bible taught it, they rejected both it and the Bible as equally unworthy of credence. "When," say they, "we learned the truth, how we have not eternal life in ourselves, but must lay hold on Christ now if ever we get it, our hard heart melted, we flew to Jesus as our only refuge, and went humbly to the throne of Grace." Not a few of God's precious ones who labor in our ranks, were wrested from the clutches of infidelity.

To the second query, we answer, the circumstances suggested have not and probably will not ever exist. But suppose they did exist, and such a trial should be made, and it should transpire that three times as many persons should be converted under the preaching of no future life except through Jesus Christ, than under the preaching of inherent immortality (the proportion is about what we think the result would show), it would prove nothing. Future life only through Christ would still be true, not because of its success, but because taught in the word of God. Therefore, "to the law and the testimony," etc.

Query 3. We suppose they can. If they should do it and the result favored the former, is W. A. B. sure he is competent to make due allowance for the power of prejudice against whatever is unpopular? Does he know all the difficulties incident to the early struggles of every reform. Is he able to determine the ratio in which reform movements gather strength? If he is, we will endeavor to put him in a position to inform us how long it will be before the doctrine of natural immortality will no longer be advocated by the Methodist church. It is only a question of time, if the Lord come not soon. As the persons in question are God-fearing, truth-loving servants of Jesus, the fact that they continue to prosecute the work, renders it quite fair to presume they have "carefully analyzed" the matter and are satisfied.

Query 4. We think not. As a body, we do not believe in attempting to frighten sinners into repentance, nor do we seek the aid of animal excitement in winning them to Christ. We take the holy Scriptures, and by them show sinners their condition and necessities, and then preach to them "Jesus and the resurrection." Some time since, we heard a Methodist minister publicly lament, that of those converted during seasons of revivals, a great majority backslide. As a Methodist preacher, the experience of Br. W. A. B. may not be very dissimilar. With our people steadfastness is the rule, backsliding the exception; and, from what we have already said, the reason is obvious.

Our brother's last direct query is, "What are the results of the preaching of that doctrine (he should have said doctrines), for the assertion of which the Herald of Life is published?" We will note some of them. Only a few years ago the doctrine of unending torments in hell was frequently and eloquently preached in every, so-called, orthodox pulpit. Ministers vied with each other in picturing the terrors of hell, and the sufferings of the damned. People, the young especially, were scared by the spectre of the seething cauldron which ever hovered before them, making, says one, "society tiresome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful, and life itself a cruel bitter." The "fear of hell made some melancholy, others mad," few, if any, it is safe to say, better. Parents were represented in heaven rejoicing and taking sweet delight in the spectacle of their own offspring writhing in the racking pains of the infernal abode, and were thrilled with ecstatic joy as they beheld "every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of hell's unutterable lament." Now, such stuff is seldom preached at all; never as formerly. Then, logical minds were constantly being driven into infidelity by the inconsistencies of modern theology. Now, that tide of evil is rapidly being turned and infidels reclaimed. Then the character of the God of love was grossly libeled, by imputing to him acts of unutterably fiendish cruelty toward weak, finite subjects of his creation. Now, though the tongue of slander is not silenced, it speaketh less folly, and its poison is counteracted. These are glorious "results" accomplished by the proclamation of those doctrines maintained by the Herald of Life, but many others, equally glorious are being attained. Labor we "in vain, in the Lord?" The great and important truth, too, of the second coming of Christ, faith in which the inherent immortality theory had well-nigh destroyed, is being again established, and is inciting believers to greater faithfulness, and to more perfect development of Christian virtue.

To mortifying the lusts of the flesh. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth."—Col. iii. 4, 5.

To obedience and purity. "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as He is pure."—1 John, iii. 2, 3.

To spiritual mindedness. "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ."—Phil. iii. 20.

To earnest watchfulness. "Let your loins be girded about, and your light burning. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching."—Luke xii. 35–37. Nay, it incites to all faithfulness as watchmen upon the walls of Zion proclaiming "glad tidings of good things."

Our good brother cites the old French infidelity which not only denied Christ, but any future life, and he says, of "No Future Life except through Jesus Christ"—"And now the same doctrine asks of us a candid reception." Is this true? Has it even the semblance of truth? Is he ignorant in this matter? He mentions the fact that those infidels held "death is an eternal sleep," and he understands us to hold to "Life from the Dead through Jesus Christ;" and yet he avows them to be the same. So then it follows, that when the apostles went abroad and preached "Christ and the resurrection," they preached infidelity. We also preach Jesus and the resurrection. We cast the mantle of charity over the assertion, and humbly ask its author to think again and more wisely. He says he is "acquainted with believers of the doctrine" (Immortality only through Christ, and that by a resurrection from the dead, or change, if living, at his second coming), "who are very humble and holy Christians, . . . 'living epistles of piety.' But I have also been saddened by the acquaintance of some whose vitality as Christians lay in the direction of theological polemics," etc. We certainly would rejoice with joy unspeakable, if all "believers of the doctrine" were "living epistles of piety." But this we cannot expect. There was a false one even among "the twelve." And Jesus said, "It is impossible but that offences will come." Our friend has doubtless found many in his own society, whose lives are a reproach to the cause of religion. From the foundation of the church there have been, and unto the end of time there will continue to be those who, though making a high profession, walk not after the Spirit but after the flesh. "Perils among false brethren" were far from being the least of apostolic trials; and such there are to try the true disciples now. When we see such exhibitions by those trained under popular theology, which tends to excite fear rather than encourage love, and precludes all approach to a proper conception of divine goodness, we do not so much wonder. But when we see people who have been introduced into the full glare of gospel light, and have purged their faith of God-dishonoring, soul-cursing error; when we see men thus enabled to contemplate God in His true character of infinite love; when we see men who, by a knowledge of gospel truth, are so fitted to properly appreciate the Redeemer's work on earth that the fire of that "perfect love which casteth out fear" should be kindled in them, and, burning, should purify the mind and bring it into subjection to the divine will, causing the Christian graces to shed their holy lustre upon every act of life; when we see people so richly blessed and yet lukewarm, unloving and grossly inconsistent, or mere cold-hearted zealots, we are amazed. It is a mystery we make no attempt to solve, but, sorrowing, leave it with Him who knoweth all the secret thoughts of men.

The only salutary quality claimed for the natural-immortality-and-torment doctrine consists in its power of appeal to the passion of fear—fear of suffering. We hold it axiomatic that the fear of torment is not a worthy motive for obedience. It incites no love, and a religion without love is a corpse. He who repents simply or mainly through fear of suffering is ready to recant whenever that fear is removed, and to withdraw the little love to God which may have been kindled within him.

Is the doctrine said to be reasonable and easy of belief? Dr. Dwight, Congregationalist, says, "There are, I know, persons who speak concerning future punishment with an air of cool self-complacency, as being, in their view, easy of investigation and free from embarrassment. I am inclined, perhaps uncharitably, to give them little credit for candor, clearness of intellect, or soundness of character; and greatly doubt whether it has been investigated by them." Bishop Newton remarks, "Imagine creatures delivered over to the torments of endless ages, without the least hope or possibility of redemption. Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it with God and goodness." Prof. Hudson has well said: "That which is too fearful, is unfeared. Very few, if any, really apprehend that they may live in anguish forever. Hence there is, if all are immortal, a natural hope of final mercy and salvation; which renders the doctrine supposed to be so fearful and safe, a dead letter, and an opiate."

Orthodoxists, so called, would hardly teach an untruth, knowingly, for the sake of any supposed salutary effect upon sinners. But they do teach a penalty for sin which is not taught in the Bible. If they believe the Bible teaches it, why do they not show us where? We have never seen it proved from Scripture, nor heard of its being done. They assume it after first assuming the immortality of the race, a doctrine never once mentioned in the Bible, and yet one that is as important for man to know, if true, as is the existence of God. Dr. Proudfit says, "That best and brightest of revelations . . . announces, not an immortal soul, but an immortal man." Olshausen says, "The Bible knows not either the expression, 'immortality of the soul,' or the modern doctrine of immortality." Again: "The doctrine of the immortality of the soul and the name are alike unknown in the entire Bible." Watson, the great Methodist, testifies that the natural immortality of the soul "is contradicted by the Bible, which makes our immortality a gift dependent on the will of the giver." He also calls the doctrine "an absurdity," and further says, "I have read volumes on the nature of the soul, but I have no scruple in saying I know nothing about it. Hoping as I do for eternal life through Jesus Christ, I am not disturbed at my inability to clearly convince myself that the soul is or is not, a substance distinct from the body." Of course he must know nothing about a theological soul when the Bible gives no countenance to such an existence. When men try to put words into the mouth of inspiration, themselves and their readers will always, if honest, be compelled at last, like Watson, to confess ignorance respecting the subject of their presumptious attempts. It is dangerous to speak at all when God has not spoken; but to speak against God, how awful! The gospel message is love; and the religion of the Bible is love. But a characteristic of this religion of fear is that it supplants the religion of love. One proof of this is the remark, made by many Christian people, "if I believed extinction of being to be the sinner's punishment, I would not be a Christian. I would take my ease, and make the most of this life." How much do such love God and His dear Son? Their religion is utterly devoid of love, unless they grossly misrepresent themselves. It is the truth that sanctifies, and feeds the flame of love; error darkens and bewilders. True Christians love God, and that because He first loved them; not because they fear the infliction of suffering. May the good Lord, for whose coming we look and strive to patiently wait, help us to cast off the yoke of human tradition, and to believe God.

Words Worthy of Consideration.

[The following thoughts, which appeared as an editorial in the "Dundee Record," published at Dundee, N. Y., are full of truth and interest, and the more so coming as they do from the columns of a secular paper, as local papers are not generally supposed to deal in truths of revelation. But it is exceedingly rare, even in religious papers of these times, to find the gospel truth more clearly stated. It is time that one and all of us bear our testimony against all phases of sectarianism and churchainty, and in favor of Bible religion.—w. h. s.]

WHAT IS RELIGION?

We now propose to look for the meaning of the word religion as given by different writers upon language and theology, as well as from those who were appointed by the great Teacher who first unfolded the Christian religion to the world, to wit: The Christ or Anointed. Mr. Walker, who wrote a Dictionary many years ago, says it is a "system of divine faith and worship." Mr. Buck, who about the same time published a Theological Dictionary, says "Religion is a Latin word, derived according to Cicero from religere, to reconsider, but according to Servius from religare, to bind fast. It denotes that obligation which we put on our minds from the relation in which we stand to some superior power." Mr. Webster says, "Religion, as distinct from theology, is godliness, or real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow-men, in obedience to divine command, or from love to God and his law." Mr. Smith, who wrote a New Testament Dictionary in 1812, says, "It means that obligation which we feel on our minds from the relation in which we stand to some superior power. Whatever men think their Creator requires them to believe or do, may properly be called religion or something binding. Pure religion is that principle of righteousness in the heart which leads us to feel bound from love to God to obey what he has commanded."

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 23. WHOLE NUMBER 309.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrie. in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers ex cept where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

THE following Statements and Questions were sent us by our earnest friend, Rev. WM. D. BRIDGE, of the Methodist E. Church.

The RESPONSE is by our beloved Br. L. C. THORNE, who was brought to Christ by the influence of the truth of "No Life out of Christ." Let the Questions and Response be read and pondered well. Br. BRIDGE headed his communication, "HOLY LIVING AND IMMORTALITY THROUGH CHRIST ALONE." He then proceeds as follows:

It has always been granted that there are many men whose religion is deep and sound, who are utterly heterodox respecting many received, scripturally-defended, views. The heart trusting in Jesus may fail of earthly orthodoxy but have the orthodoxy of "Life everlasting."

Hence we believe that very many Unitarians, Catholics, Universalists, etc., are "right in the sight of God" spiritually, though utterly rejecting what to the majority may seem to be "Bible truths."

The great test after all is: "By their fruits ye shall know them." And the very best method of bringing any given doctrine to judgment is by critically and candidly examining the fruitage it yields.

As a believer in the natural immortality of the race, and therefore denying the fundamental theory for which the HERALD OF LIFE is published, I have long wished that some keen, philosophic and thoughtful analysis of the results of the preaching of the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ" could be made; and if possible by some person of broad views, who has been so situated as to see the plain results attendant on the preaching of the opposing views.

1. Does the preaching of the doctrine of "Non-Immortality save through Christ" produce deeper convictions for sin, awaken backsliders more effectively, stir the sluggish in man's nature more surely, develop a more faithful, trustful, consistent piety more rapidly and permanently than the doctrine of Man's Inherent Immortality?

2. In any given place, at any given time, by pastors of contiguous churches laboring with equal zeal and fidelity, will the results of the first doctrine preached equal or surpass the second? We must not view this question from the stand-point of a sceptic, but from that of one who is at least religiously inclined, and desirous of attaining to a "knowledge of the truth."

3. There are quite a number of laborers, evangelists we may call them, now connected with those popularly denominated "Life Believers," who were formerly Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist, Dutch Reformed ministers. Can they give us the carefully analyzed results of their ministry, when laboring under the influence of both their former and their late views?

4. Can the revivals of religion among Methodists and Baptists be parallelled, in power and frequency, among Life Believers? I ask this question for light. I am led to doubt the power of the doctrine in question to convert souls. I am led to think that when a man is brought to believe that sin's penalty is "extinction of being," that there shall be no "conscious suffering for sin," that when he dies it is the "end of him," he will say to himself, "Who cares then? I am to suffer here, perhaps, pain, agony, remorse, terror, hunger, thirst, disgrace, poverty, the taunts, and judgments of men; but by and by I'm to be freed from these forever, no matter how dire and dark and damning my sin;" and so rush on madly, recklessly, ruthlessly.

I may be in error in this conviction; indeed I hope I am. I may be under a sad delusion in respect to the natural tendency of the preaching of the doctrine under discussion; and if I am I shall most cheerfully receive light and knowledge from those who are the best circumstanced to give it. I am quite sure that many holding, with myself, to the doctrine commonly received among the orthodox churches, view the necessary results of the doctrine under discussion as I have viewed them. Are we right, or are we in most egregious error?

We would not vilify our brethren in Christ; far be it from our intent; but we look back to the time in French history when men rabidly proclaimed, "Death is an endless sleep," and strode on in their wild carnival of fury and blood. And now the same doctrine (though now given us in the interests of religion), asks of us a candid reception. Can we accept it?

We can, yea, we must, yea, we will, if by its fruitage it can vindicate its divine origin. Is it equal to this task? And we are compelled to inquire, Has our orthodoxy prevailed so astonishingly despite of one utterly false ingredient in its "system of doctrines?" Have we been building our tabernacle on the false foundation of an illogical Immortality? Are we now about to revise our views, and cordially love that which we have cordially hated?

In our search for light we are candid and in earnest. It is the wise man who changes his convictions when induced by superior light: the fool never changes. Though we should guard against the false view that "change is itself improvement."

5. We return, then, to our primal question: What are the results of the preaching of that doctrine, for the assertion of which the HERALD OF LIFE is published?

I am acquainted with believers of the doctrine who are very humble and holy Christians. I know some who are generally acknowledged as "living epistles of piety." But I also have been saddened by the acquaintance of some whose vitality as Christians lay in the direction of theological polemics, discussion and irony.

Brethren, we all profess belief in Christ. Let us show the Christ-spirit, love, joy, peace, freedom from supercilious egotism, and that charity which vaunteth not itself, thinketh no evil, etc.

Striving to be found worthy of the Resurrection of the Just, I remain

Yours, in Christ,

WM. D. BRIDGE.

RESPONSE TO BR. BRIDGE BY L. C. THORNE.

We have never known but one standard of appeal in determining questions of doctrine. In making up one's judgment as to what is revealed truth, it is eminently wise to have examinations both begin and end with the word of God. If a doctrine is sustained by the plain import of inspiration, let it be henceforth a part of our living faith. If, on the other hand, it is found not to be thus sustained, let it be forthwith rejected, for we must not be "wise above what is written."

It is claimed by the author of the article now under consideration, that "the great test after all is, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' And the very best method of bringing any given doctrine to judgment is by critically and candidly examining the fruitage it yields." Jesus has instructed us, "by their fruits" we shall know whether men are true or false prophets; whether they serve the world, or are "soldiers of the cross;" whether they live after the flesh, or whether they, "through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body;" in short, whether they are true or false to their professions of loyalty to Christ; but that a man's life is a proper "test" of the truth or falsity of his faith is a proposition which, in view of well known facts, suggests its own refutation. There are infidels who walk uprightly; whose dealings with their fellow-men accord with the principles of justice and right; who labor zealously and sacrifice largely for the good of others; men who judged by their intercourse with their fellow-men, might almost be thought to love their neighbors as themselves. Does the purity of their life afford proof of the truth of their belief? But it may be urged that despite all this they are ungodly. We are willing to grant it, but such a judgment cannot be based on impropriety of conduct. Then there are men in every religious denomination who hold, theoretically, the doctrines of their respective churches, but whose lives are the very opposite of those described, and who are a shame, a reproach, a disgrace to the cause of religion. Are such lives a "test" of doctrine, a proper ground of its admission or exclusion? If among advocates of any system of doctrines, a more perfect development of vital godliness is found than exists among votaries of opposing ones, the fact must indeed constitute an argument in favor of those doctrines, but cannot establish their truth. All will admit that such a standard of appeal is imperfect, and consequently improper, for, failing in some cases, it is unreliable in all. Besides, what finite mind can measure with any thing like precision, the religious experience of a given number of Christians?

In replying to the first inquiry, it would seem presumptuous to speak confidently. We believe an affirmative answer to be the correct one. Those who hold to the Bible view, as we believe, of man's nature and destiny, may be divided into two classes, viz: such as were previously professors of religion, and such as were brought to Christ through embracing the doctrines. Of the latter class is the writer. We have heard very many of both classes relate their experience, and the former universally testify that they never so fully beheld the matchless love of God in giving "His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life," as since they have learned the hopeless and lost condition from which that love would rescue them. That so much deeper and purer flows the precious current of love now than before; so much more effectively are they enabled to labor; so much more "faithful" and "trustful" do they feel to have become that their increased "joy in believing" is poured forth in the expression, "we feel we have been converted anew." Some of the latter class say, "when, as in protracted and other meetings instituted for purposes of revival, we were day after day and night after night warned to accept Christ lest, dying, we should be cast down into hell torments, the torturing, frightful horrors of which were set forth in the most soul-harrowing terms the preachers were capable of constructing, we were frightened, and we said we would serve Christ. We were new converts, and we felt happy in being counted on the Lord's side. But soon we began to contemplate with more calmness our new experience. Our fears only had been aroused, no love to God incited. We did not and could not fully believe God would inflict such objectless punishment upon his creatures, and so when our fears were allayed, we turned our backs upon the church and went again to the world, plunging the more deeply into its follies from having, as we supposed, tried religion and found it a bauble. But when we learned our mortal nature, and that all who will not accept the blessed offer of eternal life, God, in the infinity of His love, proposes to put back into nothingness from whence they were taken, and so finally have a universe free from sin and evil, we could not do other than love so good a being. When, added to this, we considered what it was God gave His Son to save man from; when we thought of the sufferings of Christ; His labors; the gross and accursed indignities He meekly bore; His extreme anguish of Spirit during that awful night in Gethsemane; His death on the cross, and all to save men from death, the very fountain of our love was stirred, and we said, "take us Lord, and do with us as thou wilt, make of us what thou wilt, only give us grace to glorify thee, to exalt the name of Jesus and proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to dying, perishing men." Others again, assure us they could not accept the endless-torment doctrine, and, not knowing but that the Bible taught it, they rejected both it and the Bible as equally unworthy of credence. "When," say they, "we learned the truth, how we have not eternal life in ourselves, but must lay hold on Christ now if ever we get it, our hard heart melted, we flew to Jesus as our only refug, and went humbly to the throne of Grace." Not a few of God's precious ones who labor in our ranks, were wrested from the clutches of infidelity.

To the second query, we answer, the circumstances suggested have not and probably will not ever exist. But suppose they did exist, and such a trial should be made, and it should transpire that three times as many persons should be converted under the preaching of no future life except through Jesus Christ, than under the preaching of inherent immortality (the proportion is about what we think the result would show), it would prove nothing. Future life only through Christ would still be true, not because of its success, but because taught in the word of God. Therefore, "to the law and the testimony," etc.

Query 3. We suppose they can. If they should do it and the result favored the former, is W. A. B. sure he is competent to make due allowance for the power of prejudice against whatever is unpopular? Does he know all the difficulties incident to the early struggles of every reform. Is he able to determine the ratio in which reform movements gather strength? If he is, we will endeavor to put him in a position to inform us how long it will be before the doctrine of natural immortality will no longer be advocated by the Methodist church. It is only a question of time, if the Lord come not soon. As the persons in question are God-fearing, truth-loving servants of Jesus, the fact that they continue to prosecute the work, renders it quite fair to presume they have "carefully analyzed" the matter and are satisfied.

Query 4. We think not. As a body, we do not believe in attempting to frighten sinners into repentance, nor do we seek the aid of animal excitement in winning them to Christ. We take the holy Scriptures, and by them show sinners their condition and necessities, and then preach to them "Jesus and the resurrection." Some time since, we heard a Methodist minister publicly lament, that of those converted during seasons of revivals, a great majority backslide. As a Methodist preacher, the experience of Br. W. A. B. may not be very dissimilar. With our people steadfastness is the rule, backsliding the exception; and, from what we have already said, the reason is obvious.

Our brother's last direct query is, "What are the results of the preaching of that doctrine (he should have said doctrines), for the assertion of which the HERALD OF LIFE is published?" We will note some of them. Only a few years ago the doctrine of unending torments in hell was frequently and eloquently preached in every, so-called, orthodox pulpit. Ministers vied with each other in picturing the terrors of hell, and the sufferings of the damned. People, the young especially, were scared by the spectre of the seething cauldron which ever hovered before them, making, says one, "society tiresome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful, and life itself a cruel bitter." The "fear of hell made some melancholy, others mad," few, if any, it is safe to say, better. Parents were represented in heaven rejoicing and taking sweet delight in the spectacle of their own offspring writhing in the racking pains of the infernal abode, and were thrilled with ecstatic joy as they beheld "every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of hell's unutterable lament." Now, such stuff is seldom preached at all; never as formerly. Then, logical minds were constantly being driven into infidelity by the inconsistencies of modern theology. Now, that tide of evil is rapidly being turned and infidels reclaimed. Then the character of the God of love was grossly libeled, by imputing to him acts of unutterably fiendish cruelty toward weak, finite subjects of his creation. Now, though the tongue of slander is not silenced, it speaketh less folly, and its poison is counteracted. These are glorious "results" accomplished by the proclamation of those doctrines maintained by the HERALD OF LIFE, but many others, equally glorious are being attained. Labor we "in vain, in the Lord?" The great and important truth, too, of the second coming of Christ, faith in which the inherent immortality theory had well-nigh destroyed, is being again established, and is inciting believers to greater faithfulness, and to more perfect development of Christian virtue.

To mortifying the lusts of the flesh. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth."—Col. iii. 4, 5.

To obedience and purity. "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as He is pure."—1 John, iii. 2, 3.

To spiritual mindedness. "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ."—Phil. iii. 20.

To earnest watchfulness. "Let your loins be girded about, and your light burning. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching."—Luke xii. 35–37. Nay, it incites to all faithfulness as watchmen upor the walls of Zion proclaiming "glad tidings of good things."

Our good brother cites the old French infidelity which not only denied Christ, but any future life, and he says, of "No Future Life except through Jesus Christ"—"And now the same doctrine asks of us a candid reception." Is this true? Has it even the semblance of truth? Is he ignorant in this matter? He mentions the fact that those infidels held "death is an eternal sleep," and he understands us to hold to "Life from the Dead through Jesus Christ;" and yet he avows them to be the same. So then it follows, that when the apostles went abroad and preached "Christ and the resurrection," they preached infidelity. We also preach Jesus and the resurrection. We cast the mantle of charity over the assertion, and humbly ask its author to think again and more wisely. He says he is "acquainted with believers of the doctrine" (Immortality only through Christ, and that by a resurrection from the dead, or change, if living, at his second coming), "who are very humble and holy Christians, . . . 'living epistles of piety.' But I have also been saddened by the acquaintance of some whose vitality as Christians lay in the direction of theological polemics," etc. We certainly would rejoice with joy unspeakable, if all "believers of the doctrine" were "living epistles of piety." But this we cannot expect. There was a false one even among "the twelve." And Jesus said, "It is impossible but that offences will come." Our friend has doubtless found many in his own society, whose lives are a reproach to the cause of religion. From the foundation of the church there have been, and unto the end of time there will continue to be those who, though making a high profession, walk not after the Spirit but after the flesh. "Perils among false brethren" were far from being the least of apostolic trials; and such there are to try the true disciples now. When we see such exhibitions by those trained under popular theology, which tends to excite fear rather than encourage love, and precludes all approach to a proper conception of divine goodness, we do not so much wonder. But when we see people who have been introduced into the full glare of gospel light, and have purged their faith of God-dishonoring, soul-cursing error; when we see men thus enabled to contemplate God in His true character of infinite love; when we see men who, by a knowledge of gospel truth, are so fitted to properly appreciate the Redeemer's work on earth that the fire of that "perfect love which casteth out fear" should be kindled in them, and, burning, should purify the mind and bring it into subjection to the divine will, causing the Christian graces to shed their holy lustre upon every act of life; when we see people so richly blessed and yet lukewarm, unloving and grossly inconsistent, or mere cold-hearted zealots, we are amazed. It is a mystery we make no attempt to solve, but, sorrowing, leave it with Him who knoweth all the secret thoughts of men.

The only salutary quality claimed for the natural-immortality-and-torment doctrine consists in its power of appeal to the passion of fear—fear of suffering. We hold it axiomatic that the fear of torment is not a worthy motive for obedience. It incites no love, and a religion without love is a corpse. He who repents simply or mainly through fear of suffering is ready to recant whenever that fear is removed, and to withdraw the little love to God which may have been kindled within him.

Is the doctrine said to be reasonable and easy of belief? Dr. Dwight, Congregationalist, says, "There are, I know, persons who speak concerning future punishment with an air of cool self-complacency, as being, in their view, easy of investigation and free from embarrassment. I am inclined, perhaps uncharitably, to give them little credit for candor, clearness of intellect, or soundness of character; and greatly doubt whether it has been investigated by them." Bishop Newton remarks, "Imagine creatures delivered over to the torments of endless ages, without the least hope or possibility of redemption. Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it with God and goodness." Prof. Hudson has well said: "That which is too fearful, is unfeared. Very few, if any, really apprehend that they may live in anguish forever. Hence there is, if all are immortal, a natural hope of final mercy and salvation; which renders the doctrine supposed to be so fearful and safe, a dead letter, and an opiate."

Orthodoxists, so called, would hardly teach an untruth, knowingly, for the sake of any supposed salutary effect upon sinners. But they do teach a penalty for sin which is not taught in the Bible. If they believe the Bible teaches it, why do they not show us where? We have never seen it proved from Scripture, nor heard of its being done. They assume it after first assuming the immortality of the race, a doctrine never once mentioned in the Bible, and yet one that is as important for man to know, if true, as is the existence of God. Dr. Proudfit says, "That best and brightest of revelations . . . announces, not an immortal soul, but an immortal man." Olshausen says, "The Bible knows not either the expression, 'immortality of the soul,' or the modern doctrine of immortality." Again: "The doctrine of the immortality of the soul and the name are alike unknown in the entire Bible." Watson, the great Methodist, testifies that the natural immortality of the soul "is contradicted by the Bible, which makes our immortality a gift dependent on the will of the giver." He also calls the doctrine "an absurdity," and further says, "I have read volumes on the nature of the soul, but I have no scruple in saying I know nothing about it. Hoping as I do for eternal life through Jesus Christ, I am not disturbed at my inability to clearly convince myself that the soul is or is not, a substance distinct from the body." Of course he must know nothing about a theological soul when the Bible gives no countenance to such an existence. When men try to put words into the mouth of inspiration, themselves and their readers will always, if honest, be compelled at last, like Watson, to confess ignorance respecting the subject of their presumptuous attempts. It is dangerous to speak at all when God has not spoken; but to speak against God, how awful! The gospel message is love; and the religion of the Bible is love. But a characteristic of this religion of fear is that it supplants the religion of love. One proof of this is the remark, made by many Christian people, "if I believed extinction of being to be the sinner's punishment, I would not be a Christian. I would take my ease, and make the most of this life." How much do such love God and His dear Son? Their religion is utterly devoid of love, unless they grossly misrepresent themselves. It is the truth that sanctifies, and feeds the flame of love; error darkens and bewilders. True Christians love God, and that because He first loved them; not because they fear the infliction of suffering. May the good Lord, for whose coming we look and strive to patiently wait, help us to cast off the yoke of human tradition, and to believe God.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

WORDS WORTHY OF CONSIDERATION.

[THE following thoughts, which appeared as an editorial in the "Dundee Record," published at Dundee, N. Y., are full of truth and interest, and the more so coming as they do from the columns of a secular paper, as local papers are not generally supposed to deal in truths of revelation. But it is exceedingly rare, even in religious papers of these times, to find the gospel truth more clearly stated. It is time that one and all of us bear our testimony against all phases of sectarianism and churchainty, and in favor of Bible religion.—W. H. S.]

WHAT IS RELIGION?

We now propose to look for the meaning of the word religion as given by different writers upon language and theology, as well as from those who were appointed by the great Teacher who first unfolded the Christian religion to the world, to wit: The Christ or Anointed. Mr. Walker, who wrote a Dictionary many years ago, says it is a "system of divine faith and worship." Mr. Buck, who about the same time published a Theological Dictionary, says "Religion is a Latin word, derived according to Cicero from religere, to reconsider, but according to Servius from religare, to bind fast. It denotes that obligation which we put on our minds from the relation in which we stand to some superior power." Mr. Webster says, "Religion, as distinct from theology, is godliness, or real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow-men, in obedience to divine command, or from love to God and his law." Mr. Smith, who wrote a New Testament Dictionary in 1812, says, "It means that obligation which we feel on our minds from the relation in which we stand to some superior power. Whatever men think their Creator requires them to believe or do, may properly be called religion or something binding. Pure religion is that principle of righteousness in the heart which leads us to feel bound from love to God to obey what he has commanded."

Mr. Jabes Chadwick, a man of sound scholarship, deep piety and much experience, who wrote a New Testament Dictionary in 1849, says, "It comes from a Latin word signifying to bind. Hence, it describes the obligation which we are under to God and men. That which defines, settles and enforces this obligation, is true religion in theory; and that which carries it out in the life is practical religion."

Mr. Wesley says, "Opinion is not religion. True religion is the discharge of all duties required by God toward him, or our fellow-men." We might extend this quotation, but will forbear.

A good and just man called James, one of the Apostles of the Great Teacher, says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

From all these definitions it is plain that religion does not consist in a belief in any creed, articles of faith, discipline, or formula whatever, and the whole subject is plainly and fully expressed by another Apostle when he declares that "God is no respecter of persons, but out of every nation under heaven, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

It is not one name or another that is taken into account. It is not this or that sentiment. It is not soundness in the isms of any particular creed, or formula of speculative doctrine, but it is he that simply believes in God, and in his (God's) Son as a Savious, who, knowing the will of God, as revealed by his Son, does the same with an eye single to the glory of God, or fears (i. e., reverences) God, and does what he in his word requires of him, or as before quoted, "works righteousness."

When we look into the perfect law of liberty as given us in the New Testament, we see many things which "the Christ" taught, which are not generally practiced at this day, and many which his Apostles have enjoined by his authority which are passed over as forgotten, or discarded by the great majority of the Christian world. For instance, "When thou makest a feast call (or invite) not thy rich neighbor, or the great, the popular, or those of renown, because they will invite you to their feast and you will receive your reward, but call the poor, the maimed, the blind, such as are not in condition to make a feast and invite you." Is not this a requirement of him who taught as man never taught? Is there any one among us who observes this rule? Does not the Apostle say "be careful to entertain strangers?" Does he enjoin "hospitality?" Does he not say, "forget not to entertain strangers?" And does he not enforce it by saying, that in so doing some have entertained "Angels unawares?" Are these requirements heeded? What does one of the Apostles say about there coming into an assembly of Christians, one clad in fine raiment—and you say to him come sit here in a good place (in a cushioned seat if you please), and another comes in who is clad in coarse, poor, or as he has it, "vile raiment," and you say to him sit yonder at my footstool? Is it not a fact that it is often the case that a purer heart and a brighter character is found in a person of rough exterior, and a ragged or thread-bare garb, than in one who is decked with jewels, and dressed in all the exquisite finery and gaudy fashions of the day?

Does not another Apostle tell the women of the church how to adorn themselves? Are his instructions regarded by the professing women of the present day?

The Christian religion is the same in essence the world over, and if its votaries were only influenced by its spirit, many of the divisions of the day would be discarded. If the spirit of true religion prevailed, and if all who profess Christianity were actuated by the spirit of Christ more, and the spirit of sectarianism less, we should soon see a different condition of things around us.

But as matters now stand, it is rather unsafe even in this Christian community, for any person, male or female, to live up to and carry out the principles of Christianity as taught in the law which Christ gave to the world. He says, "When thou givest an alms do not sound a trumpet," i. e., do not make a display, no, "do not let thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." If you give, give to the needy, not in ostentation, but silently, secretly, and quietly, and yet how few obey this injunction, and if they did, and their course were revealed, how soon would the hissing tongue of slanderous gossip open its foul battery, and give an unholy and improper bias to the affair, and these slanders are as apt to originate from those who profess religion as from others. Pure motives are often sadly perverted by such individuals, and hence the dangers attending such action.

PRAYER is a retirement from earth to attend on God, and hold correspondence with him that dwells in heaven. The things of this world, therefore, must be commanded to stand by for a season, and to abide at the foot of the mount while we walk up higher to offer up our sacrifices as Abraham did, and to meet our God.

HE that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my son.

WM. H. SALSBURY, South Foster, R. I., writes: The battle is not ended yet, and we are not discharged from the war. We keep the life question in front of the battle; and Christ being our LIFE-GIVER, we are bound by the grace of God, not to surrender until we are discharged by the LIFE-GIVER himself. We need some of your tracts. Please send us some.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 16, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

HOWEVER interested any may be to fix on the definite time of the second advent of our Lord, and however plausible any theory of time may appear, let it be remembered that all such depend on historical facts or events about which historians either do not agree or are liable to mistakes: and further, those facts are not within the reach of a multitude of sincere Christians. Beside all this, the errors of the past, are an admonition to caution in the future. It is not enough that a writer or preacher can make his theory appear clear; let it be tested by those as capable as himself to bring forth facts. Let none come to hasty conclusions, however plausible the argument may seem. Hasty conclusions often preclude candid and impartial investigation, and make work for bitter regret. Let us keep the love of Christ's return alive in our hearts, but not allow ourselves to be hurried into the belief of a definite time for the event: wait till the most searching test is made of it.

"QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS."

THE first page of our paper, this week, contains matter of more than ordinary interest, and will well repay a careful reading. Our friend Wm. D. Bridge, of the M. E. Church, has presented questions on the influence and effects of the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ," and he is responded to in a calm and Christian manner, which cannot fail to interest, by one who knows the power of the doctrine to engage, arouse and lead to Christ the LIFE-GIVER. His experience, alone, if we had no other evidence of the value of the doctrine, outweighs all speculations against its utility. Hundreds of others, yea, we might say thousands, can testify to the same facts, that while the "orthodox" theory of inherent immortality and its eternal torments has failed to interest them in the subject of religion, and was driving them farther and farther away from it and the Bible, the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ" has aroused their attention, and induced them to examine the Bible, and led them to Christ for life. In proportion to their numbers, we have no fears for a comparison of their Christian characters and lives with any other class of professed Christians.

True, we do not resort to the very questionable means of making a multitude of "converts" employed by some who claim to be orthodox, such as sending out "Praying Bands," erecting "Mourning Benches," and otherwise striving to frighten men: for what? To make them love God? Is that it? We fear not; it looks much more like making men dread God, and profess submission to Him, lest He should torment them eternally. We say this, because not a few of them, among whom are professed ministers of the Gospel, say, "If I believed your doctrine I would not serve God another day." Mistaken souls! They are not aware that it may be said of their service of God, now, if they speak the truth of themselves, as God said to ancient Israel by the mouth of the prophet, "When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; . . . the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even your solemn meeting. . . . Your appointed feasts my soul hateth . . . I am weary to bear them: and when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear you."—Isa. i. 12–15.

Why should God be pleased with prayers and a service which is offered not for any love to Him, but through fear that He will torture them endlessly, if they withhold it? "Truly, they have their reward:" they will be saved from the torments they dread, because such do not exist under the government of God; but as they did not serve God from love, they have no claim on Him for eternal life, and they will come short of it; they did not, and would not come to Christ that they "might have life." They only wanted to be saved from the theological hell. They have that, but fail of life, and sink into the Bible hell, and "utterly perish, like natural brute beasts."—1 Pet. ii. 12.

THE CHRISTIAN PASSOVER, OR LORD'S SUPPER.

IT is known to most of our readers that our views, and those of a large number of our friends, are, that the proper time for celebrating the event of our Lord's death is the anniversary of the event, like all other commemorative events; and that a more frequent use of the Supper tends to diminish a sense of its importance and utility, as it destroys to a great extent its memorial character. An anniversary celebration of great or important events has been practiced in all ages; but none think of doing it except at the annual return of the time of the thing celebrated. Even the advocates of a more frequent celebration of the event of our Lord's death than an annual one, would think it out of place to celebrate His birth except at its anniversary, and so of many other celebrations. We are not, however going into the argument now.

The friends of the annual remembrance of our Lord's death, in and about this city, will meet for that purpose Friday evening April 15th, this year; probably at the Cooper Institute, where we have met several times before. If there should be any change of place, due notice will be given in the HERALD OF LIFE. We hope to see a goodly number present on the occasion, and trust the season will be one of no less interest than the last year, which was most refreshing to many. It is the "Lord's table;" and none are excluded who choose to unite with us on the occasion. "Let a man examine himself and so let him eat . . . discerning the Lord's body."

THE WICKED DEAD.

WE had such a mass of other matters to attend to that we could not give attention to our friend Waggoner last week. W., on page 23, says, "According to Mr. Storrs' own showing, that dispensation (Adam's) or probation ended with that 'one transgression,'" etc. "But," says W., "the sentence was not executed for nearly one thousand years after that judgment." He adds,

> Then, I inquire, was Adam on probation during the many hundred years that he lived after that sentence was pronounced? I think he was; but if so, he was, of course, under a new probation. But if not, then there were over nine hundred years of Adam's life for which he was not held accountable! I cannot discover any warrant, either in Scripture or reason, for his being "made alive to be judged over again," so far as that "one transgression" is concerned for which he was judged, but I do discover an evident reason why he should be judged for the actions of a long life that he lived after that first judgment. And they must admit this conclusion, or deny that Adam had a second trial.

Let our friend W. prove, if he is able, that Adam had a "new probation" for eternal life. That is the point where he has no evidence but his own "I think he was." He must remember his thinking so does not prove it. We "think" Adam had no such "second probation;" and the fact that God excluded him from the tree of life "lest he take and eat thereof, and live forever," shows God's purpose that Adam should not have eternal life, and hence gave him no second probation for that purpose. Adam's doom was settled, as to its finality, unalterably so; hence W.'s assumption passes for naught.

If Adam was not "under a new probation," says W., "then there were over 900 years of his life, for which he was not held accountable." Will W. tell us what law Adam was under, which made him accountable after he had been tried and condemned to return to the ground, out of which he was taken? Give us one text of Scripture that sustains such a position. Can he do it? Do not give us any of your "think" so's. But W. thinks it is surprising to suppose Adam lived 900 years and "was not held accountable!" It is *un*accountable to suppose a man who is under sentence of death, that admits of no remission, is nevertheless on trial liable to another death!

After Adam's sin, his death was a fixed fact, from which there was no appeal, and no let up; but the time of his execution the LORD kept in his own hands and in his own power; he could be executed at any moment. His good behaviour might put off the day of execution, but could not reverse the sentence. His love of life would be likely to lead him to a course of living that would lengthen out his days, and it seems it did so for 900 years, and then the penalty was executed. He had no "second trial" for eternal life; from that he was forever excluded when cut off from the tree of life; and let W. prove the contrary if he can. We "think" he will find "immortal soul" in the Book of God, as readily as a second or "new probation" for Adam, with the possibility of a future or eternal life.

Paul tells us, "the first man is of the earth earthy:" and he adds, "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy."—1 Cor. xv. 47, 48. He gives us no intimation that Adam the first, had more than one trial; even as the second Adam had but one. One trial settled the result for each of them personally. The first Adam was the head of an earthy race, who, with their father return to the dust from whence they came. The second Adam is the head of a spiritual race, who are begotten in this life, by the word of truth and the Spirit of God, which Spirit raised up the Christ from the dead, so that He was "the first-born from the dead;" and those who believe in Him, and receive of the same Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead, will also be born from the dead, "at the last day," and, "neither can they die any more," because, "they are the children of God, being children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 35, 36.

The first Adam's posterity were "made subject to vanity," or corruption "not willingly;" i. e., not by their own act, but, "by reason of Him who hath subjected in hope" such as inherit from Adam mortality; in hope of a revival from death by a union with the second, or LIFE-GIVING Adam. The first Adam did not and could not come into the class of those "subjected in hope;" for he sinned willingly and wilfully; and Paul saith, "Adam was not deceived,"—1 Tim. ii. 14; he sinned without excuse, and was rejected from eternal life, as we have seen, by an entire exclusion from the tree of life. He lived an animal, enjoying what such a nature is capable of; but death without hope was ever before him. He had "willingly" subjected himself to it, while his posterity "were made subject" to it "not willingly but by reason of Him who subjected" them "in hope." There is a wide difference between Adam's death and that of his posterity; yet his posterity by their personal sins, or refusing to "lay hold on the hope set before them," may make their death as hopeless as that of Adam's. The hope of the "Glad Tidings" is the "hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promised before (chronon aionion) the ages began," or a long time ago.—Titus i. 2. And again, "The Lord Jesus Christ our hope."—1 Tim. i. 1. Once more, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope (or, a hope of life) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."—1 Pet. i. 3.

The hope is for those who were made subject to death "not willingly," or by their own act; while Adam's subjection to death was by his own will; and his posterity confirm themselves in death by their "willingly" rejecting God's long-suffering and offer of Life-eternal. In this way they accept and make their own death the same doom as that of Adam. Their death state is confirmed and made eternal by their willing choice of sin, preferring it to the obedience which God demands.

As to Eld. Waggoner's general argument from the Scriptures, we see nothing that needs a special reply. We consider our works on the subject already before the public, sufficient to meet all that he has said. We may notice some points hereafter. He has followed suit with the "Crisis" in publishing in an "appendix," our old argument against the non-living of the wicked dead, written twenty years ago, when we "verily thought we ought to do many things contrary to the name" of life future and eternal only to those in Christ. Well, if our "swaddling clothes" of baby-hood suit them, they can wear them; they are entirely too small for us; for when we "became a man, we put away childish things." So, we trust, will they, by and by.

INHERENT IMMORTALITY.

REMARKS BY L. C. THORNE.

WE are informed that the pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of this place, in a sermon which he recently preached, took occasion to assert that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is found on every page, in every chapter, and in every verse of the Bible. We might be inclined to admit such boldness of speech in defence of a cherished dogma, did it not reveal a very pitiable ignorance of Bible teaching. We say pitiable ignorance because we cannot think the Rev. gentleman is dishonest. Let us see about this matter.

"But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" (dying thou shalt die. Margin.) —Gen. ii. 17. The serpent said, "ye shall not surely die;" and modern theology triumphantly reiterates it, preferring to believe him rather than God.

"Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish." (The Psalmist is speaking of ungodly men) . . . "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them." (Now the contrast.) "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."—Psa. xlix. 12–15. Theologians say, souls do not go into the grave.

"The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Prov. xxi. 16. Modern theology says, "they shall not remain in the congregation of the dead."

"For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything . . . also their love and their hatred, and their envy is now perished."—Eccl. ix. 5, 6. Theologians say the immortal soul is what thinks, loves and hates; and inspiration says, love, hatred, and envy will perish.

"O Lord our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us. . . . They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish."—Isa. xxvi. 13, 14. Dr. K———, holds up his hands in horror, and affirms it is not so.

"Behold all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. xviii. 4. Again. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—verse 20. Modern theology says, the soul is immortal and cannot die.

"For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. iv. 1. Modern theology says they shall not burn up, and both root and branch shall continue forever.

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish."—John x. 27, 28. Modern theology says all men have by nature, eternal life dwelling in them.

"And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have eternal life." How will they get it? Hear Jesus; "I will raise him up at the last day." But suppose men will not believe on Christ. O, says modern theology, Christ will raise them up nevertheless; and as to eternal life, they have that already.

"Which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality."—1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. But enough. Here are a few texts in which the doctrine of inherent immortality is not found. The xvth chapter of Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians, fills more than a page of most Bibles. That is a page on which, and a chapter in which there is nothing that can possibly be tortured into support of the doctrine in question.

Finally, we deny that the doctrine is taught anywhere in the Bible, and we call on the learned doctor of the Second Presbyterian Church, to prove his statements. The columns of this paper are open to him for that purpose. If he makes the attempt and fails in it, he certainly will not fail to learn some things that will benefit him greatly. If he succeeds, he will do much good by convincing some of his fellow-beings of error, and besides we will present him one thousand dollars to help build that new church he is so eager to have erected. Now good neighbor Dr. K——, if the Bible is so full of the doctrine as you would have your people believe, here is a golden opportunity. This is an age of wonders. What such men as Richard Watson, Herman Olshausen, Archbishop Whately, Bishop Tillotson, Dr. Proudfit, and a host of the other learned and so called orthodox Bible students have failed to find in the Bible at all, this zealous champion of a fast waning doctrine finds in every part of it. Christ hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. That life and immortality is only to be had by forming, during life, a living union with Christ the LIFE-GIVER; and it will be conferred by a resurrection from the dead at the second coming of our Lord. Life from the dead, is the gospel glad tidings. Resurrection from the dead is the gospel hope; and though we have attended church in this place a large portion of the time for the past four years, we have not once heard it preached. Think of that! Why, the Apostles constantly insisted upon it, and suffered for it. It, and the second coming of Christ was the burden of apostolic preaching; now these topics are seldom mentioned. They have given way to mere human fancy. Better seek wisdom, and learn to declare the "counsel of God."

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

LAID OVER TILL NEXT WEEK.—We had written in reply to Dr. Litch's article on the "Rich Man and Lazarus," in the "Advent Herald;" but as we were giving it to our compositor we received Br. Wendell's communication in which he speaks on the same subject. As both could not go in this week, we lay ours over till the next issue.

NEW ENGLAND JOTTINGS.

THE LIFE VIEWS IN MERIDEN.—Bro. Emory J. Whitehead, in a letter dated the 1st inst., writes as follows:

"There is a good interest on the doctrines that we hold. I have heard of some that were convinced of the truth the Sunday that you were here. Mr. K—— [a merchant] told me that he believed the doctrine that you preached when you were here (I don't know whether he had ever heard it preached before or not); he also said that if you were going to preach here all the while he should attend our meeting. One young lady in the city, who used strongly to contend for the immortality of the soul, said, after you got through, that she did not more than half believe that she had an immortal soul. A gentleman, who has attended our meetings more or less for two or three years, brought his brother-in-law to meeting with him when you were here; and he was convinced also of the truth we hold. And so it goes. I feel that we are doing our duty for this city. We will show them the truth, and if they reject it they do it on their own responsibility."

SPRINGFIELD.—Rev. Dr. Ide, the eminent and learned Baptist pastor, recently preached a discourse in opposition to the views that the righteous sleep between death and the resurrection. Bro. W. N. Pile heard the sermon and took notes of it; and I learned from him at the time that he thought of replying to it publicly. This it seems he has now done. Bro. Thomas R. Weaver, under date of 1st inst., writes me:

"Bro. Pile reviewed Dr. Ide at the Opera House, last Sunday evening, on a discourse he preached January 30th—'The Righteous dead—do they sleep?' We had a good house, and an excellent discourse from Bro. Pile."

CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE DEAD.

Dr. Litch, in the Advent Herald of the 9th inst., has an article on "The Rich Man and Lazarus." He endeavors to show that "Moses and the prophets" taught "a hell of fire, and pain, and sorrow, for the wicked after death." His only citation from Moses is the passage found in Deut. xxxii. 22:

> "For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell [Sheol], and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains."

Dr. Litch comments on the passage thus:

> "The fact of such a fire, burning deep down and setting the foundations of the mountains on fire; and the consumption of the earth's increase by its volcanic overflow, is well known. This God calls, sheol. It is not the grave."

We entirely dissent from this interpretation of our venerable and esteemed brother. A fire which burns "unto the lowest SHEOL" is to our mind a very different thing from a fire which our opponent supposes to be perpetually burning in SHEOL: to the latter idea "Moses and the prophets" give no countenance. As good a comment as we care at present to give on the proof-text under consideration is afforded by the three verses that immediately follow it:

> "I will heap mischiefs upon them; I will spend mine arrows upon them. They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction: I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents of the dust. The sword without, and terror within, shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling also with the man of gray hairs."

The foregoing language plainly enough teaches by what retributive agencies the provokers of God's anger were to be brought down to Sheol. But of suffering in Sheol it gives no hint whatever, and hence yields no support to the penal theory which Dr. Litch so confidently derives from the concluding parable in the xvith chapter of Luke.

Other proofs that Sheol is "a place of sorrow and pain" Dr. Litch finds in "the prophet David." We quote two of his texts:

> "The sorrows of hell compass me about."—Psa. xviii. 5.
>
> "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell [SHEOL] got hold upon me."—Psa. cxvi. 3.

Had our brother, with a determination to be consistent in his interpretation, added to the foregoing the declaration of the apostle Peter (Acts ii. 24), "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death," he would as surely have proved that our Saviour suffered while dead, as he has proved that David inculcates the doctrine of suffering in death. Inasmuch, however, as the Doctor does not believe that Jesus, between his death and his resurrection, was in torment, we must ask him to review the logic whereby he seeks to fasten his view of the condition of the wicked dead, upon his quotations from the Psalms, which we have given above.

On Psa. xviii. 4 ("The sorrows of death compassed me," etc.), we quote from the recent commentary of Albert Barnes:

"The sorrows of death compassed me. Surrounded me. That is, he was in imminent danger of death, or in the midst of such pangs and sorrows as are supposed commonly to attend on death. He refers probably to some period in his past life—perhaps in the persecutions of Saul—when he was so beset with troubles and difficulties that it seemed to him that he must die. The word rendered sorrows—hhebel—means, according to Gesenius, a cord, a rope, and hence a snare, gin, noose; and the idea here is, according to Gesenius, that he was taken as it were in the snares of death, or in the bands of death. So. Psa. cxvi. 3. Our translators, however, and it seems to me more correctly, regarded the word as derived from the same noun differently pointed—hhaibel—meaning writhings, pangs, pains, as in Isa. lxvi. 7; Jer. xiii. 21; xxii. 23; Hos. xiii. 13; Job xxxix. 3. So the Chaldee Paraphrase, 'Pangs as of a woman in childbirth came around me.' So the Vulgate, dolores. So the LXX., odines. The corresponding place in 2 Sam. xxii. is, 'The waves of death.' The word which is used there—mishbar—means properly waves which break upon the shore—breakers. See Psa. xlii. 7; lxxxviii. 7; Jonah ii. 3. Why the change was made in the psalm it is not possible to determine. Either word denotes a condition of great danger and alarm, as if death was inevitable."

On Psa. xviii. 5 ("The sorrows of hell compassed me," etc.), Mr. Barnes says:

"The sorrows of hell. Marg., cords. The word here used is the same which occurs in the previous verse, and which is there rendered sorrows. It is correctly translated here, as in that verse, sorrows, though the parallelism would seem to favor the interpretation in the margin—cords. If it means sorrows, the idea is that such sufferings encompassed him, or seized upon him, as we associate in idea with the descent to the under-world, or the going down to the dead. If it means cords, or bands, then the idea is, that he was seized with pain as if with cords thrown around him, and that were dragging him down to the abodes of the dead. Luther, De Wette, Prof. Alexander, Hengstenberg, and others render the word in each of these places, bands. On the word here rendered hell, Sheol, see notes on Isa. xiv. 9. It means here the under-world, the regions of the dead. It is a description of one who is overcome with the dread of death."

Ephesians v. 30: "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." This passage Bro. W. Patterson (in this week's HERALD OF LIFE) thinks "looks very much like an interpolation of some officious transcriber;" and he adds—"Some manuscripts lack this expression."

Bro. Patterson is mistaken, and should have been more careful in statements of fact which comparatively few readers of his article have the means of either verifying or refuting. The entire passage is accepted as genuine by Professor Tischendorf, and by the revisers of the American Bible Union; and I presume Bro. P. has no authority whatever for suspecting the genuineness of the first clause, "For we are members of his body." The two remaining clauses ("and of his flesh, and of his bones") are wanting in several of the oldest MSS.; but so long as they are retained by the highest critical authorities, we shall do well to be careful about imputing them to "some officious transcriber."

BIBLE HARMONY.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

"BUT as God is true, our word (preaching) toward you was not yea and nay."—2 Cor. i. 18. There is a wide difference of opinions among men concerning the doctrine taught in the Bible. For this there may be several causes, one of which is, early education: "Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined." But a wider and more radical cause is a want of a proper starting point, which is only to believe God. If we do really believe Him, we cannot believe his teaching is "yea yea, and nay, nay." Tom Paine's best argument was, The Bible teaches one thing in one place, and exactly the opposite in another; that is, yea and nay.

Now, if this is really so, Tommy is right, and we will all be infidels. But it is not so. Truth harmonizes with the Bible, but error does not. All true religion is based on the seven divine attributes of God: Zech. iii. 9, and iv. 10. They are, Love, Mercy, Wisdom, Goodness, Truth, Justice and Power. Every religious theory or doctrine that comes in collision with one of these is false; even if preached by an angel it is not true; and Paul says, "let him be accursed."—Gal. i. 8, 9. This is a fearful doom incurred by a multitude of ministers of the present day, who are preaching another gospel than that taught by the Holy Spirit, and preached by Paul. Any doctrine that harmonizes with the divine attributes of God, harmonizes also with the word of God; so that no one text can be found to contradict another.

And those who do not make the Bible thus harmonize are giving Tom Paine his best argument, and are aiders and abettors of infidelity, and a grievous sin lies at their doors. To maintain a favorite theory they take a few words of a passage that have a kind of jingle to suit them, irrespective of the context, or of the subject which the words are a part of, and, putting an unfair construction on them, make them give the lie to many other plain texts.

Thus it is inferred that man is possessed of an unending life; giving the serpent the credit of telling the truth when he gave the Lord God the lie, saying, "Ye shall not surely die;" and the lie also to the saying, "mortal man." And from what the Saviour said to the thief, it is erroneously inferred that the righteous at death ascended into heaven alone, making the words of Christ to be untrue, who said, "And no man hath ascended up to heaven," etc.—John iii. 13. See also 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. Again, it is said the wicked, at death, go to a place of eternal torture in fire and brimstone, making the testimony of scores of texts untrue, which say they perish, are destroyed, go to nothing, be as though they had not been, etc.

But the texts relied on to prove these false theories, remind me of a young minister wishing to preach a sermon on the pride of dress, took for his text, "top not come down." These words having the right jingle, he proceeded to trim off the top-nots, ribbons and fine things worn by ladies more for ornament than utility. If any of my readers wish to know where he found his text, they may look into Matt. xxiv. 17, where they will indeed find the words; but they have no more reference to pride than they have to intemperance.

But we have now-a-days many sermons founded on texts as awkwardly chosen, and that have as little reference to the subject under consideration, as "top not come down" has to pride. Here is one, for instance, "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," etc. Now, these words have the right jingle to prove a resurrection of the wicked dead, and we cannot dispute it more than we can the "top not come down."

But as the one has no reference to pride, so the other has no reference to the dead bodies of men.

All men are really dead in trespasses and in sin; and must be raised from that death before they can become righteous; and this is brought about by hearing and believing the gospel. And this is the theme of our Saviour in John v. 21 to 29. To set before the people the fact that he will judge the world by his gospel, which judgment began under his preaching, and the present hour in which it began would be continued until all in the graves (morally dead), would hear, and thereby be judged, corresponding with Mark xvi. 15, 16.

So when the gospel shall have been preached to every creature, all in the graves (the dead in sin) will hear his voice (by the gospel) and shall come forth to judgment; the righteous to life; the wicked to condemnation; that is, to remain in the congregation of the dead (Prov. xxi. 16), and not to see life.—John iii. 36.

Now, in all these things there must be Bible harmony, or they are not true. The immortality of the soul is nowhere taught in the Bible; it is only inferred, and repugnant to plain texts; therefore, not true. Eternal torture also is nowhere revealed, but inferred from a few texts, which inference is a flagrant violation of plain passages, and to the attributes of Infinite goodness and mercy. It will do the sinner no good to torture him forever; do God no good; do good men nor angels any good; besides, it inflicts a wound upon Infinite mercy that never can be healed; therefore, it is not true. Nor will it avail any thing to say Divine justice demands it; for Divine justice has no right to demand what Divine goodness and mercy cannot allow; else there would be war and rebellion among the attributes of Jehovah; and the house would be divided against itself and cannot stand.

The same may be said of raising the wicked to a limited torment, and to another death. It will do him no good, and do no being in the universe any good. Infinite goodness and mercy cannot allow it, therefore it is not true.

And further, it does not harmonize with other texts, such as John iii. 36, Isa. xliii. 17, Amos viii. 14, Nah. i. 9, 10, and others.

And further, it is admitted that the penalty of sin is death; and that in making the atonement Christ suffered it. And the argument has been used, successfully, that the penalty of sin is not eternal torment, because Christ suffered the penalty, but did not suffer eternal torment.

Now, the argument is just as irrefutable, that Christ suffered the penalty of sin, but did not die twice; therefore, die twice is not the penalty. But since Christ died once only, die once is the penalty of sin. This harmonizes with "surely die;" "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." Now it is evident that Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, because it was appointed unto men once to die. And had it been appointed unto men twice to die, so Christ must have been twice offered to bear the sins of many.

But false doctrines will be taught until ministers cease to garble the word of God, and learn to make one text harmonize with another, and with the attributes of God.

One thinks he finds an immortal soul in the text, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." If we supply the grammatical ellipsis, the latter clause will read, "and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it, as it was."

Now if the spirit was not a conscious personality before God gave it, it will not be such after it returns; and so man is unconscious in death, else he was conscious before he was born, and he ought to be able to tell what he was thinking about thousands of years before he was born. But this text, like many others, is taken out of its connection. It stands at the close of the preacher's exhortation to young people, to "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not," etc.

Now, in consideration of our remembering our Creator in our youth, when we come to die the dust returns to dust as it was; and the spirit returns to God who gave it, as it was. It is, therefore, self-evident, that the spirit which returns to God is the spirit which God gives to those who remember him in their youth; and this is the one holy Spirit given to all the good, and to none but the good. So those who are not good have no such spirit given them; therefore they have no such spirit to return to God.

Again, if this spirit is an immortal inner man in all men, and at death it goes to God, all men are happy after death, for "in thy presence there is fulness of joy."—Psa. xvi. 11.

Again, we are told that we do not die here for our own sins, but for the sin of Adam; and in the world to come we are raised to die for our own sins. But this does not harmonize with Rom. v. 12. "Sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

The reason Paul gives why death passed upon all men is, because all men have sinned; not because Adam sinned, and so we die for our own sins.

Divine justice also will not allow a man to be punished with death because somebody sinned thousands of years before he was born. Nor is it true that if the "first man of the earth, earthy," had not sinned, we that are earthy would not, else we who are in the "second man" cannot sin because the second man did not.

The fact is, Adam's sin only proved the quality of all mankind, as if a chemist should analyze one drop of the Atlantic ocean and find it salt. Hence he would have proof that the whole ocean is salt, because the whole is made up of drops all alike.

So of the human family, it is all made up of individuals, born or unborn, and they are all alike; and the first one tried proved a sinner, and that proved them all sinners, for they are all alike, and so death passed on them all, for they equally deserve it for their own sins.

But Bible harmony and sound reasoning are two rare things in the theology of the present day. Men charge God with what they would be ashamed of in themselves. Tell a man he shall be put to death for murder, and then kill him twice, is an outrage that wicked men ought to be ashamed of.

But there is the second death, and sophistically there cannot be a second without a first. This sophistry has the right dogmatic jingle to raise the wicked dead; it is another kind of "top not come down." But the revelator says, the lake of fire is the second death. The lake of water then must have been the first death, for in it all the wicked antediluvians perished, but not to perish the second time, for it would be an outrage on Divine justice to drown them all, and then raise them all to life and burn them alive to pay a penalty which is nothing but death. By the account we get of Peter the first death, or general destruction of the wicked was by water; and that the second death, or general destruction of them will be by fire. For as in the days of Noah, the first death was at the end of the old world, so the second death will be at the end of this, without, in either case, two deaths to one individual. The first death cleaned sin out of the first world by water; so the second death will clean sin out of the second world by fire, and yet no one will die twice.

Besides, first and second do not always have a numerical meaning. Paul says, "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." Now, numerically the first man was Adam, and the second man was Cain, a murderer. But Paul's second man is Christ. Moreover, he makes all mankind the first man by nature; for, "as is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy." And he makes all in Christ the second man; for, "as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." Besides, the devil, the beast, the false prophet, death and hell are all cast into the lake of fire to die the second death.—Rev. xx. 10, 14. And it is quite too much, even for a die-twice believer to admit that the devil, death or hell will ever die twice.

So here we have them; and here we will leave them, in their favorite die-twice theory, to get out the best way they can, without giving death, hell and the devil a resurrection to life.

PAPAL INFALLIBILITY.

THE Pope's great effort to make it out, "I sit a Queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow," (Rev. xviii. 7), seems to be fast working up the fulfilment of the next verse, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

The Pope has made a desperate effort to get the Council at Rome to proclaim his infallibility; but the effort is likely to result in an expose of the hypocrisy and lying that has been practiced by that blasphemous power for long centuries.

We gave March 2d, an article on this subject from a French Correspondent of the New York "Journal of Commerce." Here follows another from the same source. Read, and see if the Harlot is not near her end with her sorceries:

The former letter of the Pere Gratry to the Archbishop of Mechlin, which I mentioned some time ago on the subject of the Council, went through six editions in the form of a pamphlet. This is a very extensive degree of publicity in a country like France, wherein, Catholic though she be par excellence, the subject of the Council is scarcely ever noticed at all by the press, and very little by the public at large. Some of your readers, perhaps, will be interested to learn that the reverend father has published a second letter, and to know something of its contents. It is devoted especially to refute the position assumed and laid down in the Archbishop's recent work on the "personal infallibility," to the effect that, "that doctrine is invested with all the dignity and certainty of a truth which has been confessed and maintained by the greatest theologians of all ages." This assumption, the Pere Gratry affirms, cannot be maintained on the authority of false and fabricated documents; and this he proceeds to show. But what is most curious, perhaps of all, is to learn not only how former doctors of the Catholic church have been cheated by those spurious authorities, but how short a time it is since a learned theologian, like the Pere Gratry himself, has had his eyes opened to the same machinations of craft and falsehood. For instance he says to the Archbishop, that he supposes he accepts such writers as Melchoir Cano, Bellarmine and Liguori, as high authorities in these matters. "Well then," he goes on to say, "I will show you that out of just twenty quotations, neither more nor less, which the first-named theologian makes in his defense of the rights and privileges of the Papacy in matters of faith, exactly eighteen are taken from the false decretals, those very 'forgeries of the ninth century,' of which Pius VI. himself said that 'they might as well be burnt.'" "And," says the Pere Gratry, "Bellarmine has followed Melchoir Cano, and Liguori has followed Bellarmine," so that the authority of any one of these learned doctors is just as little worth as the other. They are all based on pure forgeries.

The account the Pere Gratry gives us of his own astonishment when he first made the discovery of these unscrupulous ecclesiastical peccadillos is almost amazing: "I remember as if it were only yesterday," he writes, "though is is now fifteen years ago, when the work of Melchoir Cano first fell under my eyes and filled me with profound astonishment. I knew nothing then of these "false decretals," except by name, and had never thought about them. But there I found, nevertheless, quotations which made the very earliest Popes, even Anaclet, the second successor of St. Peter, talk and act like a Pope of the middle ages." The worthy father confesses that all his reading and all his former ideas were upset. "But I would never dare even to suspect," he says, "that such a writer as Melchoir Cano could have been so imposed upon." So, for a time he washed his brains and hands of the subject, and determined to think no more about it; and, "it is only just recently," he adds, "that I have taken it up again. But this time," he says, "I have done so with the false decretals in my hands, and then everything becomes plain. . . . . And blessed be that knowledge," he cries, "blessed be that science, child of God, which has thrown light at last into this abyss of darkness, and defended the true faith against its sacrilegious falsifiers.'

But what an extraordinary avowal is this and what an extraordinary position for a learned theologian of the Roman Catholic church to find himself in, all of a sudden, in the present day! The "false decretals," as is well known now, are forged documents pretended to be brought to light in the ninth century, and intended to prove that the Papacy had exercised the universal dominion in all matters of faith, which it was just their only beginning to lay claim to—ever since the days of St. Peter. Nearly the whole exclusive papal authority has been made to rest upon them ever since; and as the Pere Gratry says, their contents have been "elaborately and scientifically worked into every treatise on the subject ever since." And now they turn out to be all moonshine, and, as everybody knows, pure forgeries! These are terrible avowals to be obliged to make of the offences at once, and weaknesses of his own church, by a man like the Pere Gratry, a just divine of the Sorbonne; and he may well "advise all who study these questions to be on their guard against quotations," when he thus shows us upon what "audacious fabrications" we may be relying. "The whole question," he exclaims, "is completely gangrened by fraud." Such is the language now used by a just, modern French Catholic theologian with regard to the personal infallibility now under discussion at Rome; and also as to the entire question of the papal supremacy and the exclusive jurisdiction and privileges of the Roman See, except only as regards its "primacy of honor," or that respect and dignity as the most important See of Christendom, which, he says, we are all ready to admit. Of all the rest he says, that "it is only of the courtisans of one of the apostles who would fain make Christendom believe that that one is everything and the rest nothing." But courage, he cries again; justice, truth, liberty, are being developed throughout the world, and will unite all men of good faith and good will, on the face of the earth. They will come from the North, and from the East, and will stretch out their hands with us toward a new West. The day of knowledge is at hand, and already visits with severe retribution the lies which have so long deceived and divided us, but which only soil the precious vase outside, without being able to injure the treasure within. "That treasure is Christ, his gospel, his real presence among us, repentance, remission of sins; it is the doctrine of the communion of saints, the visible existence of the Church; it is the fact of life eternal, the divine and supernatural life of souls. This treasure is immaculate, entire, certain, indisputable; beyond the reach either of fraud or doubt."

And the Pere Gratry is right. The above is "all" that is really important. The rest is all "but leather and prunella," with its fights between schools and theologies, and politico-religious disputes and questions, and its odium theologicum. If the Council of Rome produced nothing but the above eloquent protest from a French Catholic divine, we must allow, I think, that it has accomplished at least one good work.

FROM ELD. A. GUTHRIE.

BR. STORRS: I have now been in Florida over two months for my health. As long as I remained North I continued to fail and grow weaker; but since I came South there is an improvement for the better. My cough is very slight, and the bronchial irritation is almost gone. This climate in winter is beautiful when compared with New York State; for an invalid can live and breathe in the open, pure, sunny atmosphere, day after day; for there is but very little rain here in winter, and often several days together without a cloud to be seen.

I would not advise consumptives to come to this State after the complaint has passed into the last stages, for a person should be able to take open air exercise of some kind in order to be benefitted; if not, they are better off with kind relatives and home comforts.

I have traveled most of the time since I came into this State and find the land, in seven counties through which I have passed, to be a light sandy soil, adapted only to the tropical productions of this climate.

Some Northern men have tried Northern productions, but in most kinds have failed.

I should judge that not one fourth of the State could ever be brought under a state of cultivation. The land is low and level, and large portions of it are under water in certain seasons of the year. Colonel Hardee, a rebel in time of war, said to me while showing me some poor land a few days ago, in rather a joking way, that they buried the Yankees in their poorest land, so that they never could have a resurrection. I answered, If his theory be true, it would be a greater blessing to the wicked than the old hell torment theory; for then they would always have the penalty of God's law upon them in their poor sandy graves in Florida. He looked at me with some astonishment, and changed the conversation.

Board is very high, and living in any way is expensive; and it would be better for invalids coming to Florida to form themselves into clubs, and bring some of home comforts with them, and then hire a house and a cook if they are not able to cook for themselves; for the people here think it nothing wrong to take advantage of Northern men.

Religion is at a very low ebb among Adventists and others, as far as my observation goes. Your brother still in affliction.

JACKSONVILLE, Florida, March 1, 1870.

FROM MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: As I am on the sick list to-day, I have been looking over our old papers. DEAR HERALD, I love you now much better than I did away back in 1865, and some bits I read to-day seem very different from what they did five years ago. I read them, unknowingly, with "will" in my heart, besides quite an amount of prejudice. Ah well, my wilfulness did not change the truth. Thank God for it. If men could bend the Gospel to their ideas of right and truth, we might fear them. As it is, they can only act out what is in them, and if honest-hearted, will be forced to own themselves to be poor, ignorant beings, dependent upon the Spirit of truth for a right understanding of God's word.

I laid aside my precious HERALD with a tear of joy and humiliation. Reading the solid articles from many of its writers made me humble. At first I thought, O what are my prattlings compared with these! Why occupy space in the paper that can be used to better advantage? Then another thought gave me joy. It was, we are all children of one family; and in my family I not only enjoy the conversation of its "head," but feel at liberty to talk too. And the plain talking of my first-born is no more interesting (though it may be more intelligent), than the little lisped words of our "baby."

Feeling thus, I ask to be listened to once in in a while, dear HERALD.

My hour of reading prompts me to speak a word to the friends out West. I read many urgent calls for preaching in your midst. Read how kindly the brethren East assisted in sending two of our laborers there—Brn. W. S. Campbell and W. H. Hanford. Why are there not more laborers there now? Is the great West an uninhabitable country? Or cannot preachers of the gospel get a living among you?

Now, there are brethren here who labor at day's wages, take farms on shares, and move sometimes three times in a year, from place to place. In each place they sow the seed of truth, and see some spring up and bear fruit. I suppose this is the way preachers must do out West. Who will do it? is the question.

Out there you have the idea that the Eastern field has been amply cultivated. It has, in one sense, filled with weeds. There is hardly a neighborhood in the whole of the Eastern States where it can be said that the whole entire population has had a fair presentation of the gospel. Perhaps in some cases their own bigotry is the reason.

You speak about "going on foot" to fill appointments. There are two classes of preachers here—those who walk when obliged to, ride when they can; and those who are under the protection of Conferences, hence considered orthodox and worthy their hire.

Preachers are not all popular people here. And it is a rare thing for one to get his living without working with his hands for it. Bread and butter that we make and earn ourselves has a good taste, and we prefer it with the privilege of believing and teaching THE TRUTH to eating bread of other men's earnings, without a knowledge of the plan of salvation.

Sister D. C. Corwin's plea for help in the West deserves consideration. Let each one who has the Truth ask the Lord to direct as to where he would have them labor. This is the safe way. How glad I am that God knows in which part of his vineyard to place every one who is willing to work. Often it seems hard to go. We sometimes scarcely get settled in one corner before the way is opened in another direction. We pack up our "little all" and move on. Always find what for; and, praise his name, always see something accomplished that cheers and makes us say, "It pays."

Dear HERALD, tell the hungry Western churches that they are remembered. If the Master sees that they need help he will send some one. May be some among themselves are burying their talent. See to it, and if so, dig it up, and improve it. It don't require many talents to enable a brother to read the Scriptures, talk his faith by the firesides of his neighbors, if the pulpit scares him. Even the sisters can scatter tracts. A few cents will furnish you with better sermons than half the "ordained ministers" can preach.

The last year's experience has showed us the advantage and benefit of scattering tracts. Seems as though people read more than ever before. Certainly they read more of our publications. The reason may be because there is not so much prejudice existing.

Pardon my already too long letter, and believe me, dear HERALD, to be

Your servant and friend.

J. A. HOPKINS, Scituate, R. I., writes: I would let you know that I am in the land of the living, and still receive the HERALD OF LIFE. I love the paper much; have no desire to part with it. I thank the Lord the truth is gaining ground here. One year ago, myself and Br. Salsbury were alone; but now there is quite a little band of us, all praising God, as it were with one voice. O, let us give God the glory.

Signs of the Times.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

Earth's darkness deepens! from shore to shore
Scoffers assume their sinful sway,
And mocking, tell us o'er and o'er,
That there will be no crowning day.

What means the cry that doth arise
And louder grows, as o'er the land,
Is borne from east to western skies,
By a patient, waiting band?

What means the groaning of the earth—
The thundering volcanic roar,
That rises above the sinful mirth
Of a scoffing crowd on ev'ry shore?

In every land, and ev'ry clime,
Gathering storm-clouds doth appear;
Portentous gloom speaks that the time,
So long foretold, is drawing near.

Thousands of saints with watching eyes,
Sadly await the coming day,
When heaven's glories shall arise
And drive this cloud of sin away.

The morning dawns! Glorious rays
Illuminate the eastern sky,
Betok'ning that the promised days
Of Israel's glory draweth nigh.

Two Resurrections.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

[Concluded from last week.]

I believe that the passage in Rev. xx. 4, "They lived and reigned with Christ the thousand years," is very generally read with the preconceived idea, that the "thousand years" is the measurement of the reign of Christ and those who reign with him; whereas, it is only the measurement of the subordination of certain earthly powers, symbolized by "the dragon," mentioned in verses 1, 2, 3, and which will be revived again for "a little season" after the thousand years are ended; and will again exercise a controlling influence over the nations in opposition to the gospel.

It is not even intimated that the reign of Christ either commenced or ended with the thousand years; or that men did not live and reign with him before, and continue to do so after this period; and the object in saying those who "were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image," etc., did reign with him during this period is evidently this: The thousand years subordination of the "dragon" power, being the time of the supremacy of the "Beast like a Leopard," to which the dragon "gave his power and his throne and great authority, Rev. xiii. 2, and during which, "All who dwell upon the earth will worship him [the beast], whose names are not written in the book of life [do not live with him] of the Lamb that was slain from the foundation of the world,"—Rev. xiii. 8. And the time during which "It was given him, the beast, to make war with the saints;"—v. 7, and to kill them because they refuse to worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark—v. 15. And inasmuch as this beast and his worshippers claimed to exercise this persecuting power under the influence of the Holy Spirit, and with the approval of Christ, this statement "They, [the persecuted ones] lived and reigned with Christ the thousand years," is Christ's repudiation of the "Leopard beast" party, and his approval of those who suffered martyrdom for the truth's sake; thus showing the influence they had with him, that although they were few in numbers, without protection from the civil laws, being outlawed, every indignity and insult heaped upon them that bigotry and fanaticism could invent; while thus treated by men professing to be disciples of Christ, with Christ they both lived and reigned. Hence the Revelator says, he saw the psuchos, souls, (lives, or personal characters), of those who had been beheaded, by the leopard beast, because of the testimony of Jesus and because of the word of God, (against the claims and teachings, and works of the beast party), even those who did not worship the beast nor his image, and did not receive his mark on their forehead and on their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ (ta) the thousand years.

THE SECOND RESURRECTION.

"The rest of the dead, that were in the order of things to be made alive, lived not until the thousand years were finished."

I have shown that the first resurrection consists in passing "out of death into life" under the first proclamation of the gospel, symbolized by an "Angel ascending from the sun rising having the seal of the living God," and that this resurrection is the "first-fruits to God and the Lamb."

I will now show that the second resurrection consists in a similar passing out of death into life under, or as the result of, a second proclamation, called "Another angel flying through mid heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach to those who dwell on the earth, even to every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people; and he said with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment has come." Also, that those who have a part in the second resurrection are "a great multitude out of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues which no man could number;" constituting the "harvest of the earth."—Rev. vii. 9–15.

In chap. xx. 6, we read, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; over these the second death has no authority." —Diaglott. This freedom from the power of the second death, is peculiar to those whose part is in the first resurrection; consequently those whose part is in the second resurrection are not necessarily out of reach of the second death, their freedom from such death will be conditional. The first resurrection being the first-fruits to God and the Lamb, are free from the second death because they are "redeemed from the earth," cannot "die any more;" for they are "equal to the angels." Now, this being "redeemed from the earth" being peculiar to the "first-fruits" it cannot pertain to the harvest; the "great multitude." They were not sealed as were the 144,000; neither do they stand on Mount Zion with the Lamb; they only stand in the presence of the throne and presence of the Lamb. Having shown in this and former articles that the words "Standing on Mount Zion," as applied to the first-fruits are not to be understood literally, so also, the words "Standing in the presence of the throne and of the Lamb," being part of John's description of symbolic scene, evidently mean that they had "passed out of death into life" and dwelt in the divine favor. The word "presence" being frequently used in the Scriptures to indicate favor.

It is also evident that the "white robes," with which this great multitude were clothed, do not symbolize immortality, as some teach, for it is said of them, in v. 14, that they "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Consequently, if "white robes" meant immortality, this would teach that they made themselves immortal.

It may be asked, If they are not redeemed "from the earth," i. e., to immortality, to what then are they redeemed? Before answering this question, I will remind the reader of the fact, that they were out of "all nations, and tribes, and people, and tongues," and that just preceeding the judgment, a message went forth to "every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, etc., for the hour of his judgment has come." What effect did this message have on the nations? Ans. A great multitude "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." And what was their reward? Ans. "Blessed are those who wash their robes, that they may have right to the tree of life."—Rev. xxii. 14. "In the midst of the street of it, the holy city New Jerusalem, and of the river, on this side and on that side was there the tree of life . . . and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations (dwelling on the new earth;) and no curse shall longer be;"—Rev. xxii. 2, 3; consequently, the "great multitude out of all nations" are the "nations of them which are saved" and who dwell on the earth after the removal of the curse, and have a right to the tree of life, as Adam did before he transgressed, and as this is after "the death," is cast into the lake of fire, they also, have "passed out of death into life;" but not into the immortal state, else, the tree of life would be useless. They are not "redeemed from the earth," they are "of the earth, earthy," as Adam was before he sinned; but having "passed out of death into life," i. e., passed out from under the sentence of death, they are restored to a right to the tree of life, because they "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." But should they sin "after the similitude of Adam's transgression," death being "the wages of sin," they must die; but inasmuch as "the death," i. e., the first death is destroyed, the death that such sinners will die, will be the second death; from which there can be no resurrection, it being "everlasting destruction." Hence it cannot be said of these, as it is of those having a part in the first resurrection, "On such the second death hath no power." They being redeemed only to that state in which Adam was first created, when God finished his work and called it "very good," they may—like him—transgress the law, and die the "Second death."

Benton Harbor, Mich.

The Antichrist.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

[Concluded from last week.]

We will now look at some of the Scriptures which our brother brings forth to sustain the view that the Man of sin and antichrist are yet to be developed in the future. Our Br. has taken a step farther in reference to the prophecies of Daniel than I have ever before seen. From Daniel xi. 21, to the resurrection is to have its fulfilment yet future; and Dan. vii. 25, and viii. 11, 12; I am sure if I should abandon the past fulfilment of these prophecies, I should become an infidel, and stand on the same ground where I stood in 1842 when "Father Miller" convinced me that the Bible was true. I say "Father Miller," for he is as truly father to me, as Paul was to Timothy. There was nothing but history which prophecy foretold, that ever led me to become a follower of Jesus Christ. Being somewhat acquainted with history, it fastened its truth upon me; and from that day to this, my study has been history in one hand, and the Bible in the other; and the way has grown brighter and brighter to the present day. All our mistakes in time, have only made me search the more for the true date.

Suppose we look at Daniel vii. 25, one of the texts our brother quotes as being yet future. "And he shall speak great words against the Most High," etc. Who is this character? It is the horn that came up among the ten or during their existence. Rome was divided into ten kingdoms at the farthest by A. D. 483. Where are these divisions to-day? Are there five of the original kingdoms in existence to-day? If so, show us the history. Where is the Burgundian kingdom? Conquered in 499 by Clovis, through the direction of the Pope.—Gibbons 38 chap. Why were they plucked up? Because they were Arians. Where are the Goths? Overthrown by Clovis, in 507, for the same reasons. Where are the Vandals of Africa? Subdued by Justinian in 534, by the direction of the Pope, because they were Arians. These kingdoms are counted by all historians as constituting three of the ten. Some make the Ostrogoths, in Italy, one of the ten. Where is that kingdom? It was plucked up in 553 by the Roman General Narces. So we could go on and show that there are but three of the original kingdoms now in existence.

But you may ask, Are there not ten kingdoms in existence that are to hate the whore (Rev. xvii.), and stand up against the King of kings, etc.? That is true; but when do they arise? John says, he was taken by, or in the Spirit, into the wilderness. Where is the wilderness? It is where the woman fled when she was pursued by the Dragon. Perhaps you will say, that is yet future. If so, then these ten kingdoms have not risen; for John says, they have received no kingdom as yet. Mark; John was standing in spirit at this time on the Island of Patmos, but in the wilderness down the stream of time at least to 1764, in my view of the subject, and still further down, if your view is correct. To jump all these facts, which fill the mould of prophecy so exact, and look for a future fulfilment would imply the want of care for the church, on the part of God in not giving some information of this power which has slaughtered from fifty to eighty millions because they would not subscribe to the creed of Chalcedon. If God has given the church any prophecy of this power, where is it to be found except in Dan. and John? Again, how are we to understand Dan. viii. 9, and 23? Out of the division of the Grecian kingdom, came a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, etc. How can it be said that this horn or kingdom, came out of one of these kingdoms, when they have become history hundreds of years in the past? This horn waxed exceeding great; that is, it became more extensive and more powerful than any before it. Grecia was very great, but this horn exceeded that kingdom which conquered the then known kingdoms of the world; and the king sat down and wept because there were no more kingdoms to conquer. There is no kingdom but the Roman kingdom that can or ever will be made that can fill this prophecy.

The view set forth by our brother in reference to the temple to be built in Jerusalem, in which this "wicked one" is to be seated, is one of the strong arguments of the Catholic Church. In the year 527 a noted Bishop, who applied the Man of sin and the antichrist to the pope, was met by an argument from a Bishop of Rome, that the antichrist and Man of sin would come in the end of the world; and that the temple would be built in Jerusalem, where a person would claim to be Christ, and that God would send Enoch and Elijah to witness against him; but he would kill them and their dead bodies would lie in the streets of Jerusalem three days and a half, and then God would raise them from the dead and take them to heaven in the sight of all; after which the Man of sin would be cast down. (Joseph Priestly's Church history.)

No other doctrine on this point was tolerated until the 14th century, when Walter Bute came out and refuted such an idea; but it revived again in England by the "Tractarians," who head the Catholic party in that country. Let us get out of Babylon, so that when she goes down we may shout over her destruction. I would say, if there is wanted any further information with regard to the future antichristian Man of sin, (as they are generally looked upon as one and the same), let them read tract 83, published by the Jesuits, under the name of Puseyites in England, by the Tractarian Society.

Our brother as a logical conclusion of his position, makes all the times and days in Dan. and John days of twenty-four hours. "Consistency is a jewel." I will not refer to the Revelation of John for if it can be shown that the days in Daniel are something more than twenty-four hours, John must harmonize. The word found in Dan. xii., the 1,290 and 1,335, in the original, is yomeem. Although it is the word for days, it is the word for years. Pick, in his Hebrew Concordance, remarks, "The Hebrew word for year is shonah which, as well as the plural, is generally used to express an incomplete year. 1 Kings vi. 37, 38. In the fourth year was the foundation of the house of the Lord laid in the month Zif, (2d month); and in the eleventh year in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house finished. So was he seven years in building, i. e., seven years not completed. Whenever yomeem is used for year or years it expresses a full year or years, as Gen. xli. 1; 1 Sam. xxvii. 7.

Twenty times Pick gives, where yomeem is translated years in the Bible; which is unavoidably so. If Pick is good authority, then the word yomeem, "expressess a full year or years." As we are dependent upon the learned in these matters and on those who understood their own language, there is only that way we are to obtain what 1,290 and 1,335 yomeem mean. Professor Fysh, M. A., in his remarks on these periods says, "It may be questioned whether 1,290 days is the correct translation. The Hebrew is 1,290 yomin. Now if 1,290 days were meant, the Hebrew would have been 1,290 yom, according to the rule in Hebrew syntax which requires that when the numeral signifies any number exceeding ten, the thing numbered be put in the singular number."—Professor Lee's Hebrew Grammar, page 310. The same remark is made in reference to the 1,335 yomeem. We see from this quotation, that if our translators had followed their own rules, they would have been obliged to translate the word years, instead of days. That it would have been correct to translate them years, I appeal to Jewish authority, or to Jews who have in the past written on the periods. It is a notorious fact in history, that the Jews, until our Saviour came understood the periods in Daniel to be prophetical; but owing to their being obliged under their views to admit that the 70 weeks of Daniel related to Christ's first coming, they abandoned their former views, and pronounced a "curse" upon any one who would calculate the weeks of Daniel. For many years the "Talmud" Jews maintained their position on this point; but says history, "In the tenth century the Jews began in the Eastern schools to advance beyond mere Mishnical and Talmudic studies. The Cabbala now employed their thoughts, and caused them to break forth from the prohibitions which the Talmud had pronounced against calculating the time of their restoration. Along with other principles of calculation they were led to take Daniel's days for years. Saadis in that country, and after him, Jarcha, Gerson, Gadaliah, Hannani, Ben Nachman, Bachai, and others, reckoned 1,290 and 1,335 years from the destruction of Jerusalem, and concluded that Messiah will come about the middle or end of the fourteenth century."—Religious Magazine, Feb., 1828. Mark the language of the historian: "Break forth from prohibitions of the Talmud," which forbid them from considering the times in Daniel to be years, as they were in the habit of doing. There would be no use of making a "prohibition," if that was not so.

We see then, in consequence of the Jewish Rabbis domineering over their people that the true meaning, of Daniel's times, were perverted to suit their purpose. In like manner, the Catholic church has endeavored to do with those periods that relate to them. If we follow Pick, and the rules laid down by Professor Lee's Hebrew Grammar, and the understanding of Jewish writers of the 1,290 or 1,335, that if properly rendered, they would signify so many years.

Deceived.

How many there are in this world who have bitter reflections, because, from their unsuspecting natures they have been the subjects of the deceiver in his many forms. The village, the town, the city, have each their villains lurking throughout. By day and by night they ply their impious trade, and with all cunning they entice the unwary into their dens, or promise so fair to make your fortunes by some late invention, so novel and so cheap that all who see the article will be induced to purchase. Thus by flattery and lies they live.

It has been my fortune to see for myself, what I am about to write, which I do to admonish some who perchance may read this.

Twenty-one years ago when I came to New York, (in which city I have been less or more intimately mixed up in business) there existed, and for years did exist, an institution known as "Mock Auctions." Their principal trade—if trade I may call it—was in selling watches to the unsuspecting, who induced by glitter, were led into three dens to bid on what seemed the "real genuine," but to their great chagrin soon discovered the worthlessness of their purchase; and, what was worse the utter worthlessness of the seller; they had been deceived. The next thing for the sold one, was to seek help from the police, who sometimes helped the sufferer by making the cheat to disgorge. This condition of things went on until a noble soul indifferent to threats or bribes, sought the position of special constable; and by persistent effort brought most of these institutions to grief. But there are other frauds who indeed lie in wait to deceive. Their name is legion; and those who should visit this wicked city had better be on a sharp look out for such. It is always well to solicit the help of the police should the stranger wish to find some street. There are those who use all adroitness and by misdirecting lead the unwary astray; the help of the police therefore can well be called for.

Quite recently I was applied to by a stranger living in the far West, to inquire the standing and reliability of a Sewing Machine Co., who were advertising a sewing machine for "five dollars." On receipt of this amount they promise to send a machine. Their promise is all promise; for, on inquiry, I found no such company existed, and they doubtless had robbed many poor, honest people, deserving better treatment. The object I have in writing this is to forewarn, so that all may be fore-armed to shun all auctions or down stairs jeweler's stores on Broadway.

The Sister's Lesson.

"Kitty Somers, do get down! You're always fussing about something! What are you after now?"

"Only trying to hang my bonnet up," said Kitty timidly, taking her seat by the speaker, who was her sister Helen.

"Now see if you can't be quiet until we get through!"

Helen had spoken in a low voice; but Mrs. Callen heard every word. She went on with the lesson however, without seeming to take any notice. School was soon over, books put away, and bonnets tied on. As the children were leaving, Mrs. Callen said gently, "Helen Somers, I wish you would let Kitty go home with one of the other girls. I want you to stay and have a little talk with me."

Helen opened her eyes in some surprise, but only answered, "Very well, ma'am!" and, turning to Kitty, said, "You must go with Rose. And mind you don't get your clothes torn or muddied; for if you do you'll have to take the blame yourself when you get home."

Poor Kitty hung her head, and holding Rose's hand, walked soberly away.

When they had all gone, Mrs. Callen said, "Now Helen, I will get my work and we'll go out under the trees, where Willie can play on the grass while we talk."

The rough log school-house stood in the midst of a beautiful grove; and they soon found a pleasant seat under a spreading beech. Willie was placed on the grass, with some stones and acorns for playthings, and Mrs. Callen taking up her sewing, commenced the conversation by asking Helen how many brothers and sisters she had.

"Only Kitty," said Helen. "We had a brother once, but he died when he was a baby."

"Do you know any girl who is an only daughter, Helen?"

"Yes ma'am, Rose A——, has no brothers or sisters."

"Does she ever wish she had them?"

"Oh, yes! If you could only hear her talk, Mrs. Callen! She says it is so lonely at home. She hasn't any one to play with, except when some of us go to see her, and she gets tired of her dolls, though she has a beautiful baby-house and three wax dolls. She cried one day when I was with her, and said she would give all the world to have a sister. I told her she wouldn't say so if she had one. I'm sure Kitty is more plague than any thing else to me. She bothers me the whole time; and I told Rose if I only could, I'd give Kitty to her in a minute. She's always in the way. If I sit down to read an interesting book she's sure to come up with, 'Please Helen fasten my frock?' or, 'Tie up my hair?' or something of that kind. When I go out, I always have to drag her after me, and when I'm studying hard at my lessons, she wants me to stop in the middle to show her how to do a sum or find some place on the map."

"Kitty is a delicate-looking child," said Mrs. Callen, slowly. "Perhaps she won't live very long; and then you will be rid of the trouble."

Helen gave a startled look at her teacher. She had never thought before of Kitty's death.

"What a relief it would be!" said Mrs. Callen. "You might read as many books as you chose, without danger of disturbance from her timid little voice; for she is always timid in speaking to you. It is easy to see she is afraid of you."

Helen looked frightened and rather angry.

Mrs. Callen went on:—"You could study so nicely if you were entirely alone, and you could always go by yourself to church and not be annoyed by the patter of her little feet. To be sure I should think it would be lonely to live so, but then I loved my sister."

"Oh, Mrs. Callen," cried Helen, bursting into tears, "don't talk so! Do you think I don't love Kitty?"

"I should certainly think so if I judged by your manner toward her," said Mrs. Callen gravely. "Now let me tell you some of my history and you will see why I wanted to have this talk with you. I was the eldest and had four brothers and one sister. I thought as you do, that they were so many plagues. They were all much younger than I, and I kept them at a distance. If they ever ventured into my room, they were sent out for fear they would 'spoil the furniture.' If they made any request of me, the usual answer was, 'Don't bother!' As for coming to me with their childish troubles, to confess an act of carelessness or ask sympathy for a pain, they would go to any one else before their eldest sister. My mother would reprove me gently for my conduct, but she only received rude answers in return. When I was seventeen, it pleased God to touch my heart and make me a Christian. When I had learned to love my Saviour, my heart warmed toward my fellow-creatures, and first of all to my own family. How I wished then that I had taught my brothers to love me years before! My sister was a baby but my brothers were old enough to have felt my coldness again and again. However I resolved to try. I no longer kept my brothers out of my room, but often invited them to come in with their books or drawing. I would tell them stories, and encourage them to give me an account of their plays and studies. I prayed too, you may be sure, that God would help me to win their love. Oh Helen one of the happiest moments of my life was when my little brother Allen came to me, and putting his arms around my waist, for the first time, told me in a whisper how he had carelessly broken a plate. Once I would have pushed him away, with, 'You good-for-nothing boy! You're always breaking something!' But then my heart was full, and I could only kiss him, and say, 'You must be more careful, Ally.' I found as you say, Helen, that it was sometimes annoying to have to stop in the midst of my work to mend a broken kite or look for a missing cap; but I prayed against the impatient feeling, and it left me. Cannot you see that I must have been a thousand times happier, knowing that I earned the love of my darling boys, than when I lived for my own pleasure alone?"

"Oh, Mrs. Callen," sobbed Helen, "I do want Kitty to love me! Is it too late for her to learn?"

"No, Helen: she has a loving heart, and will be only too happy."

"And you don't really think she will die, do you, ma'am?"

"No: she looks delicate, as I said; but I think she will outgrow that."

"Then," said Helen, earnestly, "I will make her love me if I can; and I will pray to God, as you did, to help me and teach me not to be selfish and cross."

"Do so, my dear child," said Mrs. Callen, "and you will succeed; for you have the promise, 'Commit thy way unto him, and he shall bring it to pass.'"—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 260 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

HOW DOCTORS DISAGREE.

A FEW weeks since a foul murder was committed in Brooklyn. R. S. STORRS, D.D., spoke at the funeral, and made some intimation that the murdered man was taken away by the hand of God. The precise form of his expression, we do not know; but it called out some strictures in a Methodist pulpit, in this city, which are thus reported in one of our city papers:

The Rev. George A. Hubbell, pastor of the Warren street Methodist Episcopal Church, made the Voorhees murder the subject of his morning discourse, for the purpose of taking issue with the Rev. Messrs. Storrs and Carpenter, as to whether or not the hand of God was in this crime.

He took for his text Job, xiii. 7: "Will ye speak wickedly for God, and talk deceitfully for him." The gentleman spoke of the common practice of referring to God's providential relations to human crime and sorrow, making Him the author of our calamities, thus perverting theological truth, and intensifying human grief. He then referred to the murder of Mr. Voorhees, and quoted the language of the clergymen who officiated at the funeral, in which they represented God as being the author of the great calamity—the murder. He objected to these as failing to give comfort to the mourner, and depicted in feeling terms the scene of the tragedy, the cause and consequence, denying that it was by God's will, but by the man's own folly. It was an egregious wrong to attribute the killing to God, who was all love, but to the perversity of man, and illustrated it by some affecting incidents. The doctrine that makes God the author of sin is hyper-Calvinistic, or Calvinism carried out to its logical sequences. The germs of these doctrines exist in the fatalistic notions of the heathen, which were introduced into Christian theology in the fourth century, by Augustine, and thence spread through all Papal Europe. The Reformers—especially the French and Swiss—did not get ully free from these fatalistic errors, and, through Calvin, they were introduced into the Protestant churches. The gentleman then gave extensive quotations from Calvin's institutes, Westminster Confession and the Saybrook Platform, as setting forth the doctrines of Calvin on this subject, which doctrines he endeavored to refute—1st, by charging upon them the logical consequences which make God the author of sin. Messrs. Storrs and Carpenter say that the Voorhees murder is of God. It follows then that the will of God was done in this case, and the murder was proper and right. Chambers, the murderer, was a mere instrument in the hand of God, just as the pistol was an instrument in his own hand for accomplishing the deed. Hence no guilt attaches to him, and we ought not to censure, imprison or hang him for the murder, for the will of God was done by him. The Holy God decrees sin. The loving father is a particeps criminis in the great crime. God says, "Thou shalt not kill," and then causes the man to be a murderer. These consequences of the premises laid down are repugnant to the moral and rational instincts of every man, at war against all divine and human distinctions between innocence and crime. They strike fatal blows at the foundations of law and order. They destroy both the inward recognition and the outward obligations of virtue. They make God a monster to be hated and resisted, rather than to be loved and obeyed. The doctrines thus inculcated are abhorrent to the better nature of their authors. Calvin speaks of the decrees as horrible; but Dr. Carpenter says "the murder is of God, but such things ought not to be;" and Dr. Storrs half admits it to be sacrilege to think of God as having a part in this great crime.

The gentleman then entered at some length into the Scripture argument against these Calvanistic doctrines, closing with kind remarks toward their authors, but with great severity commenting on their errors.

We trust that, one of these days, this Methodist preacher, and many of his brethren, may be led to see that by their doctrine of inherent immortality and eternal torture "they make God a monster to be hated and resisted, rather than to be loved and obeyed." We have no doubt "the doctrines thus inculcated," of inherent immortality and eternal torture, "are abhorrent to the better nature of their authors." May the good Lord soon deliver them from such heathenish conjectures, hatched from Pagan superstitions, and brought into the Christian church perhaps as early as "the fourth century."

IT makes all the difference, whether we pursue a certain course because we judge it right; or judge it to be right because we pursue it.—Bishop Whately.

HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF REV. XVII. 8.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

"The beast thou sawest was, and is not, and yet is, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition."

THERE are two things to be observed in this text. 1. Where was John when he was shown this vision? and 2. The description of the beast which he saw.

1st. John was taken away in spirit into the wilderness. Where was he taken from? From the Isle of Patmos, where he had seen all that had been communicated to him before. Again: where is the wilderness? In chapter xii. we read, "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place where she is nourished for a time and times and a half time from the face of the serpent." Then John stood between the beginning and ending of the time here given. As it is generally admitted that this time corresponds with Daniel's time, times and half time that the saints were given into the hands of the little horn or Popery, which I fully believe; therefore when John saw this vision he must have been, in point of time, near the end of those days or years. It is in consequence of not taking our stand-point with John, in reference to time, that has been the cause of the many mistakes given in interpreting this chapter.

2d. This beast is said to have been before John was taken into the wilderness; and, of course, the history of the beast so far as "it was and is not," must be found somewhere prior in history. The only way that we can ascertain when this government was, is to take the photograph of the beast that John saw, and travel back from where John stood, and see if we can find a beast or government that corresponds. One of the peculiar features of this beast was scarlet, or as the Syriac renders it, a "red beast of prey." The only red beast found in this book is in chap. xii., which is called "a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten crowns." So far then the symbol fits, as all expositors admit that the dragon symbolizes the old Roman government. So the symbol of a beast is a symbol of a government: therefore, a dragon and a beast are the same, so far as prophecy is concerned. God would not have given us these colors of the beasts unless it was to localize them, as we learn from Daniel's prophecy. The moment that we do not observe this rule, given by inspiration, we are without a rudder or compass to guide us in our study of prophecy. We need such a guide, for man is speculative, fanciful, and will be able to show a tolerable good interpretation; but when we compare the photograph, we find there is not a complete likeness; something is wanted, or something is added, and therefore it will need some rectifying. I shall have occasion to notice some of these points before I finish this article.

There is no possibility of arriving at the truth on this point, unless we strictly confine ourselves to the explanation given of symbols by inspiration, for the different changes that the Roman empire underwent, all which is given either in Daniel or John, and the locality marked by the symbols used by the prophets. We will drop the symbols, and take it for granted that the dragon means the old Roman empire.

There is one feature connected with this beast, that "was and is not," if we can locate, it will help us to understand, perhaps, more clearly, who this government was. She had committed fornication with the kings of the earth. That is, she had forsaken her lawful husband and chosen the kings of the earth in his stead. Says history, "The sceptre and the sword were committed to the hands of Moses, of Joshua, of Gideon, of David. The same extraordinary providence which was no longer confined to the Jewish people might elect Constantine and his family, the protector of the Christian world, and the devout Lactantius announced in prophet tone the future glories of his long and universal reign."—Gibbon, chap. xx.

Here we see, by the year 313, the church became idolatrously connected with the kings of the earth, and from that time to the present, the sword has been connected with the Roman church. When I say, Roman church, I mean particularly old Rome; for Constantine was then emperor in old Rome, for he had not removed the seat of government to Constantinople, which was eleven years afterward, after reigning seventeen years in Rome. This Christian empire, and not Pagan alone, is known by the symbol as the dragon, as we shall see when the change comes, noticed in prophecy as "the beast that was, and is not," etc. In 476 the dragon, or old Rome, gave his seat and great authority to the leopard beast, or New Rome, or Grecian Rome, as it is termed in history. Romulus Augustulus, who was then emperor, being pressed by the "bold Barian," Odacer, king of the Herulia, the emperor, with the consent of the Senate, transferred their power and seat in these words: "We solemnly disclaim the necessity or even the desire to continue any longer the imperial succession in Italy, since in our opinion the majesty of a sole monarchy is sufficient to pervade and protect at the same time both East and West. In our own name, and in the name of the people, we consent that the seat of the universal empire shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople."—Gibbons.

Well, says one, that was only changing the seat of government, the kingdom was still in existence. I will here quote from E. B. Elliott's letter to Dr. Keith in 1848 on this point. "Was not even Odeacer's destruction of the imperial authority in the Western empire, A. D. 476, sufficient, in your judgment, to put an end to the term of Old Rome's supremacy? At that time the power and glory of Rome, as bearing rule over any nation, had become extinct, when she who had ruled over nations, sat in the dust like a second Babylon, and there were no thrones where Cæsar had reigned."—Pages 62, 63.

If this does not satisfy the most credulous, it is because they are "dyed in the wool." Here we have a kingdom, symbolized by a red beast, gone out of history for a time. The power and great authority transferred to John's leopard beast, a symbol of New or Grecian Rome. For 324 years this kingdom was not; and after that, it is, and is to ascend out of the abyss. For a kingdom to ascend out of the abyss it must first get in. Without going into an argument to show what a symbolic abyss is, I will assume that it is a false religion, as is generally admitted in Rev. ix. Charlemagne is called "the restorer of the Roman empire."

Upon what condition was he crowned with the crown of the Cæsars? and by whom was he crowned? These are important questions, for if this is fairly settled it proves two things—1, When the dragon went into the abyss; and 2, What kind of chain he was bound with. In the year 800, on Christmas day, when Charlemagne entered St. Peter's, "Leo (the Pope) suddenly placed a precious crown on his head, and the dome resounded with the acclamation of the people, long life and victory to Charles, the most pious Augustus crowned by GOD the great and pacific emperor of the Romans. The head and body of Charlemagne were consecrated by the regal unction after the example of the Cæsars. He was saluted and adored by the Pontiff. His coronation oath represented a promise to maintain the faith and the privileges of the church."—Gibbons.

Mark the condition here named—an oath that he would support and "maintain the faith and the privileges of the church." Suppose he did not keep his oath. The God (the Pope) that crowned him would send him where he sent Justinian 236 years before, i. e., to "eternity of hell fire." There could be no stronger chain forged to keep mortal man in his place than a fire of that kind. I thank my blessed God that it is only the Pope's and his daughter's fire; and that is yet future, when the beast and false prophet will be cast alive into it, and burned up. This may be called a digression from the subject. It may be read in parenthesis, for I could not keep it out without smothering my feelings.

I will now remark that we are informed by history that every emperor that was crowned with the crown of the Cæsars was crowned by the Pope, and was obliged to take the oath administered to Charlemagne until Bonaparte (one thousand years afterward), who sent for the Pope to crown him with the crown of the Cæsars, and while the Pope was in the act of putting forth his hand, Bonaparte took the crown in his own hand and placed it on his own head, and exclaimed, "I am Cæsar, I am Charlemagne. You attend to the spiritual things. I will attend to that which belongs to Cæsar." From that day to the present no imperial crown has been conferred upon any one; but there is a king of Italy which now claims that prerogative, which is a subject of prophecy, as I purpose to show.

I wish now to notice the symbols connected with this beast that "was and is not," and was in the abyss when John stood in the wilderness. This beast had seven heads and ten horns. The horns are explained to be ten kingdoms; but the heads, on which the woman sat, are said to be mountains. Many are inclined to make these mountains literal hills, upon which the city of Rome is built. It would have been as easy for the angel to have said hills, if he meant hills, as to have said mountains. Here is a symbolic beast, symbolic woman, symbolic horns, and the symbolic woman sitting on literal hills. The idea seems to me to be ridiculous. But, says one, that is the explanation of the angel. I would ask, does not the angel in this book explain symbols by symbols? In speaking of the two witnesses it is said, "These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth." Suppose we make these literal. It is equally the explanation of the angel as that in the seventeenth chapter. Other places might be brought forward, but this is sufficient to show that we are not always to make things literal, especially when connected with symbols of governments.

Again: some say that these heads are symbols of forms of governments, and are the same as the seven kings mentioned in this connection. One consideration is sufficient to show that cannot be, although it originated with a learned expositor. The woman sat on these heads. Five of these heads, according to their showing, had passed away before the woman was in existence, and therefore she could not have sat upon them. These are the two prominent views set forth. I propose to consider them as symbols of governments.

The Lord said, by the mouth of Jeremiah, of old Babylon, "Behold I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyeth the whole earth;" and he declared that he would "make thee a burnt mountain." The stone that strikes the image is to become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. Mountains are often in Scripture symbols of governments. In considering the history of the world, in connection with the church, it is our duty to consider those prophecies given by Daniel and John, and make them harmonize. Daniel prophesied that the Roman empire would be divided into ten kingdoms, and three of those ten would be plucked up by the roots by a horn that should come up, diverse from the ten. All admit that John speaks of this horn as being the mouth to the leopard beast, in Rev. xiii., which was to make war on the saints the same length of time. Can we suppose that John would notice this much of Daniel's prophecy, and leave us in the dark in reference to the division of the Roman empire? although he may add something that Daniel did not see.

The Roman empire was divided according to prophecy by A. D. 476. When Romulus Augustulus gave his seat and great authority to Eastern Rome, there were nine kingdoms into which the empire was divided; and he, Romulus, stood the representative of the truth, or one of the ten, and was the head that received the deadly wound, and was healed again in 800, when Charlemagne was crowned. The two-horned beast commanded them "that they should make an image to the beast that had a wound by the sword ("by the bold barbarian Odaocer," in 476), and did live." Three of these kingdoms were subverted by or through the direction of the Pope. There is one thing certain, the Pope would not kill his own children. I say children, because France is called the "eldest son" of the Catholic church. Mosheim speaking of the division of the Roman empire says, there were three kingdoms that were Arians; the Burgundians, in Burgundia; the Vandal, in Africa; the Goth or Ostrogoth, in Mesia. If we turn to history, we find that the Burgundian kingdom was subverted by Clovis (the eldest son), in 499.—Gibbons ch. xxxviii. The Ostregoths or Goths by Clovis in 508.—Gibbons. The Vandal were plucked up by Justinian, by direction of the Pope, in 534.—Gibbons. The remainder, the seven, were supporters of the Pope during the time that the imperial power was not, until the restoration of that empire in 800; therefore the position that John saw the woman sitting, upon these heads, is rightly explained by saying that these seven governments or kingdoms supported the Pope for 324 years, until the restoration of the Roman government in A. D. 800. The Pope received his chief support from these kingdoms.

Eastern Rome was not in a situation to protect the Pope, if she was disposed to do so. There were sixteen emperors of the East from Justinian's time until the Pope was crowned king of Rome; nine of these sixteen were not friends of the Pope, and several he excommunicated. The question will be asked, "How about the leopard beast which had seven heads and ten horns?" The Roman kingdom when it was consolidated with Eastern Rome was in its divided state, and of course, the symbols must be transferred to the leopard beast, or the history of those kingdoms which is so intimately connected with prophecy would be left out; therefore, the transfer makes it necessary to place those symbols of heads and horns upon the leopard beast until another change came, which is noticed in prophecy, until the restoration of the imperial power of Rome.

TRUTH VS. TRADITION.

THE question propounded by Pilate to our Lord Jesus Christ—"What is Truth?" still remains an open question, and still retains all its moral significance as much so as when it was first propounded. All true Christians believe the Bible to be the truth of God, while a great many professing Christians believe tradition rather, though it invalidate the plainest teachings of the word of God. Our creed, our creed, say they; and they are far more zealous in their efforts to bring the Bible down to their traditions, as received from the fathers, than they are to make their traditions harmonize with the Bible, and in many instances display a shameful lack of Bible knowledge, while they vainly strive to bolster up their man-made theories.

It was said of Apollos, he was "an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures;" and it may be said of many at the present day (truthfully, too), eloquent, and mighty in tradition; true, they select a few words of Scripture to serve as a basis, or starting point, rather, but if closely observed, their basis or starting point is left entirely out of sight, while they pursue a subject of their own devising, and finally reach conclusions that are in direct opposition to the Scripture they have selected for the occasion. We are aware that this may seem to be a very heavy charge, and lacking in that charity that "thinketh no evil," but if the charge is not sustained, then we stand ready to take back every word, and with deep humiliation of heart, ask our Heavenly Father, for the sake of His Dearly Beloved Son, to pardon and forgive us for uttering them. But are they true? "To the law and the testimony," meekly and reverently let us approach this divine record, and earnestly, and honestly, and diligently compare its teachings, with the traditions of men, and solemnly resolve to let God be true, if every man is a liar; and in our investigations of divine truth, our conclusions must be reached from the plain, simple, undeviating statement of the truth as revealed in the sacred Scriptures; and the first question that naturally arises is, "What is man?" and the answer to this question is found in the following account of his creation:

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, (please remember this, it was not something to put man into) and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man (the being made of dust) became a living soul."—Gen. ii. 7. Mark, it does not say that God formed of the dust of the ground a prison house, a shell, a casket, a mortal coil, and placed a jewel called an immortal soul within it, which was the man himself! No, no; tradition teaches that, but truth says, man was made of dust, and when breath was introduced into his nostrils, he became a living soul. According to this record of divine truth, it does not puzzle a man's brain much to arrive at a very correct understanding of what constitutes a living soul. An immortal soul is something formed in the school of tradition, and forms no part of the teachings of divine truth, and cannot be found in the Bible; so we leave tradition to find its origin. Having found this truth, that "man is a living soul," we shall pursue his history as presented by truth.

"And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 16, 17. Marg. ("dying, thou shalt die.") Now, tradition tells us that this word "die" means—first, "spiritual death," second, "temporal death," and thirdly, "eternal death." And to settle the matter beyond controversy, (among themselves at least) they flatly deny that death destroys man's conscious being, but only makes him more intensely alive than he was before he died; so that in fact it amounts to just this—there is no such thing as death, according to tradition. Compare this with Gen. iii. 4, and you have found the origin of an immortal soul. "Ye shall not surely die." Now the truth assures us that man as a living soul, was made the subject of a law, the violation of which involved the living soul in death. This living soul violated the law, fell under the penalty, and must die. Now, does truth throw any light on the meaning of this word die? We believe it does, and that too in harmony with known facts. The definition of this word "die" is found in this sentence, "dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return;" and to set the matter beyond successful cavil, God says, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden to till the ground from whence he was taken."—Gen. iii. 22, 23. Now let us be willing, candidly and honestly, to look this passage full in the face. If man was created an immortal being, then how could his exclusion from the tree of life, or his expulsion from the Garden of Eden prevent him from living forever. What can these words "eat and live forever," mean? Is it not as clear as language can make it, that the perpetuity of man's life depended upon his eating of the tree of life, and that being thus deprived of eating of its life-giving fruit, his life (apart from the tree of life) must waste away and finally terminate in death—death being a return to the dust from whence he came? "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," may be a very humiliating and unpalatable truth to proud and selfish man. But God declares it so; and neither can the combined wisdom of philosophy, science, or a false theology alter it; and the simple reason is found in the fact, that man is a mortal being, and as yet, is only a candidate for immortality. If he gives diligent heed to the Word of God, he may, "by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality," and thus gain "eternal life." But if he refuses to give heed to these things, then his mortality terminates in death, and the man "perishes in his own corruption," and his "corruption can never put on incorruption," nor his "mortal put on immortality;" nor can the triumphant song of victory ever escape his lips, but having gone "to the generations of his fathers, he shall never see light;" and here we need no theological tinkering to tinker up an immortal soul. Such a thing is not admissable, because not found in connection with the "living soul." Men are living souls, and living souls do die and return to dust; and every one who has not lost his reason, knows this is true to the letter. Now how do men die, according to the teachings of divine truth? We have seen that man was made of dust, with the breath of life infused into him, making him a living soul. Well, if God made him what he was, could he not also unmake him? To deny this, is to deny his omnipotence; and surely no sane man would be willing to do this. But how does man die? Answer. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; and in that very day his thoughts perish."—Psa. cxlvi. 4. No tinkering here if you please. Just let it stand as inspiration has recorded it, and let men see the truth—that rebellion against the divine government, involves the eternal loss of their being, and remands them back to dust. "Their breath may be in their nostrils, but their foundation is in the dust;" the truth of God declares it so; and every time death arrests one of our fellow-beings, we know that is his destiny; hence we consign the man (no longer a living soul) to the dust of the earth from whence he came; and this is truth itself, tradition to the contrary notwithstanding. But again we read, "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." Died? Yes! he, that is Adam, died. Hands off, tradition! This text settles the wonderful problem of that strange, "mysterious" thing or state called death, and leaves tradition in the mist of Pagan philosophy, to solve the problem of that which never yet had an existence, that is, an immortal soul. May the votaries of this Pagan doctrine be led to embrace the truth, that "God only hath immortality," and will bestow it as a free gift to all who by patient continuance in well doing seek for it." We have traced the history of our first parent from his creation to his death, and have utterly failed to find one word about "immortal soul, deathless spirit, never-dying soul, and a death that never, never dies;" and neither can they be found in any verse of any chapter, of any book in the sacred Scriptures; if so, let the votaries of Pagan philosophy produce them.

Standing, then, upon this solid basis of eternal truth, that man is wholly mortal, that the sacred Scriptures reveal to us but two kinds of life, each separate and distinct in their nature and duration—the one, "the life that now is, and the other, the life which is to come," we feel perfectly safe in declaring to all men, that the life that now is, cannot by any possibility be extended beyond the boundaries of death—death is the end of dying, as well as the end of life, and for man to use up the life that now is in utter neglect of the life which is to come, is to make it a moral necessity that he should be forever deprived of life, and never come into being again, "but remain forever in the congregation of the dead." In view of these truths, is it strange that from Genesis to Revelations, life and death are set before men? and does not every man know who exercises his reasoning powers, that tradition has a vast amount of twisting and turning, metaphysical hair splitting, and philosophical quibbling, to explain away the meaning of some of the plainest truths? for instance, a teacher of tradition announces as his text this passage: "Say unto them, as I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked," will he admit that God means what he says, and that death means here just the same as it meant in Adam's case? Every one that ever heard a sermon preached from this text by popular traditionary teachers, know that the time was taken up principally in proving, or rather attempting to prove that the text was not to be understood literally, "for the soul, (that is their Pagan invention, immortal soul) can never die," which is true, for such a thing has not yet lived; and that which never lived, cannot die.

Take another text—"Behold, I set before you life and death!" Do they not explain this to mean everlasting life, in indescribable agony and unending tortures? Remember these texts are all in harmony with the position taken, that man is wholly mortal. Take another: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." How quickly they hoist this passage into their Pagan lathe, and turn all the truth out of it; so that all God's threatening man—man being a living soul, with death as the penalty of sin, amounts to just nothing at all; for, say they, "the soul being immortal, cannot die;" thus the truth of God is turned into a lie by their traditions.

Once more: "The wages of sin is death." This still harmonizes with the original penalty, death—a return to the dust of the earth. But when tradition gets through with this solemn truth, and has it turned and polished after their peculiar fashion, it does not mean what it says at all; in the place of the wages of sin being death, it is just the opposite—everlasting life in the most excruciating and unmitigated torture, and that too, dealt out to them by "Him in whom they live, and move, and have their being;" and of whom the beloved Apostle declares that "God is love," and infinite love impels him thus to inflict throughout the rolling ages of eternity, this indescribable, incomprehensible agony and torture. Does it? Away, away with such foul slander against the character of Him who knew when he created man, that his breath was in his nostrils, and his foundation in the dust; and that when "his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Show us, if you please, life of any kind, nature, or degree, beyond the present, that is not the gift of God through his only begotten Son Jesus Christ, who is the second Adam, and the author of eternal life.

Is it not enough, that God gives man this life, and kindly, and lovingly invites him to be a partaker in the life to come; to share the unrevealed glories of the future world, and dwell forever amid the unspeakable joys of an incorruptible and immortal state? and if man in the exercise of his free moral agency, neglects or rejects this kind offer, must infinite love be compelled to force an endless torture on him? and all this forsooth to save a theory dishonoring to God, and to be held in everlasting contempt by all good men; that is, the Pagan dogma of an immortal soul.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die," is the concurrent testimony of Revelation, turn which way you will; whether to the Prophets, our blessed Lord, or his Apostles, all bear the same undeviating testimony to this solemn truth; and it is no use to disguise the truth, that popular traditions deny those truths with the most unblushing effrontery and moral hardihood. We do not mean to say they do it purposely or knowingly, but nevertheless they do it, and they might know better; the means of knowing is within their reach, and will come when called for, that such expressions and cant phrases as are used daily in the popular pulpits, such as immortal soul, immortal spirit, immortal nature, and the death that never, never dies, are all phrases coined somewhere outside of, and are all so many contradictions of the sacred Scriptures, is as clear as the shining sun. I would just as soon think of denying the existence of God, horrid as it seems, as to deny that man is wholly mortal, and that his immortality is entirely contingent upon his acceptance of the offer of eternal life as offered to him through "Jesus Christ, who is the way, the truth, and the life."

"May our Heavenly Father help us all to lay hold on eternal life, and when Christ, who is our life shall appear may we appear with him in glory."

FROM WILLIAM LUCAS.

BR. STORRS: On Sunday March 27th, one of the "Big guns" of this place will preach against the doctrine of annihilation, in St. Paul's M. E. Church in the evening. One of my friends mentioning this to me said, "Mr. Lucas, you had better give up your views, you can never make the people believe what you talk, and you can do more good by coming into the church. Come over and hear our minister; he says he has no sympathy with the views preached twenty-five years ago." But the thought of giving up what to me seems truth, because no one believes as I do, is to me cowardice. O, how can I give up, and join a popular church, and say to the world by that act, "My God is a spirit having neither body nor parts, yet fills all space and has the power and disposition to torment the wicked with burning by fire and brimstone, and will do it while eternity rolls on."

I expect soon to have to stop reading the HERALD OF LIFE and all other writings. I think it will be profitable, as my eyes are failing faster than is common for persons of my age, and I must throw my spectacles and my business aside for a time, and live on food gathered from those who have written for our paper and the truth.

Brethren and sisters, I thank you for what you have written. I have talked the doctrine of No Life out of Christ in this place for many years; what the fruit may be, is unknown to me, but in weakness I have tried to do what I could. And now I am about to settle in another place, and I hope that I may be of some little use and hold up Christ and the resurrection a short time, for it will soon be said of me, "he is gone with all his faults." I send one dollar, for which you will please send me an assortment of tracts.

THE RESURRECTION SUPERSEDED.

OR, FUNERAL OF THE LATE DR. MCCLINTOCK.

THIS great, good, and estimable man, has fallen in death. His loss to the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he was a burning and shining light, must be felt as almost an irreparable one. The eulogies pronounced at his funeral, in this city, March 8th, we doubt not, were justly merited. But who can look over the eloquent panegyrics pronounced by two eminent bishops of the M. E. Church, on the occasion, and not feel a sadness come over their hearts, that not only is the resurrection of the dead not mentioned, but it is not alluded to, so far as the report of the funeral exercises are published in the "Christian Advocate" of this city. These bishops seem to have learned another lesson than that taught by Christ and his Apostles.

Jesus saith, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 40. This expression, "I will raise him up at the last day," is uttered four times in this one chapter. No hint, or intimation of the kind appears in the services at Dr. McClintock's funeral, though conducted by two eminent bishops of the M. E. Church.

Paul saith, "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not as others who have no hope: for if we believe that Christ died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him;" [from where? Where did God bring Jesus from? Was it not from the dead? "The God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep,"—Heb. xiii. 20; "even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him;"] "for this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent, (literally, shall not precede or go before) them which are asleep; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thes. iv. 13–18.

Was any language like this used at the funeral of Dr. McClintock? If so, it is not in the report. Let us look at what one of those eminent bishops did say to the mourning wife and children. Said he,

> Words are too poor to express our feelings of sympathy toward these dear mourning friends; but think not of him as gone from you. Blessed be God, the light of the gospel has been brought to light. Think of your husband as among the angels; think of your father as close by. As the stars beaming with light, look down upon you, then think that that being of affection may be near you. God bless these afflicted friends!

These are all the record gives us of the words of comfort for this smitten and afflicted family. How wide of fulfilling the Apostolic injunction above presented from his epistle to the Thessalonians. There is not even a family relation in the two modes of address; and the bishop was clearly in fault, and set the wisdom of man above the wisdom of inspiration. Why this setting aside the counsel of God to follow the traditions of men? The reason is obvious. An idol has been erected in the church, and all men are "commanded to fall down and worship" it. That idol is "inherent immortality," or an "immortal soul." That governs and controls the whole funeral ceremonies. Let us see. Keep in mind, not a word is uttered about a resurrection. In the first place the account of the funeral is preceeded by a hymn, written on the occasion of the Doctor's death, from which we give the following extracts:

> Mourn him!—Weep, scholars and sages, a brother
> Passed from your calm, high communion, above;
> Peer of your proudest, now hailed in another
> Sinless, immortal Olympus of love.
>
> Mourn him!—Weep Church of his heart, through thy borders
> Tearfully seeking a champion like this—
> Wesley, Clarke, Watson, now hail him, 'mid orders,
> Matchless, angelic, in glory and bliss.
>
> Father! my Father! the chariot of Israel,
> Fire-horsed hath snatched thee to visions unknown;

Here is a reference to Elijah going up in a chariot of horses and fire, but not a hint of a resurrection of the dead. Wesley, Clarke and Watson, Methodist preachers who fell asleep years ago, "hail" Dr. McClintock. But, lo, the very first words spoken at the funeral, by one of the officiating bishops, were these—"God has smitten! His stroke is heavy upon us, O how heavy!" Clarke, Watson and Wesley, "hail him" in heaven! The family of Methodists above, and the family below, seem not to be exactly agreed about the matter; says the bishop,

> We pray and struggle to be resigned and submissive, our hearts are full of sorrow. We don't murmur, blessed be God! but then the wound is so deep, we feel the affliction to be so great, that our spirits are full of anguish. O God strengthen us by thy Spirit!

Are the "spirits" of "Wesley, Clarke and Watson," so "full of anguish?" We love to have dear friends meet and rejoice when they are made very happy in society they love: we do not get "full of anguish," and talk about "praying and struggling to be resigned." But "we don't murmur," saith the bishop. That is truly cool. God has taken Dr. McClintock up into the society of the three eminent men, who may be termed the founders of their church; how glorious the "translation;" but "we don't murmur" about it! What a speech, considering their faith; or, rather, their traditions. We wonder if Dr. McClintock's first words on entering the society of Wesley, Clarke and Watson were, "I don't murmur that I have been brought here!"

A little further on, the bishop says—"Could I to-day enter into that ineffable glory in which his translated spirit is now basking," etc. So, his spirit was "translated" and was in "ineffable glory." Well, what is he thinking about? The bishop says,

> I am not certain, that he has even cast a though back to the struggles, toils, and conflicts of this world. I am not certain that he ever will do it; and yet I think it will be profitable for us to spend a few moments in meditating on his early history.

Now the bishop begins to talk a little like the Bible—"His breath goeth forth; he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Psa. cxlvi. 4. Until the resurrection "at the last day," we do not think, he "will cast a thought back to the struggles" of this life. If the bishop had said "will not," instead of saying he was "not certain" about it, we should have added our Amen. But then the bishop did not mean that: he meant the Doctor was too busy with Wesley and others, to find time, or have a disposition to look back to this life. Then he has no time to look after the wife and children, whom the other bishop attempted to comfort with the thought that the departed husband and father was "near them." But, "Doctors disagree."

We come now to the climax of the first bishop's speech. The report states it is as follows:

> It is a sad event, but it has a bright side. This is not an unmeaning symbol, [lifting from the pulpit a large and beautiful crown of flowers, surmounted by a cross.] The victory is won, the crown is obtained, and the heavenly mansion is occupied.

There, now, we see why nothing was said about the resurrection at this funeral; there is a shorter road to the crown and heavenly mansion. We ought, however, to have stated that just before the bishop commenced his remarks, one of the doctors present read "a part of 1 Cor. xv." However, that might have been a part of the ceremony needful to the occasion; but it seems the bishop could not stop for Paul's long route; to wait till the last trump was out of the way for an "immortal soul;" the resurrection away down there was not to be thought of as the way to the crown and the heavenly mansion! True, Paul charged Timothy to "preach the word:" but that would make us say so much about the resurrection of the dead at the last trump, at the last day, that nobody would believe they could get their crown till then! And beside, Paul said, in speaking to Timothy, that "the Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick [the living] and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;" and he added, "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 1–8.

But Paul's view put the crown so far off that the advocates of inherent immortality can't accept his route to the "crown and the mansion in heaven;" and so they have found a smoother way around "the hill, difficulty," as one of Bunyan's companions did, though it cost him a final exclusion from the heavenly city.

We can tell our friends, among Methodists and all others, they will find, sooner or later, that the only way to the crown is by a resurrection from the dead, or a change, if alive, at the last trump, at the last day. All attempts to climb up to heaven in some other way are as fanciful, and will prove as abortive as the issue from a Papal purgatory. Our good fanciful bishop, who first spoke, terminated his speech as follows:

> I am going to see him in his new home, and I am sure we shall have a happy meeting. God grant we all may meet him there! [Many voices, Amen.]

If he does not live till the Lord's appearing and kingdom, we have no doubt the bishop will "meet him" in his "new home," which will be the grave, till the last trump shall wake them: then may they "have a happy meeting."

We have already taken some notice of the remarks of the last bishop, who spoke at the funeral; but will look a little farther. See the following:

> As God led him step by step, so in his death the Church will be directed more and more to the founding of institutions, and there shall be some one found running who shall aspire to catch his mantle as he goes up to God.

Here is another reference to the translation of Elijah, whose mantle fell off, as he went up in the chariot of fire, and was caught by Elisha. To talk of death as a translation like Elijah's, is not the most creditable to a student of the Bible, even though he be a bishop; especially when the resurrection is not once mentioned or alluded to. It in fact sets that great and important Bible doctrine aside as not worth a passing notice. A doctrine more dwelt upon by Christ and his apostles than any one other found in the Book of God is put utterly aside by these promulgators of man's inherent immortality. Again, says this bishop,

> To-day I look upon him as not far away: the form is here, but the spirit may not be far away. Many of us remember that kind heart, and I believe it to be the same still. He has gone from earth, but he loves the cause of God. I have no thought that those who are taken away forget us, though I know not how it is. He may be gazing upon these friends, whose hearts are nearly broken. I know not how it is, but I know that God who gave him to bless us for a time has him in his hand. You have heard of his intellect and power, of the thoughts he had on earth, but O what thoughts he has in glory! We may think of the wide sweep that God gave him here; but what a sweep he has there! He has gone up to glory, and has been thinking with the angels there, and one hour in glory has compensated for all the toils of earth.

Here is a fancy picture; but how unlike Paul's words of comfort, that we have considered in the first part of this article! How unlike the teachings of Jesus—"Lazarus come forth;" not, come down from heaven: and when Lazarus did come forth, though he had been "four days" in heaven, wearing his "crown," and "occupying his heavenly mansion," he seems never to have said any thing about the "wide sweep he had there," or about having "been thinking with the angels there." As he had more than "one hour in glory"—even "three days," it must have been a wondrous trial to come back to earth! and his sisters must have been hard hearted and exceedingly selfish to have desired his return from such glory; and when he returned he was not very brotherly not to have entertained them with the glory he had. But he did not understand theology as bishops do in these days, or had not such a gift to communicate what he knew. Dr. Clarke thought it somewhat strange that Lazarus was not more communicative about the wonders he saw and heard while dead. "O what thoughts he has in glory!" says this last bishop. Poor Lazarus was not so highly favored; or, perhaps he was kept in the dark while dead, lest he should be too talkative when he came back.

"I have no thought that those who are taken away forget us, though I know not how it is," saith the bishop. Here again this bishop disagrees somewhat with his brother bishop, who said, "I am not certain that he has ever cast a thought back to the struggles, toils and conflicts of this world;" and, "I am not certain that he ever will." If they never cast a thought back to this world, it would seem as if they must "forget us." However, we leave these doctors to their conjectures, and accept inspiration which saith, "Their love, and their hatred . . . is now perished;" and the reason assigned is, "The dead know not any thing . . . for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in sheol whither thou goest."—Eccl. ix. 5, 6, 10. That seems to have been the condition of Lazarus the "three days" he was in the state of the dead, before Jesus called him to "Come forth."

> His sickness was such as not to allow him to speak of death, as he was unconscious for almost a week before he passed away; but on Tuesday preceding his death he enjoyed a short interregnum of consciousness and ease, and as he opened his eyes he said to Dr. Foster, "I feel a little stronger. Do you think I can live two days?" "Yes," said the Doctor, "you may live for many days." "But," said Dr. McClintock, "Do you know how sick I have been?" "Yes," was the answer. "Well," said Dr. McClintock, "in any event it is all right." Yes, "it is all right; it is all right." It seems to me I can see the car of death pass by, and as he stepped on, he said, "It is all right;" and as he entered the dark tunnel, he said, "It is all right;" and as it emerged from the other side, he said, "It is all right;" and as the angels welcomed him to the faroff land, they said, "It is all right." O, that when the time of our dissolution shall come, we may be able to say, "All right."

We admire Dr. McClintock's faith, set forth in this last quotation, and have no doubt he will find it "all right" at "the resurrection, at the last day." But the bishop's fancy sketch was doubtless spoken under the same inspiration with that of the Chinese, who gave an account of his emperor's death, and said, "He mounted on high upon a dragon."

But, we wished to show that the great theme of Jesus, as "the resurrection and the life," is ignored, or treated as of little or no importance, by all these immortal soul believers. It leads directly to the denial of a literal death, and hence makes a resurrection not only useless but impossible; for that which does not die cannot have a resurrection. This great Bible theme is fast fading from the world through the influence of the notion of inherent immortality. "Ye shall not surely die" is, evidently, the root from whence came this doctrine. The resurrection is superseded by an unscriptural, and hence unwarranted notion of translation at what seems to be death; though not death in reality. Thus the resurrection, of which Christ was "the first-fruits," to be followed by the harvest, or resurrection from the dead of "those who are Christ's at his coming," is superseded, or made void; and really amounts to the doctrine of Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some."—2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. Shall we allow the great doctrine of Christ and his Apostles to be thus superseded, and yet utter no protest?

"I AM TORMENTED IN THIS FLAME."

IT seems some of our friends in that "orthodox" paper, the "Advent Herald," of Boston, Mass., are being tormented in some flame; for they seem terribly in trouble at the progress of the Life views, and they are girding themselves anew to keep inherent perpetual living existence on its legs, and to bolster up eternal torments for the lost. One of its correspondents appears to take it to heart, sadly, that Southwestern and Central Pennsylvania has been given two prominent advocates of Life only in Christ, in the persons of Brn. Schaff and Bishop, late ministers in the "United Brethren Church" of Penn. It looks as if the "Advent Herald's" Elder or Elders, out that way, have become alarmed to find the Life views in their vicinity, and Josiah Litch, alias "Dr. Litch," has been roused up to pour forth another column in the "Advent Herald" to make the "Rich man in hell" come to the rescue of dead-alive men, and bolster up eternal torture.

The article of Dr. Litch, and the positiveness of his assertions, made us think he must have felt, at the time of writing, very much like saying, "I am tormented in this flame." We would suggest that he should keep as cool as possible while we look at some of his positions. He opens as follows:

> Christ is responsible for the following facts stated in the story of the rich man and Lazarus—any one of which proved to be true must establish the correctness of all the rest.

If "Christ is responsible for the facts," He is not for Dr. Litch's interpretation or construction of the facts. That is quite another matter, as we shall see before we have done with our old friend's dissertation on the parable. How would it look for a man to assert that the LORD God "is responsible for the facts in the story of the two eagles," Ezekiel xvii.? And on such a statement proceed to say, "Any one of which proved to be true must establish the correctness of all the rest;" i. e., all the rest must be literal history because no one can dispute the fact that there are literal eagles! Please read Ezk. xvii., and see where Dr. Litch's logic lands him.

The parable of the rich man and Lazarus no more teaches the theory of the conscious state of dead men and eternal torments, than it teaches Dr. Litch is "infallible," though he has pushed it forward as if Christ himself were guilty of falsehood, if his construction of the language is not correct. Don't be in a hurry, dear Doctor, to vote for "Infallibility."

Our old friend is in such a hurry to make out his case that he gets Christ himself into hell torments; but he does not stop to tell us how He got out of eternal torture. To prove that sheol is a "place of fire, sorrow, and pain, according to Moses and the prophet David," he quotes certain texts from them. Immediately he follows this imaginary proof about sheol with the following statement:

> It is the place of the soul in contra-distinction to the flesh: "My flesh also shall rest in hope: for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (sheol), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Psa. xvi. 9, 10. Peter, on the day of Pentecost made application of this to Christ, and said: "His soul was not left in hell, neither did his flesh see corruption!" Then it is in David, the place of the soul not the flesh.

Does our friend really believe Christ went into the "place of fire, sorrow, and pain;" that is, into his theological hell? If so, He certainly came out; and that proves it is not so hopeless a place as orthodoxy teaches. But is Dr. Litch so Jehu like as to drive Christ into his theological hell? and does he not know, his appeal to that text, to make a distinction between soul and flesh, or body, is unwarranted, and of no value, except to impose on the ignorant? Will any scholar in the Hebrew language risk his reputation by construing the language as he has? We think not.

Dr. Eadie, in his "Biblical Encyclopædia," on this text, Psa. xvi. 9, 10, and Peter's quotation of it, speaks as follows:

"A very little attention to the laws of Hebrew grammar and principles of Hebrew poetry and parallelism, will at once render the meaning of this prophecy plain to the meanest capacity. . . . 'My flesh also shall rest in hope,' for

> 'Thou wilt not abandon me to sheol
> Nor permit thy Holy One to see corruption.'

"The two lines form what is usually termed a parallelism, the last hemistich echoing the sentiment of the former. The words 'my soul' mean merely myself. This mode of speech is not confined to the oriental tongues, but may be illustrated from the classics." [He then gives several illustrations, and says], "The Hebrew and Arabic abound in similar instances. Gesenius illustrates it by the German selb or selber. Nordheimer, in the second volume of his Hebrew grammar, illustrates such usages at considerable length. Nouns of this nature are used, because the Hebrew has no intensive or reflexive pronouns. It is thus obvious that the argument based upon the idea that Christ's soul went to sheol, and his body [flesh] to the grave, has no foundation. The Hebrew does not warrant the distinction. Christ's soul, in such an idiom, is his entire person."—Eadie's Cy.; article hell, page 304.

So much for Dr. Litch's accuracy, in his attempt to make out that sheol "is the place of the soul in contradistinction to the flesh." And it is a very fair sample of his theological accuracy when he meddles with the subject of "Life only in Christ," the advocates of which he calls the "Materialistic fraternity." How much value there is in the construction put upon the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus by any man that violates so plain a text as Psa. xvi. 9, 10 to prove the existence of his theological hell or that of his theological soul, we leave others to judge. We repeat what we said before, If "Christ is responsible for the facts" in the parable, He is not for Dr. Litch's inferences. We shall notice only one of his alleged facts, because that is the only one, of the six, he does his best to make appear it was the genuine theological hell the Rich man was in. The one we notice is the sixth, and reads as follows:

> 6. That Abraham alleged that, firstly, there was no need of sending Lazarus to testify on the subject of this hell of torment and flame, because Moses and the prophets, whom they had for their instruction, had sufficiently testified in reference to it; and secondly, that if the living did not hear them, if one rose from the dead and went to them, they would not repent.

In proof that Moses and the prophets taught the existence of his theological hell, he quotes a few texts from them; the first and principal one of which is Deut. xxxii. 22, which reads as follows, "A fire is kindled in mine anger which shall burn to the lowest hell; it shall consume the earth with her increase and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." On this text Dr. Litch says,

> The fact of such a fire, burning deep down and setting the foundations of the mountains on fire; and the consumption of the earth's increase by its volcanic overflow, is well known. This God calls, sheol. It is not the grave.

As a member of the spiritualistic "fraternity," Dr. L. is now very "materialistic," as his language shows. He loses sight of the context, and with his vision full of his ideal hell he plunges into his conclusion as if it were demonstration. Let us see if his construction of the language is any thing more than a theological bubble. Moses in speaking of the consequences of Israel's forgetting their God and going "after gods newly come up," tells them, that "when the "LORD saw it, he abhorred them . . . and said, I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end will be. . . . They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God . . . and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation: for a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn to the lowest hell (sheol), and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. . . . They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat. . . . The sword without, and terror within shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling with the man of gray hairs. I said I would scatter them into the corners, I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men: were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely," etc.—Deut. xxxii. 16–27.

How very much all this looks like Dr. Litch's theological hell! Who does not see that the figurative language employed here indicates judgments on a wicked people for their idolatry; because of which God would give them up to be ruled over by those who were not God's people, even "a foolish nation," and cause their land to be desolated as though burned by fire, consuming it to its "lowest sheol," or hidden places, so that there should be no escape for them, and bitter and burning judgments should follow them even into the land of their captivity. Yet the account winds up with the promise of an ultimate deliverance as follows: "The LORD shall judge his people, and repent himself for his servants, when he seeth that their power is gone, and there is none shut up or left. . . . Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people: for He will avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people." —Verses 36 and 43.

We fail to find Dr. Litch's hell in this chapter, but we do find Moses telling Israel (rich in God's blessings, or "good things") what would be the consequences of their national departure from God; and the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus, is an illustration of the same truths, then about to be fulfilled on the Jewish nation for having misimproved the "good things of their life time," and for now being about to put to death the Son of God, the last great "good thing" bestowed on them in the "life time" of their nationality. From that day onward, for long centuries, they have been "tormented in the flame" of burning judgments; from which they have sought relief by calling upon "Abraham," as their "father," instead of seeking relief from Jesus the true Deliverer.

That this is the true interpretation of Moses' language, Deut. xxxii. 22, and of Christ's parable of the Rich man is further proved from Moses' language Deut. xxviii., where, in speaking of the curses that would come on the people for disobedience, he says, "The LORD shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he hath consumed thee from off the land, whither thou goest to possess it: the LORD shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword," etc. (Read the whole chapter.)

Here we find the "Rich man" dead to God's covenant; and his "earth" or land consumed by the fire God had kindled; and hence the "Rich man" cast out of his country into sheol, or a place of darkness. "Literally" says KITTO, "the word hades means that which is in darkness."—Cyclopædia, word hell. The Jewish people, though cast into that state of darkness, have still claimed Abraham as their father, and plead their torment as the reason why they should have help. They have rejected their only Helper by rejecting Jesus; while poor Lazarus of the "foolish nation," whom they had neglected or treated with scorn, is now, by accepting Jesus, comforted in the bosom of Abraham by being brought into the covenant that God made with him when He said "In thee and in thy seed shall all nations be blessed."

We are glad Dr. Litch called attention to Deut., as the statements there made, in chapters xxviii. and xxxii., go to settle the question more perfectly than ever, that the parable of the Rich man had direct reference to the denunciations in those chapters, then about to be inflicted on that section of Israel called Jews which embraced two tribes of the twelve; the ten tribes having been carried away captive into Assyria some seven or eight hundred years previous to our Lord's first advent; from which captivity they never returned, and had no part in the rejection of Christ. They had left to them only "Moses and the Prophets," for their instructors in divine things; while the Jews, or Judah and Benjamin, had also Christ and his Apostles and the doctrine of "one rose from the dead," even Jesus, and yet they did not believe. Notwithstanding all these advantages they would not believe; the death of their nationality followed, and the curses of Deut. xxviii. and xxxii., came upon them; fitly set forth in the parable of the Rich man; which parable was constructed, most clearly to our mind, from the curses set forth in those two chapters in Deut. The more those chapters are studied in connection with the parable, the more clear will it appear that they were the basis of the parable, setting forth the judgments about to fall on one sixth of the tribes of Israel, while the other "five brethren" being out of that land, are represented as still having only "Moses and the Prophets," which they might hear, and escape the fiery judgment that was about to fall on the nation of Jews.

Our views on this parable will be found in full in the "Watch Tower," written by us nearly twenty years ago. The struggle made by Dr. Litch and others to make out a literal history of a single individual rich man is a desperate effort to uphold a dying cause, which has so long been contended for, viz., eternal torture; and which has made men infidels in spite of themselves.

If our theological opponents would take half the pains to vindicate the character of God from the foul blots that ignorance, superstition and will-worship, impregnated with heathenism and popish blasphemies, have cast upon it, that they do to keep up that mass of rubbish which has made hypocrites and infidels of multitudes, they would find better employment, and have a peace of mind and joy in the Holy Spirit, which would expel the "fear that hath torment," under which they now labor, and which makes it utterly impossible to exercise that love of God which was the happy state of Bible Christians, promulgated by the Apostles, and which was "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Where is such joy to be found in these days? Sure we are it can never result from the theological notions about the government of God, with endless torture in its train. The natural tendency of such doctrine, is well expressed by Saurin in his sermon on "The Eternal Misery of Hell." He says:

> I sink under the weight of this subject; and I declare, when I see my friends, my relations, the people of my charge—when I think that I, that you, that we are all threatened with these torments—when I see in the luke-warmness of my devotions, in the languor of my love, in the faintness of my resolutions and designs, the least evidence though it be only probable or presumptive, of my future misery, yet I find in the thought a mortal poison, which diffuses itself into every period of my life, rendering society tiresome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful, and life itself a cruel bitter—I cease to wonder that a fear of hell has made some melancholy, and others mad; that it has inclined some to expose themselves to a living martyrdom by fleeing from all commerce with the rest of mankind, and others to suffer the most violent and terrible torments.

Such are the feelings which inevitably exercise the mind of an honest believer in the theological hell. The doctrine is as far removed from the Spirit of Christianity as God is unlike the theological devil. Let us give our readers one item more in the ingredient of this theological hell as to its eternity, which is also from Saurin. Speaking of the "Duration of Eternity," he says:

> When I endeavor to represent eternity, I avail myself of whatever I can conceive most long and durable. I heap imagination upon imagination, conjecture upon conjecture. First, I consider those long lives which all men wish, and some attain. I do more: I turn to ancient chronicles. I go back to the patriarchal age, and consider life extending through a thousand years; and I say to myself, "All this is not eternity; all this is only a point in comparison of eternity!" Having represented to myself real objects, I form imaginary ones. I go from our age to the time of publishing the gospel; from thence to the publication of the law; from the law to the flood; from the flood to the creation; I join this epoch to the present time; and I imagine Adam yet living. Had Adam lived till now, and had he lived in misery, had he passed all his time in a fire or on a rack, what idea must we form of his condition? At what price would we agree to expose ourselves to misery so great? What imperial glory would appear glorious, were it followed by so much woe? Yet this is not eternity: all this is nothing in comparison of eternity! I go further still, I proceed from one supposition to another. I take the greatest number of years that can be imagined; I add ages to ages, millions of ages, to millions of ages; I form of all these one fixed number, and I stay my imagination. After this, I suppose God to create a world like this we inhabit; I suppose him creating it by forming one atom after another, and employing in the production of each atom, the time fixed in my calculation just mentioned. What numberless ages would the creation of such a world in such a manner require! Then I suppose the Creator to arrange these atoms, and to pursue the same plan of arranging them as of creating them. What numberless ages would such an arrangement require? Finally, I suppose him to dissolve and annihilate the whole, and, observing the same method in this dissolution, as he observed in the creation and disposition of the whole, what an immense duration would be consumed! Yet this is not eternity: this is only a point in comparrison of eternity!

Now, if any man can believe all this, as to the duration of a sinner's torment, and believe that multitudes of beings, brought into a living existence without their knowledge or consent, are to endure in that state "in a fire or on a rack;"—we say if any man can believe it, and yet "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory," we do not envy him his blindness of mind, nor his hardness of heart. We forbear giving utterance to thoughts that arise in our minds when we contemplate the sin (it may be the sin of ignorance) those are guilty of, who promulgate such a doctrine, and give such a representation of the government of the God who made us, and who swears by Himself saying, "As I live saith the LORD God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked," etc.—Ezk. xxxiii. 11.

The blasphemy of the doctrine is being exposed, and its incompatibility with the spirit of the gospel, and the entire Bible testimony as well as its war upon every attribute of God and His principles of government, which He requires men to exercise in their government of each other. Such relics of barbarism are passing away and are doomed to perish by the clear light of gospel truth, which shows that "God is love," and that His "tender mercies are over all His works." His justice is as much pledged to guard against such a calamity as the theological hell to the creatures He has made, as His love. Both forbid such a result; and when men are made to understand this fact, the stain upon God's character and government will be wiped out, which many, otherwise good men have helped to inflict upon it.

FROM WM. H. SPENCER.

BR. STORRS: From the solicitude which so many have felt in my health this winter, I feel impelled to again write a word for their information.

I feel to exclaim in the sweet strains of the Psalmist, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, and his mercy endureth forever." I have had abundant proof this winter of the goodness of my heavenly Father, and have felt a deeper sense of his enduring mercy than ever before. Bless his holy name!

I would report, (with a heart full of thanks to my Master,) much improvement in health. Throughout the month of February my lung difficulty yielded very perceptibly, which I gratefully attribute to the Pulmonic Syrup which my dear Br. Joseph Laciar, (Mauch Chunk, Pa.,) sent me. Under the effects of this excellent medicine I improved steadily. May the Lord bless him. Perhaps I should mention, however, that the last severe storm has affected me more than any weather for the past six weeks, compelling me again to combat some of those symptoms of lung disease which I began to flatter myself I had nearly overcome. But I have no doubt that the present attack of coughing and soreness in my lungs will depart with the return of good weather.

My heart has been greatly cheered and comforted and my faith strengthened by the Christian love and kindness which the Lord's children have continually manifested to me during my ill health. May the Lord bless them. Their reward at least is certain in that blissful future to which we so anxiously look forward, when faith will be changed to joyful sight, and we shall know each other even as we are known.

The HERALD becomes dearer to me each week, and I am much edified and profited in perusing its contents, bearing, as it does, a faithful testimony against sectarianism and religious bigotry; and I only regret that it is not scattered all over the land by thousands. We truly have got the truth regarding future destiny, and we should each see that we do all we can to spread it. I think, as Life believers, we should all concentrate our efforts to increase the circulation of the HERALD. I hope, if the Lord will, to be useful to His cause the coming summer in efforts in this direction. "Let us not sleep as do others," for "now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed." "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand."—1 Thess. v. 6; Rom. xiii. 12.

"MY STYLE."

BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

READER, have you ever slighted a relative because he did not dress or appear just as you do? Was that relative made near to you by "the precious blood of Christ?" It may seem a small thing to you, but as for me, I should not feel a right to expect salvation at last, if I was too proud to recognize "the least" of Christ's little ones, in all places.

There is such an increase of the aristocratic spirit, even among those who profess to be waiting for the Lord from heaven, that it becomes us to search our hearts and see if we are infected. How often have we seen the cold reception given to a sister by one, who having had superior advantages, (though may be not superior sense,) who turning proudly would say, "she is not my style;" yet would be very cordial to others who were her style, yet one whom the Lord could not number as his.

There is no use in deceiving ourselves. Being associated nominally with the "pure in heart," will not save us. Being children of Abraham or of Advent preachers does not make us heirs of glory. It is written, "all the proud" shall God destroy. You may think it is not pride to turn scornfully from those whose minds or ability may make them plainer in apparel, than you. There are two extremes in the matter of dress—one is, to put on too much apparel, thus violating an express command of Scripture; another is, being too careless in this respect; which is at best but a natural failing.

Bless you my sister, some poor women have not the talent to select colors, cut and make garments in a manner to look in style. Are they to be trodden under foot for it? Then I know one at least, who has dressed plain so that her husband might pay his honest debts, and be free to preach doctrines which are not the "style" among professed Christians in general. But is this a sin? Or is it a virtne? She considers it a reasonable thing.

I love exaltation. I love grandeur. I love refinement, I love this world's goods. Beautiful houses; pleasant homes; rich furniture, and all sensible things that make earth and earthly things beautiful, look as well to me, as to anybody. But I can't have an abundance of them in this world. There are pilgrims all over the world who are sometimes hungry and cold and destitute of many comforts. But it is for truth's sake. The founder of our faith "had not where to lay his head." He "became poor." That isn't your "style;" yet his disciples left all to follow him. Will you despise them for it?

By and by this longing and loving of grandeur will be gratified. But not till we get home. We don't carry our possessions with us on our journey through a foreign country. We'll have our share of "gold and pearls and costly array," when we get into the King's palace. Be of good cheer, poverty-stricken ones, who, toiling ever so hard, can get but the common necessaries of life. Sickness and other causes may work against you here, but there's a "home in glory" for you.

And you my Sisters, who are obliged to pass days and nights alone with your little ones, economizing and praying for "daily bread," while your companion goes into the highways and by-ways, to tell dying men of the Way of Life, there's a Christ to sympathize with and fellowship you. Ah! he knows how little honor a prophet gets in his own country; how many times people accuse him of neglecting his own family; doubt his "call to preach" when his family suffer need and bid him "God-speed" when they abound. Yet the lost sheep that cause joy to the faithful one who sought them, can testify that it is "not by might nor by power," but by the word of Truth, that sinners can be saved.

This affords much comfort to many a soul to-day. This assurance makes plain clothing and scanty supplies of earthly goods quite endurable to those who believe that God leads them.

May Life believers be free from all pride and vain display. May no roots of bitterness spring up among them. May "love be without dissimulation." May none say to a brother or sister, "I am holier than thou," on account of superior advantages or any other thing. Let us remember that Jesus owns and loves the least one, and if we have his Spirit, we shall love as he loves.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

BR. STORRS: I long frequently to write a few lines for our excellent HERALD OF LIFE, but its columns are abundantly supplied with rich, nourishing food for all classes, both for those in Christ, and those out of Christ. Of this last class there are large numbers, who are anxiously inquiring what these things mean? and others looking vaguely, saying, what will this babbler say? for he seemeth to be a setter forth of strange doctrines. We would know what these things mean. O how this old Macedonian cry comes ringing in our ears from every hill top, from the bleak mountains, from the rills and glens, from the smiling valleys, from the slumbering lakes and leaping rills; and I can only sigh and say, O that it were with me as it was in the strength of manhood! But what am I saying? Let me reverently bow in thankfulness, that I am permitted to live this long, to see the light of truth coming up out of the wilderness, leaning on her beloved; (ah who?) none other but the bright Star of the believer's hope, the bright glory of the resurrection from among the dead ones.

I am now out of health, and have been for some weeks; but perhaps in part for the want of more activity in the cause. I have just closed reading this week's issue of our precious HERALD; and no longer am I left to wonder why its contributors say, "It grows better and better;" for to me in many respects it surpasses all the rest. I do not ask you to give this a place in your good paper, unless you should want it to fill out some vacant blank, which I expect you will never find. But it would be gratifying to me if you could spare a small space in the children's corner, to remember me to all the dear lovers of truth and life. I think my work is not quite done. I trust I shall soon go forth again, to respond to the numerous calls. O, how can I rest in this wearisome land? O God strengthen me for the residue of life's mission. O my Father, strengthen our noble Editor; give him length of days, and strength of nerve; let the good work never flag under his administration. Give him suitable and all necessary help; so will we ever pray. I must close by wishing you, and your family and friends, and all your office help, the choicest of heaven's blessings. I am weary of straying. O when shall I rest?

FROM WM. W. DOUGHTY.

BR. STORRS: The doctrine of a future life only for the righteous, through Christ our blessed Lord and LIFE-GIVER, is spreading in this place, notwithstanding the opposition it has to meet with, and the way and manner in which it is misrepresented by those who do not understand clearly the gospel plan of saving men from death. My heart is filled with gratitude to God that my eyes were ever opened to this glorious and sublime truth, that a future life or a resurrection from the dead, depends wholly on Christ, through faith in him, without which no man has a promise of being delivered from death, but must remain under its dominion forever, inasmuch as their sins have not been remitted through the blood of the everlasting covenant and as death is the penalty or wages of sin, consequently all who have not their sins forgiven, death must and will hold as lawful captives. Thank God for the light that now shines on this blessed truth.

Br. Hiram Munger, preached a few evenings ago, on the mortal resurrection of Christ, and also the righteous and the wicked. He preached the same subject on a former occasion, but has not succeeded in convicting or converting any one into this man-made theology, for there is not a particle of divine testimony to sustain such a position. Even those in this place who believe in the reliving of the wicked dead have no sympathy with such an unscriptural dogma; such preaching has a tendency to make converts to the Life views. If Br. M———, wants to stop the progress of the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked, let him keep silent on this mortal resurrection theory (of the righteous) and cease contradicting Paul when he says, "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible," (not mortal).—1 Cor. xv. 42–44, 52.

There is quite a contrast between the teachings of Paul and the preaching of Br. M——, on the subject of the resurrection from the dead. Which shall we believe? Peter says, that "Christ was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit;" and, says Paul, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11. Does he mean to mortal life? If so the wicked shall not live at all; for the Apostle makes it conditional; whereas Br. M——, has no condition in the quickening of the dead at all. And if the righteous are raised immortal, the wicked will fail of a resurrection from the dead, for it depends wholly on the indwelling of the Spirit of God, according to the testimony of the Apostle Paul. "And this is the will of him that sent Me," said Jesus, "that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have everlasting life," John vi. 40, "and I will raise him up at the last day:" and, "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 35, 36. But, "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Prov. xxi. 16.

LYNN, Mass., March 7, 1870.

FROM EBEN HESTER.

BR. STORRS: Last Sabbath I listened to a very interesting discourse upon the "soul," delivered by the Congregational brother mentioned in my last communication. He took for his text these words, "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" By some unforeseen circumstance I neglected to carry a pencil with me, so I had to content myself with listening attentively to his remarks, and store as much as possible in my brain for a critical examination on reaching home. The preacher began his discourse thus:—The word "soul," as understood by inspired writers of the O. T., seems to have had several meanings. Take if you will the passage in Psalms, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." This text has reference to the body lying in the grave. The passage in Genesis, where it is said, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; or breath of lives; that is, it seems after all other animals were made, God in making man a living soul gave him the breath of all animals in a concentrated form, thus crowning him his noblest workmanship.

These may not be the exact words, but as I understood them. The preacher also mentioned several other texts of Scripture to illustrate his subject. Then comes the text, which was explained to have quite a different meaning; even going so far as to say, this text taught "man's duality;" in other words, he said, This body was the case of the soul, or real person. He then refered to 2 Cor. v., to confirm his previous opinion as to the man and his "case." Also expressed himself thus: What does this mean when the person says, I think! If I will it to raise my hand, that member instantly obeys.

I might also add, We have an unruly cow; if that animal wills it to hook down an iron bar to free herself from the enclosure, she has but to will it, straightway it is accomplished; not even making a mistake as to the right one.

Preacher next asks how to explain "Rich Man and Lazarus." Said he, Materialists have tried every way to get around this text, but cannot. Admits the silence of "God's Word" in emphatically declaring the soul to be immortal, but says, Not so much on the ground of a formal proposition, as everywhere implied. (Reasoning thus:) We cannot prove the existence of God (this to me is very strange) from the Bible, but we see it on every page. Quoted also, "transfiguration of Jesus;" and said Jesus had but to call Moses or Elias and they come. The preacher did not extend his remarks far: did not set the subject in quite the light I expected. Plato, Philo, and others were quoted. Platonists believed that somewhere in the universe there was a sort of receptacle for all souls, so that when God made a body, he took from this receptacle a soul suited for such a body. Quoted in favor of this heathen notion, John i. 6. "There was a man sent from God," etc. Still another theory was, "Like begets like." He, the preacher, was rather inclined to the latter view; although he would not prescribe any rule to be governed by; allowed each of his hearers to choose what appeared to them right, or adapted itself to their own reason. The Lord bless him! This dear Br. closed with a few well put remarks. I think I never saw such close attention in that church before. One individual especially attracted my notice by his earnest manner, leaning forward to catch every word. On other Sabbaths the same person invariably takes a nap. I sent him Dr. Finley's Constitution of Man: think the letter I sent him had some little weight, though from a poor man of the dust. Have sent you some thoughts on 2 Cor. v. This has been my diversion, evenings, after twelve hours labor. Your brother in the Lord.

FROM E. A. LIBBY.

BR. STORRS: I have been a subscriber for your excellent paper ever since it was first published; and consider it a privilege to acknowledge through its columns, the truths it advocates. I have long been a believer in "Life only in Christ;" and to me it is a key that unlocks the treasure-house of God's word and brings to light things new and old; and, although it is shut out of our places of worship and we do not have any privilege of hearing it proclaimed, yet the fire burns brightly in our hearts, and we feel it is like a well of water springing up unto everlasting life. I am glad that Jesus leads the army and that eternal life has been, and still is, offered to every son and daughter of Adam. "Whosoever will, may come and partake of the water of life freely." There must be a will about the matter. We are told also, "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

I am satisfied we are in the perils of the last days; and our only safety is in believing the truth, having it hid in our hearts, and then it will prove a savor of life unto life, to all them who obey it. May God give us wisdom to understand his blessed word, and grace to help us to do his will, that we may be prepared for his coming, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

JAMES GRANT, Montrose, Scotland, writes: My residence hereafter will be Dundee, 30 Murry Gate. I enclose an order for one pound, [for the HERALD OF LIFE] and I rejoice that those who have the means are subscribing so liberally for its support. It is read and prized by a number in Montrose besides my own household, none of whom have yet subscribed for it. Had I time I would tell you of the opposition of some of our clergy to the HERALD; but I must forbear, hoping it may go on spreading the truth and pulling down error till "Christ, who is our Life, shall appear." Yours, in love of the truth.

LET us every hour expect the kingdom of God in love and righteousness, because we know not the day of our Lord's appearing.—Clement, A. D. 96.

The Blessed Man.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."—James i. 12.

Fret not thyself so sorely, heart of mine,
For that the pain hath roughly broke thy rest,—
That thy wild flowers lie dead upon thy breast,
Whereon the cloud-veiled sun hath ceased to shine.

Fret not that thou art seamed, and scarred, and torn;
That clods are piled where tinted vetches were;
That long worms crawl to light, and brown rifts, bare
Of green and tender grasses, widely yawn.

God's hand is on the plough. So be thou still.
Thou canst not see Him, for thine eyes are dim;
But wait in patience, put thy trust in Him—
Give thanks for love, and leave thee to His will.

Ah! in due time the lowering clouds shall rain
Soft drops on my parched furrows; I shall sow
In tears and prayers, and green corn-blades will grow;—,
I shall not wish the wild flowers back again.

I shall be glad that I did work and weep—
Be glad, O God, my slumbering soul did wake—
Be glad my stubborn heart did heave and break
Beneath the plough—when angels come to reap:

Be glad, O Father, that my land was tilled,
And sown and watered, in the harvest day—
When thou wilt cast the weeds and tares away,
And when with ripened fruit Thy barns are filled.

Keep me my faith, I pray! I cannot see,
And fear to intermeddle with Thy work.
Oh, though I wince and fret, I would not shirk
The discipline that is so good for me!

I know that thou wilt make my grief to cease—
Wilt send the cool soft drops of healing rain,
And make my scarred heart green with springing grain:
That after patient waiting cometh peace.

That after faithful labor I shall rest,
And after weeping have my fill of joy.
Thou breakest down, to build up—not destroy;
Thou doest right, O Lord!—Thou knowest best.

"No Apology for Faith."

REMARKS BY S. COOPER.

I am well aware that gain is not godliness and we may criticize and show errors in the writings of others with little or none of the spirit of Christ. But I do believe we may know the spirit we are of, and may, in love for our Brn. differing from us, and in love for Bible truth, review, criticize, and show what to us appears erroneous in their teachings, without grieving the Spirit of God.

An article under the above heading appeared in the "Crisis" some time ago, which I felt sorry to see for several reasons. 1st. It savors of an unchristian spirit in the lack of charity toward those who may differ from him.

2d. It makes statements as if scriptural and the word of God, which are nowhere so written, and says faith believes it.

3d. I cannot consider it as sound, or candidly written for the truth's sake. The writer says, "When God told Adam he should return to dust, He made no apology." (Surely not; he had no occasion; no faith, but a purpose.) "Believe it or not it was found true, and apologies are useless." Surely. But, I ask, who disbelieves it? Who would ask of an All-wise Being such a thing as an "apology?" It is preposterous. Again. "When God said by virtue of the second Adam, all should be made alive again to be judged according to their deeds, faith believes it. Apology, quibbles and criticises the statement and brings in reason." (Reason is always good, and on the side of God and truth. "Statements" are not always so.) But he says, "Brings in reason, philosophy, and unbelief. Yet faith stands alone, and so will all that have faith." True, all who have the right kind of faith, will stand by their faith; but many may have opinions, which they may call faith, by which they will not stand, when the trial comes. But, "reason and philosophy" will always stand the test; but sophistry, with ill-founded opinion and "statements" (which some of our opponents appear to use) will not stand.

But I would ask, Where does God say, "by VIRTUE of the second Adam all should be made alive again to be judged according to their deeds?" I think the well informed Bible student answers, No where. But I do remember on one occasion, one of faith said, "If I can but touch his garment I shall be made whole;" which she did, and was healed, made whole. Jesus turned and said, "Who touched me? I perceive virtue has gone out of me." Oh yes, "virtue;" something good, always good, such as Jesus (the second Adam) imparts to those who share in or partake of his "virtue," or are made alive again by him who says, "I am the resurrection and the life . . . except ye eat my flesh, and drink my blood ye have no life," no "virtue" "in you. . . . He that believeth on the Son may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. . . . They that obtain . . . the resurrection from the dead, are equal unto the angels . . . neither can they die any more." These are Jesus' sayings, without "Apology or quibblings," I heartily believe them, whether the "Crisis" writer will quibble or not, at these sayings.

Again. He says, "Christ made no apology when he said he would raise all that are in the graves, both good and bad. All the apostles believed and preached it." Again I would ask, Where has Christ so said? and where is the Bible testimony that all the apostles believed and preached it? Again, I think the unprejudiced Bible student says, No where. But if rightly informed, as I have reason to believe, Jesus said; "All that are in the mnemion, not hades, shall hear his voice and come forth." This language implies a living condition to hear, and a voluntary action in coming forth. Nothing does he say, or is said, of his raising them from the dead by his power, or of being quickened by the Spirit. To believers Jesus says, "I will raise them up at the last day." Here is the act of Jesus, "I will raise" believers up; not so of unbelievers. Says Paul, "So worship I the God of my fathers believing all things written in the law, and in the prophets, and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead." The expression "both of the just and the unjust," I think I have no reason to believe, expresses the faith of Paul. Why? Because, first, I know of no such thing written in the law and the prophets, as that the unjust shall have a resurrection to life from the dead. An expression in Daniel might appear to favor it, but the general tenor of the Old Testament, as well as the New, where it touches the point, is decidedly against it.

2d. It is impossible that it should constitute a part of Paul's hope or that of a Christian heart; for hope always (the hope of a Christian) embraces that which is good, and not evil; that which is supposed to afford pleasure, enjoyment, happiness; neither of which can result from the reliving and dying again of the wicked, neither can it promote the justice, the honor, and glory of God. Therefore it is impossible to be embraced in a Christian's hope.

3d. Paul has largely expressed his hope of being raised from the dead, or of a resurrection which will be by the power and Spirit of God; when this mortal shall put on immortality; when that which is sown a natural body . . . in weakness, and in corruption, will be raised a spiritual body, in power and glory; when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and death be swallowed up in victory. Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. But by the reading of 1 Cor. xv. 22, it is supposed by some, that Paul tought the reliving of the wicked dead. I read thus "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." As Adam was of the earth, earthy, corruptible, mortal, died so, all who partake of his nature are mortal, and die, or dying; so all who are in Christ partake of his nature and Spirit, by living in Christ (who was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit) will be made alive by living in Christ, who is the resurrection and the life, and their life being hid with Christ in God. And as there is no language of the Apostles directly implying the re-living of the wicked dead, I have no other apology for rejecting the "statement" of the brother that, "all the Apostles believed and preached it."

Again, the Br. in the "Crisis" says, "Enoch and Jude, made no apology for saying in Jude 14, that the wicked would remember what they had said and done in the day of judgment. Apology, which is a substitute for faith, denies it. Faith believes it, and always will."

This looks like a paradox, very queer indeed. Why should Enoch and Jude apologize for what they were saying, if speaking the truth? Again, if "apology" is a substitute for faith, how can it say one thing, and faith another? Certainly it cannot if it is a substitute. But what has the testimony of Enoch or Jude to do with what our Br. is driving at; i. e., the resurrection of the wicked dead, for neither have spoken the first word touching the resurrection. So their testimony has nothing to do with the re-living of the wicked.

The Br. says, "The Revelator makes no apology for saying over and over, that two classes come up to judgment."

Well, if there is any proof or weight in the supposed argument, it is just as good for me, as for him. I will use it. The Revelator has made no apology for not saying that the wicked dead would come up out of their graves, and "be made alive again to be judged." The great fact is, he has never said they would or would not; and there is no good testimony in these figurative and symbolical writings touching the point.

I will briefly notice those texts in Rev. which speak of judged, judgeth, and judgment and see if they have anything to do with the re-living of the wicked dead. Chap. xi. 18. "And the time of the dead that they should be judged and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great." Nothing here is said of the wicked "coming up to judgment."

Again, Rev. xiv. 7. "Saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." Here we find nothing said about the wicked "coming up to judgment."

Chap. xvi. 5. "Because thou hast judged thus," has no reference to the point. Chap. xvii. 1. "I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore." This likewise has nothing to do with the question. Chap. xviii. 10. "Alas that great city Babylon, that mighty city, for in one hour is thy judgment come." Nothing here of "two classes coming up to judgment."

Chap. xix. 2. "For true and righteous are his judgments, for he hath judged the great whore which did corrupt the earth with her fornications." I have not yet found "over and over," the two classes coming up to judgment. I will look again into the xxth. chap. where the Br. may think it is found "over and over," and see if I can find a resurrection of the two classes to life.

We read, "I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand, and he laid hold on the dragon that old serpent, which is the devil and satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit . . . till the thousand years should be fulfilled. . . . And I saw thrones and they (who) sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them." (Unto whom was judgment given to execute authority?) "And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus . . . and they [the souls] lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead (souls) lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." Will the Br. of "faith," tell us without "quibbling," which is the first resurrection, the living of those souls that reigned with Christ a thousand years, or the living of the "rest of the dead" after the thousand years? Will he say, it was those who reigned with Christ a thousand years, that were of the first resurrection? If so, he admits of a judgment before a resurrection, which might appear to conflict with his theory, viz., that the wicked dead, so called, must be raised to life before they can or will be judged. Or, will he tell us when that thousand years was, or is to be, if in the future? Will the Br.'s faith "always embrace," the ten last verses of this xxth chap., as to be fulfilled literally, or will he "quibble?" If literal, he must admit that the dead not the living, were judged, and that the casting of death and hell into the lake of fire is the second death, and not the burning to death of living creatures. Will he quibble and "reject the statement?" If so, let him cease to write uncharitably of others, and make "statements" what faith will do.

Woodstock Valley, Conn.

The Hollow in the Jaw.

BY REV. ADDISON BALLARD, D. D.

The strength of the bravest warrior is spent by marching and the heats of battle and he faints without timely refreshment. He is set upon by thirst, an inward enemy more formidable than armed battalions. Be he never so hardy and heroic, never so devoted to his leader and never so loyal to his cause, he must soon lie down and give over unless the cry of this inward want be answered. When Sampson had slain a thousand men with the "jaw of an ass," being sore athirst, "he called upon the Lord and said, Thou hast given this great deliverance into the hands of thy servant, and now shall I die for thirst and fall into the hand of the uncircumcised? But God clave a hollow place that was in the jaw, and there came water thereout; and when he had drunk, his spirit came again and he revived."

The blessed Bible is the weapon with which the earnest Christian lays about him, and with which he slays his spiritual enemies and the enemies of God around him. He grows weary in this conflict. He experiences soul impoverishment, soul thirst, soul-exhaustion. The sins he rebukes disturb his own breast. The joys he depicts forsake his own heart. The strength he urges others to seek deserts him. He who has fed hundreds is hungry. He who has watered thousands, is himself sore athirst. It is said that Payson sometimes felt so utterly barren of spiritual life that but for the urgency of friends, he would not have gone intothe pulpit. He needed the sermon more than they did, for whom he prepared it. One of the most successful pastors New England ever had, once said to me when on a visit at his house, "You think I have a great deal to do, and I have; preaching, visiting, extra meetings, Sunday school, receiving calls, entertaining guests—but all this is the smallest and easiest part of it. The hardest work a minister has to do is, to keep his own heart." It is not easy to conceive a sadder condition than that of a preacher—one called to stand always in the front rank, and take the brunt of battle—fighting on mechanically through sheer force of will and intellect, bereft of the inward solace of Christ's manifested presence, leadership and love. But he need not do this long, and we praise the mercy of the ever compassionate Father that he need not. He has one unfailing resource which in due time will always bring another. These two resources are prayer and the Word—yes, that very same Word which he has exhausted his strength in wielding for the slaughter of God's and Israel's foes. Prayer itself is a support, a refreshment, to pour the fainting, desolate, forsaken heart's sorrows into the ear of Infinite Pity. It was an alleviation of our blessed Lord's expiring agony that he could cry out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me. While I work by my death this great deliverance for thy chosen, must I myself be delivered over into the eternal darkness?" In his utmost extremity the child still clings to his unseen Father. He still cries, "My God! my God!" He makes God the only refuge and believes that God is still his God.

But if prayer is a support, the answer which it is sure to bring is yet more precious, more sustaining, more enlivening. There is many a hollow place in the jaw which God cleaves in answer to his faithful servant's cry—many a text which seemed utterly dry before and only fit to be used as a rough, slaying weapon of the world's sin, which God smites and opens for his fainting discouraged soldier, and from which pure sparkling waters gush forth for the slaking of his sore thirst. Every promise is such a hollow—every assurance of divine succor, every assurance of success and of victory at last. What a hollow place is this: "But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, fear not; for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine." The spring is deep if this were all. But lower your plummet and you find it deeper still: "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee"—and so on through every clause and verse and chapter, of all the books of all the promises, deeper than our short lines can sound, richer than our weak thoughts can grasp, fuller than our shallow hearts can appropriate—growing deeper, richer, and more blessed until that latest but one, "Lo, I am with you always," and this the latest of all, "Behold, I come quickly."

Even so, blessed Saviour, thou art with us: Even so, come Lord Jesus.—The Advance.

Always Shining.—Here is a pleasant thought for all modest people:

"My child," said a lady to me many years ago, pointing to the beautiful evening star, just as it was dropping out of sight, "did you ever think that that bright star is always shining?" Always shining! How often has the calm assurance brought comfort and repose! Sometimes the sky is dark with clouds; that star touches their linings with silver. Sometimes the sun conceals it, yet it shines, and when the more dazzling light has passed from our view, how pure, clear, steadfast, burns its ray! Sometimes its gleam falls upon other shores remote from us; but we await its return confident that neither time nor space can change its gentle radiance.

Always shining! What can more aptly express the influence of sincere Christian life! Shining when clouds are in the sky; softening their rough edges with the light of patience, meekness, forbearance. Shining when the sun of worldly prosperity is brightest; lending thereto beams of charity, love, tender pity, which the world may not regard, yet which angels look upon with delight. Shining at home; shining abroad; when all men may see, when only the Father in heaven knows and approves. One star may differ from another star in glory, but the glory of all is constant. One Christian may differ from another Christian in endeavor, in the field of labor, in adaptation to effort; but the endeavor, the labor, the effort, when given to God and spent in God's service, must needs shine. Some light from every star, touches upon some point. Some good comes from the feeblest worker, so he or she be faithful in well doing. No effort given to right and humanity is ever quite in vain. And, oh, humble Christian, thinking of this, be strong. Be like the star, "always shining." You cannot tell how many will take confidence from your steadfastness; how soft and soothing your little light will fall upon some heart; what an influence for good you may extend over all with whom you have to do. Be always shining.—The Advance. C. L. P.

"Papa Goes There."

BY MRS. C. A. SOULE.

"Mayn't I go with you papa? please say I may."

The words were uttered in a plaintive and sadly entreative tone, the hands of the speaker clasping the knees of the listener.

It was a boy of seven years that lisped them; a beautiful boy, with fair high brow, around which there clustered a glorious wreath of auburn curls; with dark, flashing eyes; cheeks rosy with health; lips like the cherries of summer; and a voice like the birds that taste them. There were tears in those eyes at this time, though, and the dimpled mouth was quivering.

It was a man of some thirty-five who listened to this plea; a man who had been of noble looks and princely bearing. Ay, had been! for the blighting truth had been written over his form and face. His locks were matted, his forehead scowling, his eyes red, but not with tears; there were furrows on his cheeks too, and a brutish look to the expression of his lips. Twice did the little boy address him ere he answered. Then pushing the child rudely from him, he said in a stern voice, "No, no. It's no place for you."

Again those small hands encircled the knees.

"You go, papa. Why can't I go too? Do let me go."

For a moment the heart of the inebriate seemed to wake from its sleep. He shuddered when he thought of the character of the place his pure souled boy would enter. He took the child tenderly in his arms, and kissed him as of old; then putting him down, he said kindly:

"You must not ask me to take you there. It is no place for little boys," and seizing his hat hurried from the room, murmuring to himself as he paced the way to the brilliant bar-room, "and no place for men either. Would to God I had never gone."

For a long time Willie stood just where his father had left him; then turning to the few embers that faintly glowed upon the hearth, he sat down in his little chair, and resting his head in his mother's lap, said earnestly:

"Mamma, why isn't that pretty store a good place for little boys? Papa loves to go there."

It was a trying question to the poor heart-broken woman. She had so far kept from her son the knowledge of his father's sin. She could not bear that he should look with shame upon him, or that his pure and gentle heart should commune with so intense a grief. Kindly she toyed with his long ringlets for a while, then said endearingly:

"Papa knows better than you what is best for his little boy. When you grow older, you will learn why he does not wish to take you."

"Mind the cradle now, Willie; I'll come back soon, and then you shall have some supper, and a nice fire to sit by too," and taking a large basket of ironed clothes she went out. A wealthy mother would have been frightened at the thought only of leaving so young a boy at night all alone with an infant to care for, and an open fire to sit beside. But poor Mrs. M——, knew well enough she could trust Willie with his sister, and as for burning up, there was not coal enough to thaw his fingers. No, she did not fear to leave him, for he had thus been left many a time, and always carefully obeyed her.

And he meant to now; but, poor little fellow, his thoughts would wander to that brilliant corner store, whither he knew his father always went at evening, and his brain was busy with eager wanderings. He knew his father loved to go, and there must be something he liked, for he never came home again till long after Willie was asleep. What lay behind those scarlet curtains was a mystery he sought in vain to unravel.

At length he whispered eagerly, as if to encourage a longing wish, "Papa used to tell me, if I wanted to know anything very bad, to persevere and I would find out. Now I do want to know what makes him love to go there so—I know there must be pretty things behind those windows. I shouldn't wonder"—and his cheeks were glowing—"if it was a fairy house. Why can't I go?"

Poor Willie! Temptation to know was too strong to be resisted; so he hunted through the closet for a candle, for he was a thoughtful little fellow, and would not leave his little sister in the only danger that could menace her. He found a bit of tallow dip, and lighting it, he drew the stand close to her, that the flames might scare away the rats and mice, should they sally out ere his return.

"I won't stay long, pretty dear," said he, pressing a tender kiss on her sleeping lids, and drawing the blanket close over her fair arms.

"No, I'll come back soon, but I do want to take one peep." Swiftly his little feet bore him over the pavement, and in a trice he stood before the curtained window.

"How light it is, and how they laugh and talk. It must be funny in there."

A cold November blast swept round the corner as he spoke, penetrating his thin summer clothes, and causing his flesh to quiver, and his teeth to chatter.

"I don't believe they'd hurt me if I should go in a while, I'm such a little boy, and I'm so cold out here," he said as he pushed the door carefully from him and slipping in and closing it without a breath of noise. For a moment he was bewildered by the light and clatter, but finding that no one seemed to notice him, he stole toward the glowing grate, and spread out his purple palms before the blaze. The groups of men that encircled the bar were drinking when he entered. Soon, however, they sat down their glasses and dispersed about the room.

"Halloo," said one in a loud tone, as going to the fire he spied little Willie, "What are you doing here, my little fellow? Who are you and what do you want."

"I don't want anything only to see what you do here. My name is Willie M——. My Papa loves to come here, and it looked so pleasant through the window, I thought I would come too. But I must not stay long, for I've left the baby alone."

The man's tones were softened as he spoke again to him.

"And where is your mother, boy?"

"O, she's gone to take home the wash, sir. Papa don't get as much work as he used to once, and we're very poor now and she has to help him now."

"And does it look as pleasant in here as you thought it would, my child?"

"O yes it does sir. I don't wonder papa loves to come here so much, it's so cold and dark at home. But I should think he would bring me and mamma and little sis. How she would laugh to see this fire and all these pretty bottles, and those flowers with lights in them. Please sir," said he earnestly, and he seized the rough hands of the listener, "please sir, tell me why little boys can't come here with their fathers?"

"For God's sake don't tell him, Bancroft," said a deep anguished voice. "He deems me pure and holy. Heavens! What a wretch I am! My boy—my boy!" and Willie was clasped in his father's arms—"you have saved me from earth's vilest hell. Here with my hands on thy sinless brow, I promise never again to touch the cup I've drank so deep. And my brothers in sin, as you value your soul's salvation, tempt me not to break my vow. Help me heaven,—help me men, so to live hereafter, that papa may never blush to take his boy along—that if papa goes there, Willie may go too."

Silently the door closed after them, and silence dwelt in the saloon behind them. The preacher had been there in cherub form, and crazy, loose, unholy thought, or ribald jest was hushed. One by one they stole away, and many a wife wore smiles that night; nor did the old bar-tender even, curse the little one who had robbed him of so many dimes. Too deeply in his heart had sunk the voice of the cherub preacher.

"Don't you like me papa? Are you cross at me?" asked little Willie, while they stood a few moments on the pavement; for the scene in the bar-room was an enigma to the child, and he half feared a reproof.

"I was thinking what mamma would like best for supper," said the father.

"Was you? was you?" was the eager question in a gladsome voice. "Oh, then I know you ain't cross. O, get oysters and crackers and tea, papa; and a candle, because there is only a piece. And please, papa, tell mamma not to be cross with me 'cause I left the baby. I don't believe she will though, 'cause you wouldn't perhaps, have come home yet, and she does love to have you at home so much. O, I feel just like crying, I feel so glad."

"And I feel like crying too," said his father solemnly; and ere midnight he did cry, and his wife, but they were holy tears washing his heart of the dust that had gathered on its beauty, and hers of the sorrow that had draped it like a pall.—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

SECTARIAN APPEALS TO THE BIBLE.

A FRIEND in the far West sent us the following article, which he cut from some paper, but of what sect, or whether of any, we know not. We give it for consideration, and shall append some remarks at the close:

"THE BIBLE AND THE BIBLE ALONE."

It startles one to find in print, every now and again, as fresh as a daisy, certain simple old phrases which have been long since given up by all men, who are in the habit of doing any thinking, as hopelessly meaningless. It rather discourages one's hopes of his race to find innocent gentlemen bringing out these venerable phrases, and calling the world's attention to them, precisely as if their potency had never been called in question.

The Bible—that is, the English translation of it—is in the hands of all Christians. And these Christians, nevertheless, find ground in the Bible, for all their various sectarianisms. They have the same words, but they cannot agree on their meaning. The Baptist finds the Bible bitterly opposed, so he says, to infant baptism, and to any other method of baptizing grown folk, except that of dipping them backwards. The Presbyterian, on the other hand, finds the Bible teaches infant baptism, and almost prescribes pouring or sprinkling as the common method of administration.

The same Presbyterian finds Presbyterian Church government in the Bible, while the Congregationalist finds the Congregational government, and the Churchman finds Episcopacy. The "Seventh Day Baptist" finds the Jewish Sabbath commanded, and not the Lord's Day, in the Bible all the rest of us read as well as he. And the Quaker appeals to the same Bible for refusing to be baptized or to receive the Lord's Supper.

Every sect appeals to the Bible for its opinions. The most opposite senses are taken from the very same words. The most contradictory notions base themselves on the same authority, and "the Bible alone" is quoted, for and against, every known article of Christian faith or opinion.

Now all this has been, for a long time, visible to all sects and conditions of men. They have come to their conclusions thereupon. They know that when the Bible is appealed to, the controversy is by no means settled—it has indeed only begun. The contest is about the meaning of the Bible. In Law Courts the debates are about the meaning of the law. It is only happy innocents, who know nothing about law, that labor under the, in that case, harmless delusion, of supposing that any child can read the statute and decide its meaning on sight. The controversy is about this very meaning which they innocently suppose anybody can understand, and it takes elaborate discussion and long judicial consultation very often to determine it, and then the decision may be, by a higher tribunal, reversed.

But, as a matter of fact, "the Bible and the Bible alone," exists for no man. The great mass of people never can read "the Bible alone" in any case. They read a translation of it, and for the accuracy of that translation they have to depend on the good faith, the good sense, the learning, piety, and honesty of other people. A translation is always, also, a comment. It gives the translator's view of the meaning, his judgment about it, which may be right, but may also be wrong. "The Bible," therefore, to the great mass of men, is the Bible, plus somebody's interpretation of the Bible. They cannot have the Bible at all unless they take it with this interpretation. It is a necessary condition of their having any Bible at all, that they have it plus an interpretation and an explanation by men.

But, even when a man can read Greek or Hebrew with some comfort and ease, he is not much better off. He cannot have "the Bible alone," do what he will. He takes the meaning of Greek and Hebrew words on the credit of other people. He accepts the accuracy of his copy on the good faith of scores of different copyists and editors. He takes explanations of this matter and the other on the assurance of scores of different men. The whole thing has been handed down, from hand to hand, through generations, and his faith that the Bible is the Bible (a very important conviction indeed,) is not derived from "the Bible alone," but entirely from outside testimony.

These are reflections that have occurred to all men who are in the habit of doing any thinking, and it is therefore startling to such men to find the old phrase put forth with the innocent freshness and unconsciousness of a brain that never thinks—"the Bible and the Bible alone"—as if all a man had to do to see the truth without any possibility of question was to turn to the English translation of the Old and New Testaments and read. One wonders where such people live, and how they continue to go through the world with their eyes shut to facts that are certainly prominent enough.

There is surely a meaning in the Bible, a truth there, and one plain truth and meaning, and no more. Infant baptism, for instance, is according to the word of God, or it is not. That Word cannot allow it and forbid it at the same time. How shall we decide whether it is there or not? Who shall decide? Evidently "the Bible alone" phrase has not decided it, and never can. Both sides claim it, though it is plain that one or the other must be most terribly in the wrong, must be given over to a strong delusion and must believe a lie.

And here are all the other contradictions which split up American Christianity into a half hundred sects. Will "the Bible alone" settle them? Do they not each appeal to the Bible confidently and honestly? Does not each sect condemn its opposite on the ground that it goes, in some one thing or other, against the Bible?

Churchmen see all this, as anybody can see it who will look, and they are not surprised. They are surprised that men will learn no lessons from it, but will persist in going on repeating old phrases which never had any sense in their best estate, and have long since had what little they were supposed to possess beaten out of them.

We find, for instance, in a Church paper, the following, in a review of a somewhat notorious little book:

> Our motto is, "the Bible, the Bible only," and we will stand by it till the end. Upon this the whole matter hinges, and any thing in our Church systems contrary to the Bible we would have expunged without compromise.

Now, who is to decide whether any thing is "contrary to the Bible?" Will the gentleman who writes this undertake the business? And, if he is willing, will other people accept his decision?

We perfectly agree with him—we have no doubt all Christians, all honest men of all names, would accept his words—"Any thing contrary to the Bible we would have expunged without compromise." But we ask who shall decide? He picks out something "contrary to the Bible" and wants it "expunged." We insist that it perfectly agrees with the Bible, and shall not be "expunged." Who shall decide between us? "The Bible only." Why, it is the very Bible that is in question! The thing to be decided is, whether this thing he wants "expunged" is or is not Bible!

It will hardly do to say that any Christian man desires to retain any belief contrary to the Word of God. It certainly will not do to say that any respectable body of Christians, organized as a Church, have deliberately made up their minds to hold a faith point blank against the Bible. We are altogether too charitable to believe that of any decent Christian man, or Christian Church. They are just as anxious as the writer of the above phrase to "expunge" everything "contrary to the Bible." But who will tell them just what is "contrary," that they may "expunge" it? Our friend, like scores of other people, is undoubtedly ready to tell them. But the trouble is, they have as good a right to their opinion as he has, and we who are indifferent to his notions and theirs equally, have to confess that they are just as likely to be right as he.

Still he, like other men, who are certain they are right in their notions, and who have no doubt their interpretation of the Bible is infallible, has a way of explaining all these differences of opinion, and it is only fair to allow him to state it.

When these men speak of things "contrary to the Bible," they are not talking vaguely. They know what they mean. When they say "the Bible only," they express something definite to themselves. They mean by "the Bible," the Bible as they understand it—the Bible, plus the sense they give the Bible. Meanwhile it is very apparent, even to them, that other people do not find in the Bible the same sense they do. Now this might make some men doubt a little whether their interpretation is as certain as they have fancied. But it never gives any doubt to the men who talk of "the Bible and the Bible only," and who stand ready to set us all right with infallible promptitude, and "expunge" everything "contrary to the Bible" on sight. That nine-tenths of the people with the same English translation they possess, and with at least hearts as honest and brains as clear, differ totally from them on the question, never disturbs their comfortable complacency. They go on urging "the Bible and the Bible only," with a heavy pertinacity which is almost sublime in its determination to learn nothing. They have a method of explaining things which allows them still to insist that if you take "the Bible and the Bible only," you must inevitably think as they do. Here it is:

> We hold that the reason why so many, who have the open Bible, hold unscriptural views, is because they either never read it at all, or read it without seeking explanation from above; we also hold that the smallest school girl can know more about God, if she reads His word prayerfully and humbly, than the most learned divine studying it in his own wisdom and intellectual power.

Surely this is modesty in excess! We differ from a gentleman on some question of religious doctrine. The gentleman appeals to "the Bible and the Bible only." We accept the appeal, and prove, according to our conscience and intellect that his notions are not in the Bible at all, and that our view has plain Scripture in its favor, and, instead of our shaking, in the slightest degree, his self-complacency, he turns about and tells us we do not say our prayers! If we were illuminated by wisdom from above we would perfectly agree with him. We do not agree with him, and therefore we are not so illuminated. For he is! In other words, the claim is that he is divinely inspired to interpret the English Bible correctly!

That, we suppose, expressed or unexpressed is the way in which the mass who have taken "the Bible and the Bible only," that is, the Bible and their private reason upon it, explain the fact that people differ from them. It is a very curious culmination of private interpretation, and the charity begotten by private judgment.

The Baptist thinks that if the Presbyterian would only "seek explanation from above" he would stop baptizing infants. The Presbyterian, in his secret soul, believes the Baptist would baptize his children if only he would pray heartily for help to understand the Bible. There is a vague feeling that if men would only ask for heavenly illumination they would see the true meaning of the Bible, and, therefore, since they differ from us, who have the true meaning, it is certain they do not say their prayers heartily and therefore do not get that illumination.

It is very curious, however, as the end of the thing, that we should all conclude that those who differ from us, or, as our friend says, "who hold unscriptural views," (for, differing from us and "holding unscriptural views," is the same thing of course,) either do not read the Bible or do not pray!

John Wesley knelt down, Bible before him, and prayed for an explanation about "election." He got up an Armenian, and staid so till he died. George Whitfield knelt down, at the same time, Bible before him, and prayed for an "explanation from above," and got up a high Calvinist, and staid so till he died.

They are both, we trust, in Paradise now, and have learned that Calvinism and Armenianism are about equally valuable in this universe, and that the world can get on very satisfactorily without the poor rags and tags of either dead ism.

Their earthly experience, however, is not very encouraging to either the theory, the charity, or humility contained in the extract above.

Remarks by the Editor of the Herald of Life.

The writer of the foregoing has made some good remarks, and justly censured the proud assumption of those whose bigotry assumes they have the truth because they have prayed about the matter. A man may pray ever so earnestly and honestly, yet if he does not use the reason God has given him, and employ his understanding, he may be a fanatic or a deceived man after all.

The writer of the above article seems not to have discovered where the difficulty lies; or, if discovered, has not stated what it is. Men fail in their construction of the Scriptures, mainly, because they do not first come to an understanding of the known perfections of God. The attributes of God must harmonize; and the leading one of all is, "God is Love." All His other attributes agree with this. "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son," etc. Any construction of Bible language that does not harmonize with this attribute and this statement of it, is not to be accepted, no matter what other means men have employed to understand the teachings of the Bible. Reason is not to be despised or neglected: for God saith, "Come now let us reason together," etc.—Isa. i. 18. If men will not use their reason, which God has given them and called on them to use, they may "pray," and study Hebrew and Greek all their lives, and still remain ignorant of the true sense of the Bible, because they set other attributes at war with the leading one of God, which is "Love." This distinguishes God from all false deities, and from all imperfect creatures and their theories. With the fact that "God is Love," constantly before us, harmonized with all his other known perfections, if any thing is found in any version of the Bible that conflicts with this, or cannot be made to harmonize with it, there must be some mistake, somewhere, in the recorder, the transcriber, or translator, and may be safely passed as not authoritative of our faith; for no man can believe that two and three make seven, or that light and darkness are one and the same.

It comes to this, at last, that any man and every man has the right to construe the language of the Bible according to his own judgment of its teaching, responsible to no man or body of men for his belief, but to God only. For his conduct, so far as it may interfere with the rights of others, he is responsible to his fellow-men. For his faith, God only is to judge him. Here is personal responsibility; and let every man be made to feel it, and not take refuge under church creeds, or decrees of Synods, Councils, or Conferences.

NEW ENGLAND JOTTINGS.

BY RUFUS WENDELL.

VII.

SUGGESTIONS ON 2 COR. V. 16.

THE Emphatic Diaglott's rendering of 2 Cor. v. 16 was inaccurately quoted in Bro. Patterson's recent article on "Christ in the Flesh." The passage stands in that version precisely thus: "So that we, from this time, respect No one on account of Flesh; and even if we esteemed Christ on account of Flesh, yet now we no longer thus regard him."

I give two other translations. American Bible Union: "So that we henceforth know no one according to the flesh; and if also we have known Christ according to the flesh, yet now we no longer know him." Dr. Noyes: "So that we henceforth know no one according to the flesh; and if we have even known Christ according to the flesh, yet now we no longer know him."

Remarks.

1. The Greek word oudeis is in nearly a hundred instances rendered no man in our common version of the New Testament. The above translations give its more literal sense—no one. In a cursory examination, I have seen in Dr. Noyes no instance, and in the Bible Union but one, where the word is rendered no man. The Englishman's Greek Concordance, under the word oudeis, says, "'No one,' is the literal rendering of the passages translated 'no man.'"

2. The B. U. and Dr. N., it will be noticed, retain "know" and "have known;" a slight examination should convince any one that this agreement with the common version rests on a solid basis, while the Diaglott's "esteemed" and "regard" do not.

3. The word "thus" in the Diaglott's rendering has nothing to represent it in the original.

4. In substituting "according to" for "after," the B. U. and Dr. N. give to the Greek preposition kata a rendering which is very often given to it in the common version. On the other hand, the Diaglott's "on account of" is, I believe, not found among Robinson's definitions of kata, though nearly three pages of his Lexicon are devoted to the word; and I am also of the opinion that kata is never rendered "on account of" in our common version. The meaning according to once belonged to the word after, but is, according to Webster, a now obselete sense of the term. He gives the following example from Bacon: "He takes greatness of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value."

5. The "also" of the Bible Union, and the "even" of the Diaglott and Dr. Noyes, are from the Greek kai: the reader must use his own judgment in choosing between the renderings.

6. The versions before us, in substituting "no longer" for the "no more" of King James, properly bring into greater prominence the time idea conveyed by the original word (ouketi).

7. Bro. Patterson's explanation of the passage under notice is unsatisfactory; resting, as it does, upon an erroneous assumption respecting its inspired author. That assumption is, that the apostle Paul, at one time in his history, "thought" that Jesus was "for salvation" to the Jews only. My brother supposes that it was in cherishing this opinion, and while cherishing it, that Paul had "known Christ after the flesh."

But his premise is unsound. Paul never, so far as the divine record informs us, thought that Jesus was for salvation to the Jews only. Bro. Patterson will unquestionably admit that he could have entertained no such opinion prior to his conversion; for the apostle's own confession touching that period of his life is this: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." (Acts xxvi. 9).

How was it after his conversion? Did he, like Peter, wait "several years" to learn "that God is no respecter of persons"? Or was he put through a course of instruction so very brief as to make his case, in the particular under consideration, wholly unlike that of his predecessors in the apostleship? The Scriptures shall instruct us.

And, first, we have the express words of Jesus. To Ananias he said, in a vision, concerning Saul (Acts ix. 15): "Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." The disciple thus instructed, free from any temptation to put a narrow construction upon his Lord's assurance, goes straight to "Straight" street, finds "Brother Saul" the blind convert, puts his hand upon him that he may receive his sight, and then says to him (Acts xxii. 14): "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness to all men of what thou hast seen and heard."

Equally explicit is the testimony of Paul himself. Writing "unto the churches of Galatia," he says (epistle, Ch. i. 15, 16): "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen [tois ethnesin, the Gentiles]; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood," etc. Again (Romans i. 5): "By whom we have received grace and apostleship, for [Noyes, "in order to produce"] obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name."

In the light of the foregoing citations turn now and read carefully the first seven verses of the third chapter of Ephesians; and judge whether Paul's conversion to Christ, and the disclosures connected with his call to the apostleship, did not at once break down, in his mind, "the middle wall of partition" that had existed between "the commonwealth of Israel," on the one hand, and those whom he styles "strangers from the covenant of promise," on the other. In my opinion they did; and, if this view of the matter is the correct one, it follows that Paul's having once "known Christ after the flesh" can not mean that he ever thought that Christ was for salvation to the Jews only.

It is always well to refute a false interpretation of a passage, even though we may be unprepared to suggest a better. What our passage does teach, may form the topic of a future article.

SALEM, Mass., March 18, 1870.

THE JUBILEE.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

IN the HERALD OF LIFE, March 9th, Br. Barbour says (under the heading—"Where are We?") "The Jubilee trump was sounded in 1843, calling on the people of God to prepare for the restitution of all things. Under the law it was blown on the tenth day of the seventh month of the year preceding the Jubilee."

On reading the above, I was led to the following reflections: Were the people of God under the law in 1843? If they were not, the Jubilee trump did not then sound, and it was a false alarm. For it is evident that the saints will not get the inheritance until the last Jubilee; in which the land goes back to its former owner, which is the Lord from heaven.

So if the last Jubilee was not in 1843 or '4, then there is another in the future, and the '43 trumpet gave a false alarm. But if the '43 trumpet was not a false alarm, then the last Jubilee is passed, and Gentile Christians have lost their hope, because they were not saved in it.

Again, Br. B. says, there are more evidences for 1873 than there were for 1843, and yet he says the Jubilee trump sounded in 1843. Then it cannot sound again until 1893; and, therefore, there is no evidence at all for 1873, for the Jubilees are but one in fifty years. Bear in mind the fact that there is no jubilee in the gospel dispensation. It is found only under the law dispensation; and if that has ended without a final Jubilee, we have all lost our hope, both Jew and Gentile; for the restitution of all things is in a Jubilee year, and that year ends the Mosaic law. So if the Jubilee trump sounded in 1843, "WHERE ARE WE," SURE ENOUGH?

There is no reproach to be attached to any one who was in the '43 movement. With the dim light that then shone upon the prophetic page, it was very natural for the good children to drop into it. But let us beware of the future by reviewing the past, ard seeing wherein we erred. The fact is, the law is not finally ended. The seventy weeks of Daniel are not consecutive; there is a break in them, and the law died like Moses, its type, with its eyes not dim, or its natural force abated; that is, it died fit for further usefulness. "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every man presseth against it."—Douay Bible.

The law could not give life, else righteousness had been by the law. So Moses, being law, could not lead the children of Israel into the land of promise. So he died before his life time was out to make room for Joshua (a type of Christ), to take the people from the hand of the law, and lead them into the promised inheritance. So when John baptized Jesus in Jordan the law died before its life time was out, to make room for Christ to take the people from the hand of the law, and lead them into the kingdom. So here, in Jordan, is the grave of Moses found at last. This was shown on the Mount of Transfiguration. There were Moses and Elijah talking with Jesus. This was a vision of Christ's coming in his kingdom.—See Matt. xvi. 28.

In this vision, Moses, whom everybody knew was dead, was seen alive. This was to show that the law will be revived again in the world to come; and used again until its eyes are dim and its natural force used up. Elijah was there also. He was a Jewish prophet, and one who had not died. His appearance showed the prophecies to be living oracles from the time they are given until they are all fulfilled.

And Moses and Elijah, talking with Christ in vision, shows that law and prophecy, in the world to come, will go hand in hand. This is seen by the following texts: Isa. i. 25, 26; Isa. lxvi. 21; Micah iv. 2; Zech. viii. 19; Zech. xiv. 16; Mal. iii. 3, 4; Matt. xix. 28.

The seventy weeks are not ended. God reckons the time of his servants while they serve him; and when they cease to serve him their time stops until they return to his service again. The Jewish clock stopped when they rejected Christ; and when the Gentiles embraced him their clock was set agoing, to run until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; that is, until the Gentiles are grafted into the Jewish stock, and then the old clock will run out the remainder of the seventy weeks, with both Jew and Gentile under the law until the law ends in the last great Jubilee, when both Jew and Gentile get their inheritance together.

The law has not yet accomplished that which it was designed for; and if it never does, God will be defeated. It must, therefore, live again, like Moses on the Mount, until its natural force is all used up in accomplishing that unto which it was sent.

The design of it was the universal conquest of all nations, to reduce them to the service of God. This failed under David by reason of the wickedness of his people; and he lamented it in the following strain: "But my people would not hearken to my voice: and Israel would none of me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels. Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways! I soon should have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. The haters of the Lord should have submitted themselves unto him: and their time would have endured forever."—Psa. lxxxi. 11 to 15.

This David would have done, had his people been righteous. But his Son, a greater than David, will complete the conquest of the nations.—See Psa. lxxii. 8, 11. But he must do it under the law, to carry out the design of the law which was purposed in David. He will "strike through kings in the day of his wrath."—Psa. cx. 5. He will go forth and fight as in the day of battle.—Zech. xiv. 3. The gospel is a gospel of peace: fighting belongs under the law.

Some are expecting the Lord in 1873. He may come before that; but the saints cannot get their inheritance until the last Jubilee, and that cannot come until the end of the law, and this does not end until the end of the seventy weeks.

It is certain that the good children have been sadly disappointed in time; and it is equally certain they are as liable to be disappointed in events. We are too apt to look for that first which we desire most. The Jews expected Messiah would restore the kingdom to Israel as soon as he came. And because he did not, they rejected him. So the Christian expects the kingdom as soon as he comes; and if he does not get it then, it is to be feared that some will reject him. He is expected to come first to Jerusalem, after meeting his saints in the air. But the Scriptures do not so inform us. He will come first to Egypt.—See Isa. xix. Next to Sinai. "And he said, the Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them: he shined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thousand of saints."—Deut. xxxiii. 2.—See Jude xiv. "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran."—Hab. iii. 3. He is to come also to Edom and Bozrah.—Isa. lxiii. 1; and to mount Olives.—Zek. xiv. 4. And to Mount Zion.—Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14. None of these prophecies have been fulfilled; but they are all alike true; therefore we should not expect him to Mount Zion before the prophetic time; nor can we expect to inherit the kingdom before the tares are gathered out and burnt up.

It is more necessary that we know the events connected with his coming, than to know the time; for if we know the events we shall be prepared to know that it is He; but though we could know the time, and not the events, we should be very likely to be destroyed for lack of knowledge.—Hosea iv. 6.

I am satisfied there must be a better knowledge of the events associated with the second Advent, or there will be a greater disappointment, and more ruinous consequences than ever have been in all the time disappointment.

May the Lord open our eyes to an understanding of these things.

THE DOCTRINE OF IMMORTALITY. By JAMES H. WHITMORE, Buchanan, Michigan: Joshua V. Himes. 1870. $1, post-paid.

TABLE OF CONTENTS. Chapter I. Historical Inquiry; II. Jewish Belief; III. Early Christian Belief; IV. The Argument from Reason; V. Scriptural Argument—The Lesson of Creation; VI. The Adamic Penalty; VII. Traduction vs. Creationism; VIII. Life and Death; IX. General Testimony of Scripture; X. The Intermediate State; XI. The Christian Redemption.

We have received a copy of the above work from the Publishers. The largest portion of it, we have read carefully; the remainder, for want of time, we have been able only to glance over. In the main, we give the work our unqualified approbation, and hope it may have a wide circulation. The exception we take to the work, is where in two or three instances the author speaks of the resurrection of "all men," which is clearly irreconcilable with his general argument, and subversive of some of his points. His remarks however, on this exceptional point are very brief, and we do not now urge them. We hope all our friends will avail themselves of a copy, if for no other reason, as a text book; as the author has given many quotations, which are valuable to have at hand, from other authors and writers.

FROM ABBY A. PERRY.

BR. STORRS: I grow stronger every day in the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ," and proclaim it fearlessly, whether men will hear or forbear.

I find much opposition, for there is not an Adventist within miles of me, of any description, and I never hear an Advent or Life sermon, only at Camp-meeting. I have learned to "Cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils." I have found, as David said, "It is better to put confidence in God than in princes, or in the sons of men." Why? "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, and in that very day, his thoughts perish." That is reason enough why we should not trust in the word of uninspired men. But I can say with David, "O, how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day. Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than my enemies, for they are ever with me. I have more understanding than my teachers; for, thy testimonies are my meditation."—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." Praise the Lord, brethren and sisters for the light of "Life only in Christ."

May the God of Jacob bless, and keep you all from evil, and preserve you blameless unto his kingdom, is the prayer of your sister.

SCOTLAND, Conn., March 1870.

ELD. J. LEWIS, writes from Newbern, Ill., We are not sitting on the stool of do nothing. No, no; that would never do for us in these last days of peril, when the last day scoffers are saying, Where is the promise of his coming? O, if there ever was a time for God's servants to work it is now. But as Br. W. S. Campbell says in his Word on Labor, the prospect is quite dark. Dark indeed; so it appears to me. We want to be found in the line of duty, and we pray, often weeping, that the path of duty may be made plain. But still all is dark as to our course the coming summer, for we are getting old and stricken in years, so that we can't travel on foot without scrip or purse, as we have heretofore done. But lest I weary your patience and that of the Brethren and Sisters, I will call attention to Br. C.'s article, in the paper of Feb. 23, for we feel confident it is time to act on the subject in order to succeed. As it is, the cause suffers. Well, we feel happy in God, and can say as John Wesley said on his dying bed, "The best of all is, God is with us."

A. A. BABCOCK, Albion, Mich., writes: I send $5. Two dollars for the paper, and $3 for tracts. I do not sell them. If I can get people to read I am well paid; and if they burn them, I have done what I could, and leave the matter with Him who causes the gentle showers to fall and the tender grass to grow. I am glad that God has lengthened out your life to battle with the hostile host, and to steady the feeble limbs of the Pilgrims; and I think there are many hearty prayers that your life may still be prolonged, if consistent, till the day when the King of glory shall appear and take His waiting bride home. When shall all the saints, with one united voice, cry—Come Lord Jesus, take the kingdom and dominion, complete the restitution, and give Thy saints the great reward.

MRS. URSULA EATON, Leonardsburg, Ohio, writes: Feeling as if I would be glad to contribute to the Tract Fund, I send $1. I know it is but a mite, and but a poor offering for the light and comfort that I receive from time to time. I would not go back to the old "theology" for all the wealth and honor this world can bestow. Yours, in the hope of eternal life.

DELIBERATE with caution, but act with decision; and yield with graciousness or oppose with firmness.

CHURCH THEATRES, ETC.

CHURCH Theatres are becoming common in these days of great revivals, and "the conversion of the" church by the "world." It is a mournful fact that instead of "the conversion of the world" by the church, the reverse seems to be fast becoming true. Religion has become popular; yea, actually inviting, by the "sociables" and pleasure taking parties it is constantly inventing to entice young and old to identify themselves with the church. One of the last announcements of this sort we found in the "Brooklyn Eagle," a short time since, as follows:

ELM PLACE CHURCH SOCIABLES.—The last of the series of entertainments of the Young People's Association of the Elm Place Congregational Church, will be given on Tuesday evening next, in the form of amateur theatricals. The bill includes the farce of "Ici on parle Francais," and the pantomime "Search After Happiness." This will be an opportunity for people who never go to a theatre, to enjoy a theatrical entertainment in a church.

We learn by a later statement, in the papers, that this "theatrical entertainment in a church" came off beautifully; no doubt, supposing the world was very nearly converted: but it reminds us of the man who had become so enraptured by some kind of "spirit," that on his way home he was quite sure the ground rose up to his face, as his face and the earth frequently met. It also reminds us of the Apostle's testimony, "that in the last day perilous times shall come; for men shall be . . . lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof:" and he added, "from such turn away."—2 Tim. iii. 1–5.

It gives us no pleasure to notice these departures from the simplicity of Christ and his Apostles. We mourn the apostacy so manifest in the face of all truly pious men and women. We doubt not, many such in those churches also see and mourn it. But the pleasure-loving tide sweeps over the churches and their ministers with a resistless force. Religion, true and genuine religion, the religion of Christ and his Apostles, has so far been lost out of sight, that the "joy unspeakable and full of glory," that believers used to feel, in the "love" of Christ, has passed away, and its place is to be occupied by something more attractive to men, so as to succeed in "the conversion of the world;" hence "theatrical entertainments in a church" are got up and succeed marvellously in converting men!

Of a similar character are the so-called "Praying Bands." They form a machinery unknown to the Apostolic church; and, to say the least, of a very doubtful character. When or where did Christ and his Apostles ever go among sinners in the character of a "Praying Band?" They went forth as teachers of the truth, to show men the way of life by believing on Him whom God had sent. But praying at all, in promiscuous assemblies, they seldom, if ever, practiced. After Jesus had taught and fed the multitudes, He went away alone to pray; or, at most, had only his immediate disciples with him. Such a thing as a "Praying Band" to "get up a revival," is as unlike primitive Christianity as sober truth is to fanaticism. "Sanctify them through thy truth," prayed Jesus. It is "the belief of the truth" and "the sanctification of the Spirit" that converts and saves men, or brings life. Excitement, such as is often produced by these "Praying Bands," is not only of a doubtful character, but, we have reason to believe, soon dies away and leaves a state of dearth not soon overcome. It is like the "theatrical entertainments" spoken of above. The impressions made are not by the truth, but by the excitement of the novel operation of a trained machinery. The converts are mechanically turned out, to suit the operators; galvanized into an unnatural life, not rooted in a faith produced by the exhibition of truth.

We do not say that there are no genuine conversions at such times; but we do say, that such operations are not warranted by the practice of Jesus or his Apostles; and although some good may result from them, on the principle that God can "cause the" folly "of men to praise Him" as well as their "wrath," yet, on the whole, we are satisfied the evil is far greater than the good; and sober-minded men, who have faith in the truth, should not countenance these "theatrical" performances in their "churches."

"The Christian Advocate," of this city, a short time since, in speaking of some things objectionable in church matters, said,

"The same objections hold good against Praying Bands as at present constituted and conducted; they depreciate the pastorate, their converts largely scatter when they return to their homes, their special services underrate the regularly appointed means of grace, and they practically teach that Church communion is useless, if not debasing."

Here a part of the truth is stated distinctly: but we have urged their incompatibility with the means ordained of God for "turning men from darkness to light," and to His service. Such a course has no place in God's revealed order in subduing men to the love of Himself and his cause.

We would not wrong the "Christian Advocate" by withholding its additional remarks about these praying bands, which are as follows:

"And yet they are not an unmitigated evil. These earnest banded brethren teach the important lesson that every society should be organized into a praying band, and that all its members, young and old, male and female, should be active workers in it; and for this lesson the Methodist Church is under great obligation to the devoted and zealous Christians who have instituted this order in its midst."

Shall we say, "Let us do evil that good may come?" That these praying bands are an "evil," the "Advocate" admits; but "they are not an unmitigated evil." Why? Is it because they really "teach" a "lesson" that is worth following? We think not. The result of such a course in a church, by its own members, would not and could not, in the nature of the case, differ from that of the "Praying Band." That result the "Advocate" has stated.

AN INTERESTING COMMUNICATION.

FROM DR. J. K. FINLEY.

BR. STORRS: Some years ago, a Presbyterian Clergyman under whose ministry I sat for about a year, and whose opinion upon any subject he had investigated would be entitled to the highest respect, said to me, incidentally, that he was satisfied the 'New Birth' was not a change operated on something previously existing, but actually the impartation of a new nature, just as really as the natural birth. I replied that I had been satisfied of that truth for several years. We were just about to separate at that time, and nothing more was said by either of us. A short time ago, I sent him a copy of the "Constitution of Man" accompanying it with a letter in which I reminded him of the above remark made by him. The following letter is his reply. There are some admissions that strike me as being very remarkable. He is at present pastor of a large church, and stands decidedly and deservedly above all others in the Presbytery, and I might say, in the Synod to which he belongs. His letter gives evident indication of a want of acquaintance with our views, and I am sorry he thinks he has "neither time nor ability" to investigate them. This statement itself I think is a strange admission for a Clergyman to make.

"DR. FINLEY—Dear Sir: Your letter and pamphlet came to me in due time. I thank you for the courtesy implied in sending them. As for the pamphlet, and my opinion about it, I hardly know what to say. I have neither the time nor the ability to enter into a full discussion of the question in its details. With much that is in it, I fully agree. The whole subject of eschatology, is an unknown and unstudied field in modern Theology. The faith of the present is a series of opinions adopted in the gross, but never canvassed; and therefore it is difficult to say what men do believe. An intelligent faith must be the result of investigation and experience, and on this great practical subject, the church has not been started on a voyage of discovery."

What do you think of these admissions? I always supposed Eschatology was the great end and object of all preaching. Our Saviour's last admonition to his apostles was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be condemned." But here we are told that "on this great practical subject the church has not been started on a voyage of discovery." I think this good brother has said nothing more than the truth, however little it may redound to the credit of the church. The letter goes on to say:

"Now, you call yourself 'destructionist;' an unfortunate word: or, do you merely adopt the term of your enemies? As I hold the doctrine, it is the doctrine of Life, not of death."

The brother here loses sight of the fact that Eschatology treats of the final destiny of two great classes, the righteous and the wicked; to the one we hold the doctrine of "Life only through Christ," as opposed to the orthodox doctrine of immortal life inherent by nature in the whole race; to the other class, we hold the doctrine of total destruction by an eternal death, in opposition to the orthodox doctrine of an immortal life in misery. He goes on to say,

"I don't quite understand why you contend so much against the soul as a separate or separable element in man. Matt. x. 28, clearly implies, and on page 74 you admit it, that there is a soul and a body. So 1 Pet. i. 22, and James i. 21. Whether it can subsist separately from the body is another question. In the case of the departed, these spirits are existent either by inherent vitality, or by Divine preservation. My belief in an intermediate state, lifts me easily over many obstacles that seem to lie in your path."

We contend against the orthodox soul, because the Bible nowhere teaches that man is possessed of such an entity, and because the belief in it, has corrupted the whole theory of the gospel, making it another gospel, and because it has laid the foundation of all the dangerous heresies that have cursed the world, and the church during the last eighteen hundred years. So far from my having admitted the existence of an (orthodox) soul and a body, on page 74 of the pamphlet, I show by reference to Luke ix. 25, that it means himself, the whole man; and I give the opinion of orthodox student authorities, that it has reference to the eternal life of the man, as contradistinguished from the temporal life, which man can destroy. 1 Peter i. 22, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth," etc., might, in harmony with the universal teaching of the Bible, be rendered, "Seeing ye have purified yourselves or your lives." The same may be said of James i. 21. Our brother falls into the usual error of the orthodox, in making spirits and souls to be the same. In the Bible, where the words appear seven or eight hundred times, Pneuma is never translated soul, nor is Psuche ever translated spirit. They always have meanings distinct from each other. If he had told us what difficulties lie in our way that his belief in an intermediate state "lifts him easily over," I should have tried to remove them, but not knowing what they are, and not being able to conceive of any, I will pass this objection over. I will only say there is no difficulty if we leave them where the Bible places them, to "remain in the congregation of the dead." "Like the beasts that perish," and many similar passages. As for the Righteous "Their life is hid with Christ in God, and when he shall appear then shall they also appear with him." No difficulty here that I can see. The letter continues:

"You say, Adam was mortal, and if he obeyed he would attain to immortality, but as he disobeyed he died. But death was the penalty, and yet if Adam was not immortal, he would in any event have died, unless immortality was superadded. God said, 'Adam, if you obey you shall live forever, if you don't obey you will (not shall) die. But here you perceive death is a natural consequence and not a penalty. Why not say, Adam was immortal and that by sin he lost his immortality? The day he disobeyed he died—not in his body, not as to his moral character, but as to his immortality. Now Christ the LIFE-GIVER, the bringer to light of immortality, the second Adam, restores what was lost in the first Adam—that is immortality to all who believe. It is the gift of God through Christ. The character, not the duration of the immortal life is determined by the use we make of it. If we are true and good servants, the life is abundant, and if not, it is meagre in quality, but still unending in quantity. I remain, etc."

It is true, Adam being mortal would have died, "unless immortality was superadded," but immortality would have been superadded by giving him access to the tree of life "to eat and live forever." It was the loss of this privilege of obtaining unending life with all the blessings which would have resulted to him from the favor and approbation of God, which would have constituted the penalty. It is not the mere act of dying that renders death repulsive, but that by it we are cut off from life and all of its enjoyments. God created man in kindness to him; this kindness however, and man's happiness could only consist in, and must be dependent upon, the favor of God; which favor could not be conferred upon him, unless he proved himself worthy of it. God gave him the simple test of obedience to his will to manifest whether or not, he was worthy. If worthy, he would enjoy God's favor forever; if not, he should be cut off from life. Rebellion against the will or government of God was inconsistent with the well-being of the whole universe of rational creatures, and if he rebels he shall (not will) die. From the time of being put upon trial, he was not necessarily mortal; he had the offer of immortality if he fulfilled the simple condition on which the result of the trial depended. From that moment the penalty in case of failure was, "thou shall surely die." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "The wages or just desert of sin is death." We cannot say "that Adam was immortal, and by sin lost his immortality" because it would not be true according to the Bible. This is evident from the plain fact that the object to be gained by his trial was "to eat of the tree of life and live forever," or be immortal. Immortality does not qualify character, but duration; therefore it would be talking without meaning to say that it meant abundance or meagreness. Quantity not quality is indicated by the term immortality, and on no other subject whatever is it ever used to qualify anything but duration. Character may be spoken of as immortal in duration, but not in quality. It may be good or bad character, but calling it immortal don't decide which it is. J. K. FINLEY.

A DOCTOR OF DIVINITY ON LIFE.

[THE following notice of a sermon, preached in Albert Barnes' Church, Philadelphia, recently, and reported as "An Able Discourse," is commented on by JACOB GRIM, as will be seen in the article given herewith.—ED. OF HER.]

Last evening the Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, First Presbyterian Church, Seventh street and Washington Square, preached an eloquent discourse to a large congregation, from which we make the following extracts:

The reverend gentleman selected as the foundation of his remarks the sixteenth verse of the seventh chapter of Hebrews. "Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life."

After speaking of the very imperfect conception generally had of the relations that life and death bear to each, and the fact that the germ of one was concealed in that of the other, he stated that Christ came into the world with the power of an endless life to free us from the power of an endless death, and this power of endless life was immortality, the consideration of which transported the mental vision far into the limits of the "dim beyond."

It is this element of immortality which supports the Christian through all the trials and turmoils of this lower life; it is this element which makes the angels happy over every sinner who repenteth; it was this element of immortality which placed Judas in a position where it would have been better had he never been born; this power of immortality constitutes the great prerogative of Christ. Immortality is freed from the contamination of sin; it is the perfection of the resurrection. At the point of resurrection, where the soul is freed from sin and the body from corruption, and both in perfect union, life has just begun.

This reminds me of a saying of our late Br. Moore, "It is about as clear as muddy water." After stating a great Bible truth, "that Christ came into the world with the power of an endless life, to free us from the power of an endless death, and this power of endless life was immortality, the consideration of which transported the mental vision far into the limits of the 'dim beyond.'"

Here is a great Bible truth beautifully expressed, and had the Dr. closed right there, and said, those are my sentiments, he would have been sublime.

He utters another truth: "It is this element of immortality which supports the Christian through all the turmoils of this lower life." But, alas! he says it was "this element of immortality which placed Judas in a position where it would have been better had he never been born." Here the Dr. has stirred the mud and made the water thick. Does the Dr. mean it was the loss of immortality which Judas might have attained, which made the loss such that it would have been better for him had he never been born? Or does he mean the possession of an immortal principle in Judas was that which made it such? In an "able sermon," according to the heading, the Dr. should have made it plain. But the Dr. says, "Immortality is freed from the contamination of sin." Thank you, Dr.; there are no immortal wicked, then; and no immortal sinners. The Dr. preaches, "No Life only in Christ," whether he believes it or not. He says, "Christ came into the world with the power of an endless life, to free us from an endless death." "This power of immortality constitutes the great prerogative of Christ." (The special privilege of Christ). And immortality, says the Dr. "is the perfection of the resurrection." If the resurrection is the perfection of immortality, and is free from the contamination of sin, it follows that there will be no wicked in the resurrection; for the perfection of immortality is the resurrection, and is free from the contamination of sin. It follows, as a logical conclusion, there will be no wicked in the resurrection, as immortality is free from the contamination of sin; hence no sinner can possess immortality; and as it is the perfection of the resurrection, no sinner can attain unto the resurrection without being free from the contamination of sin, and made "perfect." We give you our hearty thanks, Dr. for preaching the truth in Christ, even if doing it unconsciously.

"At the point of resurrection, where the soul is freed from sin and the body from corruption, and both in perfect union, life has just begun."

Unfortunately the Dr. gives us no Bible for this expression; hence we are unable to examine it. The description that Jesus gives of the resurrection is entirely different from the Dr.'s. Jesus says, "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." —John vi. 54. Jesus in all this discourse never speaks of raising a soul up, but the man.

It seems notwithstanding all the beautiful words the Dr. makes use of, he still believes in a soul separated from the body, which in the resurrection will be united to the body when free from corruption. And if the Dr. believes in the immortality of the soul, how does he affirm that "this power of immortality constitutes the great prerogative of Christ," if every sinner is possessed of an immortal soul? Here is where the writer gets muddy. He says:

Heaven is no spiritual dead level. Souls do not float through endless space or to the same plane, like ships becalmed in mid ocean. They attain not the same amount of power with which they enter the gate. Their power is expansive—it is progressive; and it is presumption and folly to attempt to limit what heights the soul can rise to under the power of redemption, for there is no bound to spiritual progress. This progression consists in knowledge, in holiness, and in enjoyment. Who can estimate the extent of progression in knowledge? Paucity of aims and ends belong not to eternal life.

Does the Dr. mean to say that souls have a resurrection? Immortality is the perfection of the resurrection. And these souls of the Dr.'s never attain to perfection; for immortality is the perfection of the resurrection; and as these souls only have the power of expansion, of course they are small souls at first, and expand into a larger capacity; but the resurrection is the perfection of immortality, or we will place it as the Dr. does: "Immortality is the perfection of the resurrection." Here again the Dr. is at fault. The soul is immortal and only expands; and it is immortality that gives perfection to the resurrection; as the soul has no part in the resurrection, it is only freed from sin, and the body from corruption; hence it has no part in the resurrection. The Dr. told us that, "immortality is freed from the contamination of sin;" and then he tells us that this immortal soul has been contaminated with sin until it is freed by the resurrection.

"Their power is expansive; it is progressive; and it is presumption and folly to attempt to limit what heights the soul can rise to under the power of redemption, for there is no bound to spiritual progress."

This sounds like spiritualism, to talk of redemption for an immortal soul that is not contaminated by sin; for the Dr. says, "immortality is free from the contamination of sin." If so, it needs no redemption; and his other word, expansion, is a better term, and spiritualists have adopted it. He goes on:

There is no night there, for there is no necessity for that calm which night brings allotted to rest; there is no fatigue in Heaven—in its new and glorified condition the soul shall never halt for rest, but the understanding, divinely illuminated, shall gain new strength from every object calculated to call forth its powers. A living intelligence can only be active in the boundless realms of endless life, that illimitable circle of which no radius can strike the circumference. "I will be his Father, and he shall be My son." Sonship includes heirship; and so it shall be with all the sons of adoption in this life, they shall be heirs to all the exhaustless treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Over and above these worlds of matter, will be the world composed of the unsearchable riches of Christ. There is no limit to the knowledge that can be gained of God in the contemplation of His works. The power of an endless life is, therefore, progressive in knowledge and in the endless acquisition of inexhaustible supply.

The Dr. has an imaginary soul, and creates an imaginary heaven to place it in. Hence, "A living intelligence can only be active in the boundless realms of endless life, that illimitable circle of which no radius can strike the circumference." It "includes heirship." So Paul says, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Not to the Dr.'s imaginary heaven, but to the promise that God made to the fathers: "And there was given him dominion, and a kingdom that all people, nations and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Dan. vii. 14. Where is this kingdom? Daniel answers in v. 27, "Under the whole heaven"—and the circumference can be measured by our earth; so says the prophet, and so says Jesus, when He says, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

Dr. Johnson speaks of the resurrection where the soul is freed from sin, and the body from corruption; and then from that point speaks of the expansion of the soul as if he had no further use of the body. Now the difference between the Gospel and the Dr. is, the Dr. speaks of the soul floating through the realms above; and the Gospel gives us the model of an immortal man, Jesus raised from the dead. "Handle me and see that I am flesh and bones." And Peter testifies that, "we did eat and drink with him after that he arose from the dead." The Dr. says,

Jesus the Giver of life, says: "I am the life. He that hath the Son hath life." Away from him there is no possibility of its possession. We are bound over to sin and to a never-ending death, unless we make use of Him as the Giver of life. Both life and death exist. If there is no Satan, there is no Christ —if there is no heaven there is no hell—if there is no endless death, there is no endless life—and if one is real then both are a reality.

Dr., why did you not give the whole text? "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." True, you say, "Away from him there is no possibility of its possession. We are bound over to sin and to a never-ending death unless we make use of him as the Giver of life." That has the right ring, and we are almost willing to say, Almost thou persuadest me to believe that you have the truth. "Both life and death exist." True, again. "If there is no Satan there is no Christ." That is poor logic. John says, "We have seen with our eyes, we have looked upon, and our hands have handled. That which we have seen and heard we declare unto you, . . . and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses."—Acts ii. 32. "And killed the Prince of life, whom God raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." And says Paul, "He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once." Now here is testimony that Jesus Christ was seen after his resurrection and does exist, and has no dependence on the existence of a satan, a devil; so that we are sure of our Christ even if the Dr. has no satan. "If there is no heaven there is no hell." We grant that; and yet we believe there may be a heaven—and be no theological hell—"If there is no endless death, there is no endless life; and if one is real then both are a reality."

Now, as we do not know what the Dr. understands by endless death, as he does not say one word about endless torment, we hope he has had his eyes opened to the truth, and believes it to be what God says it is, in the threat to Adam, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." That is God's definition of death, and we are willing to accept it.

PHILADELPHIA, March 23, 1870.

THE CHRISTIAN PASSOVER, IN THIS CITY.

The Anniversary in "remembrance" of the death of "Christ, our passover, who was cacrificed for us," will be celebrated by the Believers in the yearly memorial of that event at the Cooper Institute, (Room 18), Friday evening, April 15; exercises to commence at half past seven precisely. All who love the Lord Jesus are invited to join with us on the occasion, whether they are with us in the anniversary views or not. It is the Lord's table, and all His friends will find a welcome.

The entrance into the place of our meeting is at the corner of 4th Ave. and Eighth St., New York City. Please be present at the hour appointed.

A MINISTERIAL LETTER.

WE do not know whether the author of the following communication intended it for the HERALD OF LIFE, but suppose he did from the address with which it opens; we accordingly give it place. The writer is a minister, but of what denomination we do not know.

FLORIDA, Berkshire Co. Mass., March 15.

EDITOR OF THE "HERALD OF LIFE:" Dear Sir: Some one has sent the HERALD to me, about a year; I suppose in kindness, hoping to proselyte me to the faith of the "Destructionists." For every kind act, I feel grateful. But to represent me as a subscriber, as has been done, seems to me to be practically forging my name for the sake of the little influence it may have, or for some other cause.

I understand all "Orthodox" christians to agree with the Adventists in teaching that there is "Life only in Christ;" and also that "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead · · · are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

In all such views I fully concur, as I do in every other doctrine taught by the Bible, for on that alone I depend "For doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

But I do not, and cannot believe the principles taught by the "HERALD OF LIFE."

I think many of its articles are uncharitable and censorious in spirit; incorrect in statement of facts; illogical in argument, and entirely at variance with the plain teachings of the Scriptures.

Such being my views, I request you to discontinue the HERALD at the end of the time to which the subscription is paid; for I do not wish to pay the postage any longer. Very respectfully yours, JACOB DAVIS.

We sympathize with our Clerical friend in some things. In the first place, we regret that any one should represent him "as a subscriber" when he is not. How this should happen we do not know, nor who has done it. In making acknowledgements of money received, we have usually given credit to the person for whom it was ordered, so that he might understand his paper was paid for. If our friend has been thus misrepresented, or in any other way, we regret it. What his "influence" may be, we don't know; it is certain however we have not used his "name" for any such purpose, neither have we ever "forged" it. We have no occasion for "forging" any one's name.

We fear the "understanding" of our friend that, "all Orthodox christians agree with" us "in teaching that there is 'Life only in Christ,'" etc., is too luminous. It is certainly news to us; but we shall rejoice to find it true; we have no doubt the time will come when it will be so, yet fear it may not be in this age. Though it may be sooner than we think for; for this is a fast age, and truth has made rapid strides in this direction in the last thirty years.

But after having said that he "fully concurs" in our views, "in teaching that there is Life only in Christ," etc., our friend says, "I do not, and cannot believe the principles taught by the HERALD OF LIFE." Here is something that seems paradoxical. He fully concurs in teaching just what we do about Life only in Christ, etc., and yet he does not believe the "principles" we teach! If he had said there are some things published in the paper that he cannot believe, we should say to him,—That is so with ourself. It would be very difficult to accept everything we publish as truth. But those things are not "the principles taught by the HERALD OF LIFE;" but are the views of indiv duals.

We agree with our friend that some things have appeared th at were "uncharitable and censorious in spirit." These we regret; but yet we think he may not be entirely free from the same spirit; if he is, we hardly know who else could "cast the first stone" at the HERALD.

But as our friend wishes to withdraw from the reception of the paper, we certainly shall not inflict on him the discomfort of its visiting him again. May the blessing of Heaven rest on him.

THE PAPER FOR THE TIMES.

BY ELD. J. C. WHEELER.

THE HERALD OF LIFE is that paper. My reasons for this statement are the following:

1st. It maintains free speech: it is free to think and to let others think. So it is the paper for the times.

Men have long been beaten and bruised with the spirit of sect, (instead of being led by the Spirit and word of God,) to make them subscribe to their faith. If they could not, they have met with frowns and contempt. From such treatment they are glad to be delivered; and hence cry out, Give us freedom of speech: and they will have it. Yes, God's true men will have it, for light is to shine more and more to the perfect day. Most men who wish to grope in darkness, are men that love the world and its pleasures more than God and his truth. Why they thus remain is for some office, or promotion in Church or State. They love the honor that cometh from men more than from God. That is not all; they will fight others who strive to make advances in the truth.

FREEDOM. I find this is the spirit and teaching of every true disciple of Christ. Why should he not thus cry? He is out from under the yoke of bondage; made free by the truth.

A short time since I gave the HERALD to a Congregationalist member. After a time, I said, Would you like to subscribe for the paper? He answered promptly, "Yes; one paper is worth fifty cents." I asked his reasons for prizing it so highly. His answer was, "For its freedom of speech, and liberal dealing with all subjects." This is one of many cases.

The 2d reason why it is the paper for the times is, It is characterized by one of the leading attributes of God, viz: Love. Like begets like. Why not? God's dear children love such a paper. It is the spirit they love; also those who possess it. If there are any who have not enough of the spirit of love in their hearts to discuss any subject in the Book of God without anger, they need another touch. God will have an advanced class from this. I hope to keep in the advanced class.

My 3d reason why the HERALD OF LIFE is the paper for the times is, it gives meat that is due to the household of faith; and to every one a portion. The church can't grow and thrive on stale manna. What we believed in the past alone will not feed the church to-day. It is stale; good in its time. Last year's fruit is not so healthy as the present summer's fruit. This is one reason why men complain about poor feelings; they will not taste of the fresh manna; so they know not its sweetness. We love the paper for the sweet manna it brings.

My 4th reason is, It is favorable to the advancement in knowledge in the school of Christ. Says Jesus, "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you." We enter the school to learn of him who is meek and lowly. And the command is to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord, etc. His word is to shine more and more to the perfect day. Hence God's people will cry, More wisdom, more light. Men of God are growing sick of stale food. When they get one taste of seasoned meat, they are spoiled forever of stale food. You never can learn them to love it again.

My 5th and last reason why the HERALD OF LIFE is the paper for the times is, It holds forth God's attributes as given in the Scriptures. Not that He is revengeful in his Divine nature: no, never. He works on the principle of love. He does not punish a man because he has the power to do it. His plan was laid on Divine principles, not to inflict more than justice demands in the law of God: that is, death. Not two deaths. Sin when it's finished bringeth forth death. Question: How long will sin reign in your mortal body? I answer, until death. Then if we die in our sins we get the wages, eternal death. Then I would ask, Who pays the debt, if it is not cancelled before death? for Jesus never died to save such; only those who believe on him will He raise up at the last day.

Now, in conclusion, I would say, to the honor of the paper, also of its Editor, the religion it holds forth is solely based on the seven attributes of God, viz: Love, Mercy, Goodness, Truth, Justice, Wisdom and Power. No wonder men love to read its sacred instructions weekly as they come. When we sit down at the fireside, with wife and children, to read the welcome visitor, we know it is worth our time to read the precious treasures it contains. That is more than we can say about most professed Christian papers.

I pray God to bless the HERALD OF LIFE and its Editor to that extent that thousands more may feel its warming rays and influence, and be led more fully to do justice to God in portraying the lovely characteristics of the same. This is the prayer and sincere desire of your Br. in Christ.

NORTH TURNER BRIDGE, Me., March, 1870.

MUST STAND IT.

AYE, we are used to it; but that does not make it agreeable nor profitable; nor yet does it secure a manly feeling or give courage; not at all.

To have a long cold journey on Saturday, succeeded by a terrible snow storm on Sunday, with no one to come out to meeting; (though there might have been a large congregation if it had been pleasant) no regular arrangement for expenses and donation to the preachers!

What if another man made a mistake about the matter? The brethren who sympathize with the brother do what they can. All right. Is it right that our brethren should always pay their full proportion when the other class of brethren come along, and then when we come, because it is left to collections those who do not believe in "No life out of Christ," shirk, and perhaps go away; and if we cannot have a great gathering from the world, leave things to take their own course. For one, I have come to feel at times, so completely disheartened, I do not know which way to look. Then I get the victory and rejoice that I may even suffer privation for Christ's sake. I do not wish to complain. I will not; but things sometimes come, "like an armed man." Well, I have made up my mind to go ahead still in the cause. I understand this to be the true advent position, and I hope to abide.

The cause is on the advance. I am fully satisfied that a real progress is made in spreading the views we hold upon life, and the coming kingdom.

There is no propriety in making calculations which are based on the professions of men. We do not find things according to precedent always. But the Lord takes the care of his flock and his truth; and we feel, whether in poverty or in plenty, as the old prophet did when his lips were touched with the live coal from the altar, "Lord send me."

W. S. CAMPBELL.

WEST WINSTED, March 22, 1870.

WHO IS THE KING OF GLORY.

"Be patient therefore brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." —James v. 7.

THE day comes when all the new creation shall know the Lord "from the least to the greatest;" but in this creation, one must say, even to his brother, "Know the Lord—the King of glory!" Holy Scripture owns "the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge: for in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."—Col. ii. 2, 3, 9. "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday to-day, and forever."—Heb. xxiii. 8. It more fully reveals Him in the offices of prophet, priest, and king. Our prophet himself dwelt among men in the flesh, and taught by his word and example the things concerning his kingdom. He closed his ministry in death, offering himself, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John i. 29. Having poured out his life-blood for the remission of our sins, on the third day He rose from the dead, and after forty days he was exalted by the right hand of God, "to be a prince and a Saviour to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Ordained a priest forever after the order of Melchizedeck, God said, "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."—Ps. cx. 1, 4. There He ever liveth, our righteous advocate and intercessor, our High Priest, to present our offerings and sacrifices, of prayer and confession, of thanksgiving and praise, and to obtain for us our requests; "a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people: for in that He himself hath suffered, being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted."—Heb. ii. 17.

Because "Jesus Christ is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him"—1 Pet. iii. 22, and we see him not; many have no distinct idea of His present office in the ministry of reconciliation.

Overlooking the office of Mediator, they regard him as seated on his promised throne, and now governing the chosen people, whereas, ever present with them by his Spirit, He ministers for them in heaven; "from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." We do not yet see these enemies—sin, death, and satan—put under his feet; "now we see not yet all things put under him;" but in the time appointed of the Father, we shall. When the elect are gathered in and the body of which Christ is the glorified head is once accomplished, and the holy temple of which he is both corner and headstone is completed in the heavenly places, then the Son of man who came into this world to suffer and die, who ascended into heaven to justify and save his people, will come again to cleanse the earth, to crush the serpent's head, to destroy his goods, and to reign over the new creation.

He was our prophet while in the flesh of Adam; He is our High Priest while our advocate with the Father, waiting for his foes to be made his footstool. He is, "the first-born among many brethren," the mediator and surety of a better covenant which He will make with them who follow to victory through death; and He is coming again to reign over the children of God forever, "and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Moses and all the prophets testify that in Christ the promised seed, all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. Of Him, Enoch the seventh from Adam, prophesied saying, "Behold the Lord cometh with myriads of his saints to execute judgment upon all."—Jude xiv. The angels declare that "this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. When his mediatorial work is done—when "the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled"—when all Israel of the faith of Christ shall be saved, and "the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you," then "the God of peace shall bruise satan under your feet, shortly"—Rom. xxvi. 20, and Jesus Christ shall come in the glory of his Father and all the holy angels with him, and shall sit on the throne of his father David, appointed for him, and shall give to his apostles the throne He has appointed for them; "that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom"—Luke xxii. 30, and "sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in His throne."—Rev. iii. 21. As it is written: "Thou art my Son, I will give thee the Gentiles for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Ps. ii. 8. Jesus, our nobleman has gone into heaven, to receive the kingdom and to return; and having received he will return, and reckon with his servants. From that time forth He will wait no longer, suffering for salvation and expecting. He will take to himself his great power, and will reign.—Rev. xi. 17. He will destroy "that wicked, the man of sin, the son of perdition," and "gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth."—Eph. i. 10. His dominion shall be "from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth;", not in this its fallen state under the curse, but in its future regenerate state, in which all its families shall be forever blessed in him—Jesus Christ. He is the King of glory.—Selected.

AN EXPLANATION.

BR. STORRS: I thank Br. Wendell for calling my attention to the remark I made, when speaking of "Christ in the flesh." The last paragraph reads, "The other passage in Eph. v. 30, 'We are members of his body,' that is, of the mystical body of Christ, 'and of his flesh and of his bones,' looks very much like an interpolation by some officious transcriber."

I meant the last remark to apply only to the expression "and of his flesh and of his bones;" but I see the construction of the paragraph would include the other clause; but I did not mean to. WALTER PATTERSON.

FERGUSONVILLE, N. Y., March 23, 1870.

FROM MRS. H. A. FARMER.

BR. STORRS: For such I am wont to call you. You will doubtless be surprised on hearing from friends in this benighted part of the country. I have refrained from writing sometime, owing to my inability, but will withhold no longer from expressing thanks to one through whose influence we have been made to see the truth as it is. Perhaps I may weary your patience, but coming in possession of this knowledge in such a peculiar manner, I would like to relate it all.

My mother and most of my relatives belonged to the church called "Brethren." We were also surrounded with Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, etc., all of whom preached a great deal about the immortal soul, and the eternal burning of the ungodly, the spirit taking its flight, at death, to the realms of bliss, etc.

When the rebellion broke out, my husband and myself sought refuge in Kansas. Being in reduced circumstances, we were compelled to take an humble station in life. Our house was a rude log hut, in which was a small garret, and in it was an old dingy chest filled with books. Being somewhat at a loss for reading matter, my husband resorted to the chest. On examining some of the books his attention was attracted toward the "Bible Examiner." Therein we found strange doctrines advocated. We cried, "Infidelity;" condemned it with Scripture (as we thought). So the book was laid away. Some time elapsed. Being full of curiosity, the book was drawn from its hiding-place again. We read with increased interest, and compared with Scripture, until we finally were convinced that we were in error.

In the chest we found your original Six Sermons. I never read any thing which gave me so much light on the glorious Gospel. Previous to this, the Bible had been a dark, mysterious book to me; but this opened my eyes to new light; unravelled many mysteries. The Bible is now comparatively a plain book.

We returned to East Tennessee last spring, bringing with us your Six Sermons. My mother, now fifty-three years old, and has been a church member twenty-five or thirty years, says she is just beginning, within the last year, to understand the Scriptures. She is a subscriber to the HERALD, and wouldn't be without it for a great deal more than it costs her. She has also procured several of your works, with which she is much pleased: has been distributing them among her neighbors. Some cry, "Infidelity;" some are almost persuaded, but are fearful of being led astray. The greatest obstacle to be overcome is, the non-resurrection of the wicked. There are some who embrace all except that. My mother and brother embrace the Life doctrine in full, believing it to be the doctrine of the Bible.

We heartily concur in giving you our unbounded thanks for the light which we have received from under your hand. May God's Spirit continually rest on you, giving you strength sufficient to continue your work until He shall say, Lay down thine armor, take up thy crown.

BULL'S GAP, Tenn., March 17, 1870.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

BR. STORRS: My health is quite poor, and has been for some days, in consequence of a kind of epidemic cold, or influenza, that is prevalent in this vicinity. I have not been able on this account, with the unpleasantness of the weather, to get out much, to work for the good Master. As the cry is from every quarter, Come over and help us, as long as I desire to eat, I desire to work; and since the spirit of inquiry seems to be waked up I wish to do all I can to keep it awake, but my funds are short. But what do I say? Well, all I have, or ever shall have, is the Lord's; and as I have a dollar or two of the Lord's money, I must see where I can invest it, so that when the Master cometh he may have his own with usury. I think my work is not done yet, for I have for the last week spent the time in walking down on the brink of the dark river, looking for a place to step in, and have often listened to the surges of its chilling waters, but the banks are so bold, and the ravine so dark! And this river is claimed to belong to an enemy, and I have no fellowship for him. I don't know that I shall make another effort to write or speak. I send $1. Please send me the following tracts ——.

Your brother, hoping to live again.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., March 21, 1870.

FROM B. H. COUCH.

IN behalf of the brethren at Manchester, N. H., I pen a few lines to our brethren scattered abroad, greeting. The truth, which has been pent up for a long time, gushed forth from many fainting hearts, and a most refreshing season was enjoyed in morning services last Sunday; and those hearts having been long pressed were made to leap for joy while Br. Wendell brought forth from the treasure-house of God's word things new and old. Living plants were made to thrive while sturdy branches sprang forth anew, budding with the spirit of Life in Christ, which shall bring forth its fruit in due season, if the faith of the church "fail not."

Br. Wendell enjoyed a most blessed free time; while the "truth as it is in Jesus" poured forth in torrents of living waters upon a good audience, casting its precious seeds into good ground, as well as on stony and by highway places. The old Music Hall rang once more with the sounding bells of eternal truth, showing that the Great High Priest yet liveth.

Br. S. D. Morse is ready to correspond with the servants of God. Brethren and friends, scattered abroad, remember the little flock in Manchester in your devotions, which they earnestly solicit. Yours, in hope of Life through Christ.

CONCORD, N. H., March 21, 1870.

FROM MRS. E. G. FARMER.

BR. STORRS: It is but a short time since I saw or read the HERALD OF LIFE, and I can say it is meat and drink to me. I embraced the doctrine of the second advent of our Lord and Saviour in '43, in Rochester, N. Y. Since then, I have been living from place to place, where little or nothing has been said about Christ's coming, and have heard but little, only seeing a paper now and then. But bless the Lord, I have been looking for his appearing. It is not strange that I am behind the times.

I came to Grand Rapids to make a home; became acquainted with brother and sister Clark; and I thank God for that. They lent me books and papers to read. At first I could not see that the wicked were not to be raised; but with careful reading and study of God's word, and in answer to prayer for knowledge and guidance in the right path, the scales have fallen from my eyes, and I see clearly, therefore, I love the sentiments in the HERALD so much that I thought if it was worth reading, it was worth paying for. I don't believe in borrowing knowledge; it is like water to a thirsty soul.

I was formerly a member of the Baptist church. I felt it my duty to come out of it. Accordingly I left. I believe in doing every duty as we go along, then God will give us more light. I am very glad you are engaged in publishing the glad tidings of the kingdom to poor mortals. There is a beautiful crown laid up for you in that kingdom of light where all is bright; and not for you only, but for all them also that love His appearing. O, may I, your unworthy sister, have my lamp trimmed and burning. I can say I have a hope as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, that when Christ shall appear, I shall be like him with all the ransomed of the Lord; and may the same Spirit that inspired others to read and search the Word of God, be in us, is the prayer of your sister, waiting for the LIFE-GIVER to come.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March 5, 1870.

ELD. WM. P. SHOCKEY, Aspinwall, Neb., writes: I am just closing a three months term of school in my own district. Have preached every Saturday and Sunday two times; held one series of six discourses with Br. Clover. Our second quarterly meeting, will be held at Hewitt's school house, six miles southeast of Oregon, Mo., beginning on Friday and holding over the 3d first day of March. It is not to be held to define the faith; or to discuss the question as to whom we will fellowship; or to build an organization, as we learn of no Apostolical successors, or vicar of Christ to exercise inquisitorial authority over the household of faith, to order what must be done. We hold our meeting to inquire what the Bible does teach on any subject, and to persuade men to believe and obey the gospel of the kingdom.

OBITUARY.

FRAKER.—Fell asleep in the Lord, January 26th, Br. D. FRAKER, of St. Deroine, after a sickness of eight days with lung or typhoid fever. He leaves an afflicted wife and five children. May they find consolation in the hope he had. In relation to the business affairs of community, none could be more missed than he. Many persons who were dependent were employed by him, and found in him a lover of justice, a magnanimous benefactor, and a teacher of the faith in all his words and actions; earnestly contending for those precious truths, and remaining sane all the time to the last.

Our holy cause has lost one of its most useful supporters in the West. He was willing to speak for it on all occasions; to go away from home to help it on; to tell sectarian ministers how they fail to preach the word; willing to give to aid the poor preachers. O, my Br. and child in the faith, sleep till Jesus comes! It will not belong.

TO INQUIRERS ON OUTSIDE BUSINESS.

WE have once before stated that we cannot attend to business not pertaining to our office. We have no time to do it. We have also stated that GEO. W. YOUNG, a most trustworthy man, will attend to such matters for a very small compensation. He has on hand Prof. Murdock's translation of the Syriac New Testament; and will furnish that, or any other work that is to be had in the City, promptly for such as send the money: and you need have no fear but that your money is safe in his hands, and will be used honestly and judiciously. His address is 25 Chambers St., NEW YORK.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SUMMER.

'Tis not the merry time of Spring,
When birds their sweetest notes they sing,
Or when the plants unfold their flowers
To decorate th'enchanting bowers;
If Christ my LIFE-GIVER I see,
'Tis smiling summer time to me.
Though Boreas blows with iron breath,
And scatters wide his icy death;
And frost and snow are piled on heaps,
And in one grave all nature sleeps;
If I in Christ steadfastly be,
'Tis smiling summer time with me.
'Tis not in hum of busy bees;
Or foliage green upon the trees;
Nor in the harvest-hunter's horn,
Or in the sheaves of golden corn:
If Christ to reign, by faith I see,
'Tis smiling summer time to me.
'Tis not in California gold,
Or all the wealth of earth untold;
Or yet the whistling of a name
Or anxious sighs for empty fame;
A Christian only let me be,
And smiling summer's then to me.
Though all the world is dark and drear,
And though no earthly friend is near,
And all the year should winter reign
And break kind nature's golden chain,
If I in Christ can keep me near,
'Tis smiling Summer all the year.

HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF REV. XVII. 8.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

[Concluded from last week.]

"The beast thou sawest was, and is not, and yet is, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition."

THE question will be asked about the mouth that was given to the Leopard beast, that was to make war on the saints forty-two months.

It is a well known fact that Justinian, in A. D. 533, made the Pope, "the effectual corrector of heretics;" and in addition to his being made the head of all the Churches, the Roman senate passed a law, in 534, giving the Pope power to "Judge and punish, whomsoever he deemed heretics." The Pope never laid hands on any one, but gave direction to the civil arm to execute all who would not subscribe to the creed of Chalcedon. At that Council the Catholics laid the corner stone of their faith, and at the same Council it was "declared, by the concurrence and honor of over five hundred bishops, that it was lawful to enforce the creed of Chalcedon even by blood." The creed of "Justinian, the guilt of murder, could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers, and he piously labored to establish with fire and sword, the unity of the Christian faith."

There is one great mistake made by expositors in making this Leopard beast to continue forty-two months and make war on the saints. It was the mouth, the Catholic Church that directed the civil governments, that was to do it, as we see by the next change that takes place in the history of prophecy in the coming up out of the earth of a two horn beast, having horns like a lamb, but spake like a dragon, which exercised all the power of the first beast before him, (or, in his presence;) that is, while the Leopard beast was in existence. This two horned beast is the symbol of the Pope in his civil and ecclesiastical power, which he assumed in 754, when Pepin of France, the eldest son of the Church, drove out the Lombards from Italy and made the Pope the King of Rome. Mark the language of the prophet—"Spake as a dragon;" that is, from the seat of the old dragon, the city of Rome; the same power that was confirmed upon him then, is claimed by him to-day. From the time the Pope was made a temporal prince the Emperor of the East ceased to be directed by the Pope, which proves conclusively that the mouth is the power that was to make war on the saints forty-two months, which harmonizes with what was said in the xiith chap., that "the dragon made war with the REMNANT of her seed which keep the commandments of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ."

This dragon was cast into the earth, and this hypocritical beast came up out of the earth and spake as a dragon. It "fits like a book," as the saying is. But the dragon power was not fully developed until Charlemagne was crowned with the Cæsar crown in 800. Whatever other view may be taken on this subject, these are historical facts that cannot be disputed.

The next thing to be noticed is the seven kings. "And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is; the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he must continue a short space." Some translate it, and "They are seven kings," referring to the heads of the previous verse. If that was the meaning, why say that the heads are seven mountains? Why not say they were seven kings? and not use the symbol of mountains. I shall consider them as seven kings or dynasties, whose history commenced with the restoration of the Roman empire, beginning with the French dynasty when Charlemagne was crowned with the Cæsar crown in 800, which continued till 879; the Otho dynasty, from 951 to 1002; the Franconi dynasty, from 1014 to 1125; the Swabian dynasty, from 1155 to 1268; the Spanish dynasty, from 1530 to 1713; the Austria dynasty, from 1764 to 1800; the Bonaparte, the seventh, from 1805 to 1814, a short space, only nine years.

It is a remarkable fact that the dynasties which received their crowns of the Cæsars from the hands of the Pope, were six, only; and the seventh crowned himself with the Cæsar crown, refusing to let the Pope bind him with that oath administered to Charlemagne 1,000 years before. Up to this time, the Pope ruled over the kings of the earth, which are symbolized by waters where the whore sat. The very fact of taking an oath to obey the Pope is conclusive evidence that the Catholic Church was superior to the civil powers; and until Bonaparte refused to be bound by that oath, she could claim their obedience, notwithstanding Austria in 1781 refused to enforce the mandates of the Pope, just where we might expect it; for John saw the woman going to judgment during the reign of the sixth king, while the Church was in the wilderness before the 1,260 years were ended; for those days of tribulation were to be shortened. The beast that was and is not, even he is the eighth, and is from the seven and is for perdition. (Syriac.) I would ask in the first place, if there was not to be some difference in the history of the eighth king from the seven that preceded, why not have said that there are eight kings? The eighth was from the seven, and not of the seventh, as some read it. I have before shown that the beast that was and is not, was the Roman government, and therefore we must find this beast that is for perdition in and connected with that government in its last phase in history, in connection with the ten kings which are located in that kingdom; and therefore I shall try to locate in Italy the ten kings that had received no power when John saw this last phase of all earthly kingdoms.

We have been brought down to the time when the seventh king's end has come, and therefore we shall look for the rise of the ten kings this side of that time. At this point I will quote, in a few words, from Hugh Murray's Encyclopedia of Geography. "The local divisions of Italy are more than usually prominent; for though the country is united by name, by a common language, and by a strong national feeling, it has yet been partitioned into a number of States, politically independent of each other. The numerous little republics which once made so brilliant a figure and disputed for supremacy, have, in the late convulsions, lost the feeble remains of their existence, and merged into the great State. Italy is thus divided into ten great portions; 1st, Ecclesiastical States; 2d, Tuscany; 3d, Lombardy, or the Austrian States; 4th, The States of the King of Sardinia; 5th, Naples and Sicily; 6th, San Marino; 7th, Modena; 8th, Lucca; 9th, Parma; 10th, Monaco. These kings are all "independent" of each other, and yet they have chosen Victor Emmanuel, who was made king of Italy after the overthrow of the Austrian power in Lombardy, who claimed and was crowned with the iron crown which was presented by Helena, the mother of Constantine, (being made as it is said, of the nails which were the nails of the cross that Jesus was nailed upon) and was presented to the first Christian Emperor, which, in the middle of the sixth century was taken possession of by the Lombards, who became king of Italy, and was taken from the Lombards by Charlemagne, who was crowned with it in the Cathedral of Milan by the Pope, some time prior to his being crowned in Rome with the Imperial crown of the Cæsars; so, in fact, says history, 'Though the dignities were thus united in one person, they were perfectly distinct, and were held in distinct rights.' Charles was in fact king of the Franks, king of Italy, and Emperor of Rome."

So we see that the present King of Italy, is the lawful claimant of the Iron Crown as a late writer in one of the New York papers says, in speaking on this point, "Victor Emmanuel might probably find it hard to make himself out to be the successor of the Longbeard Albion, or the inheritor of his crown; yet the King of Italy has a better right or title to wear the crown, than any man living."

From these facts, we learn that the present King of Italy is the heir of one of the crowns of Constantine, the first Christian Emperor that was chosen by the church as her "protector," and was crowned the "Second David," to "fight her battles." This connection is now dissolved; for he, with the ten kings, hate her. The Pope has excommunicated him, or divorced herself from him. "And God has put it into their hearts to desolate her as it is written, 'And the ten horns which thou sawest, and the beast (Syriac) of prey will hate the harlot, and they will make her desolate and naked, and they will eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.'" That this process is now going on, the Pope is witness, for he declares that the "ravenous wolves" stand ready to devour him; and they will do it, for "God has put it in their hearts" to do his will.

The present Council it is thought, was called for the purpose of devising means to subvert the purpose of God. The Scripture recognizes "A dragon, a beast, and a false prophet" in the last history of this world; for "out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, went spirits like frogs unto the kings of the earth," etc. After the first judgments came upon the Catholic Church, (for she was to be rewarded double) which began in 1780 and ended with the overthrow of Bonaparte in 1814, France became the supporter of the Catholic Church, and thousands were put to death from 1816 to 1823. Austria again had restored to him the power that was taken from him by Bonaparte in 1800; besides, he was crowned with the Iron Crown of Lombardy and was made king of Italy. All the concordats of the Pope were enforced by Austria, until he was driven out of Italy and superseded by Victor Emmanuel. From the time France and Austria were restored again, to the last convulsions, these powers, through the suggestion of the Pope, began a system of policy of secret societies for the purpose of spreading the Catholic faith throughout the world. The Pope granted free pardon to all that would become members of these societies. These articles were submitted to the Austrian Emperor, and were sanctioned by him, and by France.

We have statistics that in two years, from 1824 to '26, over 400,000 dollars were sent to this country alone, besides that which was sent all over the world, to increase Catholicity. The most learned of their order have been sent out as missionaries for this purpose. Spirits, like frogs live in the water, or out of the water; in the church or out of the church; just as the case suits, suited for any position if they can only make proselytes; it is by that kind of craft the Catholic Church "prevails," as Daniel has said, for the word "prevail," in Dan. vii. 21, is yokhal, to be able to overcome (Pick) as in the case 2 Chron. xviii. 21, "And he said I will go out and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the Lord said thou shalt entice him and thou shalt prevail; go out and do even so." The word prevail, as it is used, as having power over, is "gevar;" that power the Pope, or little horn only had for 1,260 years; after which he was to "prevail" by craft or deceit (see Dan. viii. 25), until the end. We can see to-day how much they have prevailed in this way, for they have representatives in Rome, at that council, from all parts of the world; and, as I believe, it is that gathering spoken of by John, the Armageddon; for we are told by those who are learned that Armageddon translated into English would be, the City of Augustus, or August City. For authority on this point I quote from a book written in 1855, headed, "Is Sabastapol Armageddon of Rev. xvi.?" After showing that Armageddon in the Greek tongue is Sebastapol, the author remarks (page 14), "It is remarked that Sebastapol signifies 'the City of Augustus.' True, but this does not prevent it from signifying also, the August city." These "spirits went forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." To gather who? To gather some of the "whole world," to the city of Augustus, the city of Rome. The present gathering looks very much like it. At this time the Lord says, "Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watches," etc. What shall we watch for? I answer, the fulfilment of prophecy, or the events that are to follow the pouring out of the last or seventh vial. The great earthquake is passed; for in 1848 there was a political earthquake such as was never known since men were upon the earth. Twenty or more Crowned heads were obliged to succumb. The Pope was obliged to flee in the garb of a servant. What next? "And the great city was divided into three parts, or parties. The city, here, is the Catholic Church. It is now divided. An article quoted from the "London Telegraph," begins "With respect to the dogma of papal infallibility, the Latin Church is divided into THREE parties;" and then goes on to show who and what causes the division. Correspondents of the New York papers direct from Rome, state the same thing. What comes next? "And the city of nations fell." (Syriac.) A house divided against itself cannot stand; so Jesus says. What next? "And great Babylon came in remembrance before God to give unto her the cup of the wine of his wrath." This is the time that like a millstone she goes down, and all the saints of God sing Alleluia; for true and righteous are thy judgments. And the angels say, Alleluia, Amen.

Dear brethren, are you standing with your loins girt about, ready to join in the shout Alleluia? "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep these sayings that are written therein; for the time is at hand."

My dear brethren, if the views that are set forth in this argument be true, we are within a brief period of the most awful event to those that are not waiting or looking for the return of our Redeemer; but the reverse to those that can say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us. This is the Lord, we have waited for him; we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Paul says, "To those who look for him, he will appear a second time without a sin offering to salvation." Amen.

FROM M. P. MARTIN.

TO THE DEAR PILGRIMS, GREETING: Why we introduce the teaching we do; because we are under the law of free agency as at the beginning, when the law was given to Adam. When Moses led the Hebrews out of Egypt, they were put under a military or civil discipline, and had not a right of choice in what they would do; so their duty was to follow Moses as a leader, and he was responsible for what they did; but when Christ came he repealed the Mosaic law, and established the right of free agency, as in the beginning; every man responsible to himself, for his own doings, and answerable to God.

Col. ii. 14, 15, Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way nailing it to his cross. And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly triumphing over them in it.

It appears to me, every intelligent lover of Christ can but appreciate this position; and although we have the right of choice, yet like our blessed Master, it should be our choice to accept of those things that our heavenly Father has advised in his word, would be for our temporal good, as well as to help us understand our future welfare. This is why I keep the seventh day Sabbath, showing that I respect my heavenly Father's knowledge more than my own; although I have the freedom to choose any day or no day as I please, and the general providences of God are not witholden from me should I choose my own way, although I cannot claim his special promises except I honor his commands. This position will apply to all the commands of God and Christ. Why do I say that swine flesh should not be eaten? Not only because I think it is unwholesome, but because I respect God's word that says it is unclean. There are many things that God has not spoken to us of, in his word; one is tobacco, yet we should not use it, or any thing that is proved to be injurious to us or does us no good. Here we become a law to ourselves, as we are free to choose; so we should discern between good and evil.

I see that it is the duty of every follower of Christ to educate all his faculties so that he shall be a teacher and a light to others; but I cannot see where he has any authority to compel others, either individually or conventionally, to act different from their free will. I know the world assumes this right, and will exercise it, until Christ possesses the kingdom.

My position in teaching the Scriptures is in the harmonizing of the faculties of our nature as we develop them. Make the tree good and the fruit will be good. The motives for good, are rewards or gain. The penalty for evil is punishment or loss in this world, as it is in this state that we are capable of developing good or evil in our faculties; so if I develop good, then I gain and am rewarded; if I develop evil, then I lose and am punished. Some may ask what do you gain or lose? Our Saviour says, "and if thy eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee, it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."—Matt. xviii. 9. Here our Saviour illustrates the education of the senses. Now what have you gained? I say, a healthy body with the loss of one eye and the right to enter life. There is a faculty in the mind called fidelity. Now, develop that, and who would exchange it for gold? Now take the opposite, and for it have treachery; and how much greater punishment does one deserve? Should the unfortunate mind have to undergo living in future torment either one hour or eternally to satisfy justice? I think the right feeling was in the Saviour's prayers, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do."—Luke xxiii. 24.

So we see a resurrection to life of the lost faculty would not be a necessity, but simply a conventional display; as man's free agency and the law of development, for good or evil, had ceased at death. I try in my teaching to convince that rewards and punishments are in this life, and experienced in the faculties of our nature; and for future life, the mind must be in that state that the truth can be received, that Christ is the resurrection and the life; and then the mind may receive the incorruptible seed of the word, which makes us heirs, through Christ, "to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." This way of teaching the Scriptures, when received and practiced, gives health and strength to the physical and mental system, and prepares us to "glorify God in our body and spirit which are God's."

And may the Lord add his blessing to our understanding his truth, is my prayer. Amen. Yours, in love of the truth.

COLUMBIA, California, Feb., 1870.

A LADY ON TOBACCO.—An exchange says a Scotch lady writes thus of gentlemen who use tobacco:

May never lady press his lips,
His proffered love returning,
Who makes a furnace of his mouth,
And keeps his chimney burning,
May each true woman shun his sight,
For fear his fumes would choke her:
And none but those who smoke themselves
Have kisses for a smoker.

To have a good opinion of yourself, think, if you were rich, how much you would give away.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

WILLIE'S SELF-DENIAL.

"OH, mamma," exclaimed Willie, as he ran eagerly into the room on his return from school, "we are to have a vacation all next week, and may I go with Dennis on Monday when he goes to get those vegetables papa has bought of Mr. Morton?"

"If it is a pleasant day I know of nothing to prevent your going; that is, if Dennis is willing to take charge of you."

"Oh, I know he will, mamma, and I won't trouble him in the least. Only think, it is six miles there; what a splendid long ride I shall have."

The next day as Willie walked to church with his parents he often thought of the pleasure in store for the morrow; but in the Sabbath school he was very much interested in the remarks of a stranger who addressed the school.

When he reached home he said: "Mamma that minister talked to us to-day about self-denial, and said the more we denied ourselves for the good of others the happier we should feel. Now is that really true?"

"It is, Willie. The Bible says: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive,' and we are told to 'deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow Christ.'"

"Then I fear I am a very selfish little boy, for I don't like to deny myself at all. I ate all those oranges myself the other day, although I knew that Johnny Maloney would have been very glad of one, for he has just got over the fever, and I remember how good they tasted when I was getting well, after I was sick last fall."

"I am glad, Willie, to find you have been thinking of this matter. If you wish to prove the truth of the minister's words, do some self-denying act the first opportunity you have, and see if you feel happier for it."

The next morning dawned bright and cloudless, and Willie was in high spirits all the forenoon. He scarcely knew how to employ his time until the happy hour arrived for him to take his ride. He got tired of staying in the sitting-room, and so he thought he would pay a visit to Mrs. Maloney, who was washing in the kitchen.

"Oh, Masther Willie," she cried, "how nice ye're looking this morning, and what a fine color ye have in yer cheeks. Here's poor Johnny, as pale as this sheet I'm washing ever since the faver left him. The docthor says he ought to take a ride now and then, and go out in the country a bit; but the like of me that has to wash for a living, can't do that at all."

A sudden thought startled Willie, and scarcely stopping to make any answer, he rushed out into the yard. Back and forth he paced with slow step, and a very anxious, perplexed look upon his face. All at once he came to a dead halt, and planting his foot firmly upon the bricks, he exclaimed, "I'll do it," and then ran into the house.

"Mamma," he said, "Johnny Maloney is down-stairs, and he looks so pale and thin. I think the ride into the country this afternoon will do him more good than it will me; and as there is room for only one, I am going to let him go in my stead if you are willing."

"Most certainly I am, Willie," and clasping the little fellow to her heart, she gave him a kiss of approval. He flew to tell Mrs. Malony of his decision, and resolutely stood by while Johnny was lifted up on the high seat beside Dennis. He watched them ride out of sight with a face on which smiles and tears were striving which should have possession, but the smiles gained the victory, and he went cheerfully on an errand for his mamma, which she had kindly postponed on account of the ride.

After Willie's mamma had put him to bed that night, she sat down beside him, and putting her hand fondly upon his little curly head she said: "You have made me very happy, dear Willie, to-day, by so soon putting in practice the resolution you made yesterday. It was a great act of self-denial for you to give up the ride you anticipated so much pleasure in taking; and how is it? do you feel happier or not for staying at home to let Johnny go?"

"Happier than if I had taken the best ride in the world, mamma. And you say it made you happy, too, and I know Mrs. Malony and Johnny were happy; and so only think how much happiness it caused. I am sure I don't mean to be selfish again as long as I live."—Selected.

THE CRAB-APPLE TREE.

IN one corner of our old garden there was a fine looking apple tree. The branches grew over the fence, and many a boy when the apples were ripe, used to risk a fall to get some of the fruit. But one bite was enough. It was a crab-apple tree. The young thieves made wry faces and threw the apples as far as they could reach. It was a common trick upon any strange boy to give him one of our crab-apples. Why father kept the tree, I could never guess.

I went from home and was gone several years. How delightful it was to return once more!—How many changes I saw around the old house.

"How fares the crab-apple tree?" I asked, as my brother James was showing me round the garden; "I hope that is cut down." "I'll show it to you," he said; and as we went along and looked under the tree, he took up an apple from the grass and offered it to me. "Try that," he said. It certainly looked tempting; and it tasted very good. "You like it?" said my brother. "As fine a fruit as ever I tasted." "It grew on the crab-apple tree," said James laughing.—For an instant I was tempted to throw it down; on the second thought I took another bite instead.

"Crab-apple tree! our crab-apple tree?" I cried, crunching the juicy mouthful; "it has wonderfully changed its character: what changed it from a crab-apple to a fine pippin?" Grafting has done the business," replied he. And he took me to the tree. It hung all over with pippins. "One of the most valuable trees in the garden," said he; and he went on to tell me the number of bushels that it commonly bore. "When father died, I determined to cut it down; but my man said it was sound and healthy at the root, and would make excellent grafted fruit. We lopped off the branches, and inserted some of those beautiful pippin grafts, and you see what it is."

"You have completely changed its nature, and given a new character to it," said I; "all the culture in the world would not have done this, I suppose?" "No," answered James, "it could only be done by putting in a wholly new and better branch; grafting is a great business."

This always seemed to me, a good illustration of our sinful nature. In the root, the trunk, and the fruit, we are like the crab-apple tree—perhaps good enough outside, making a fair show, but bitter to the taste, and really good for little.

Yet not hopelessly so. A new and better stock can be grafted in; our nature can be changed. Jesus Christ can insert a heavenly graft, a living branch, which shall bear good fruit, pleasant to the eye and sweet to the taste—fruit worth possessing, and worth gathering in the great harvest time.

May we know the power of his grace in grafting in us that which is good and holy, to the praise of his name.—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

OF HER. OF LIFE.]

MARATHON, N. Y., 8th March, 1870.

MRS. SQUIRES—Dear Madam:—I do not like the article which you gave me to read. You said, "You wanted a good hope." Now I am sure that so long as you let views so erroneous have an influence with you, your desire will be put far away. The view is against the whole current of Scripture. It may seem to be sustained by Scripture, but I am sure that any man reading those same Scriptures that are quoted to sustain the view, in the connection in which they stand, would never derive from them those conclusions.

There is one test by which you may try quotations from Scripture, which will never fail. If they present a view that is dreaded by the Christian heart, there is something false about it.

Now the whole Christian church turns with nausea from the doctrine maintained in your pamphlet. Say yourself, which of the two is the Good Hope—that which teaches according as the Westminster Catechism, "The souls of believers at their death made perfect in holiness and do immediately pass into glory," or that hope that leaves the soul in unconsciousness for a million of ages more or less, and then takes it into glory? Which do you prefer?

If the case of the writer of that article were traced out, it would be found that he is afflicted with inflammation of the duodenum, and so is led to cultivate a hypocondriacal hope. How contrary to the Scriptures will appear from the fact, 1st. That the Scriptures read by themselves, never give to the Christian a yellow or a gloomy idea, but bright hopes. 2d. The letter of the Scriptures are against the view. I will give a few quotations:

True View.	Hypocondriacal View.
He that believeth hath everlasting life.	He that believeth is going into the shades to remain none know how long.
I will withhold no good things.—Psa. lxxxiv. 11.	However uprightly you may walk I will withhold your joy for a million of ages, more or less.
Begotten . . . to a lively hope.—1 Pet. i. 3.	Begotten to a hope beyond a fog bank.
Christ wants we should be where he is.—John xiv. 3.	Christ wants to keep us in limbo a million of ages, more or less.
He is not a God of the dead but of the living.—Matt. xxii. 32.	He is God of those who are hibernating like a toad in winter.
Shining more and more.—Prov. iv. 18.	Darkling and sinking.
Comfort of the Scriptures.—Rom. xv. 4.	Wormwood of Scripture.
Henceforth a crown of Righteousness.—2 Tim. iv. 8.	After a million of ages, more or less, comes the crown.

The thief on the cross went directly to heaven.

"To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise."—Luke xxiii. 43.

Paradise is where God is.—Rev.

Where God is, is Heaven.

Stephen went directly to heaven.—Acts vii. 55–59.

Moses and Elias were conscious—full of joy.—Matt. xvii. 3.

Paul desired to depart to be with Christ.—Phil. i. 23.

Now look only at this last quotation. Paul was a very happy man in this life, "exceeding joyful in all his afflictions." To live was Christ, to depart far better. Is it possible for any one to believe that in these circumstances Paul was desirous to forsake his joy when he expected to dive into the Tartarean Gulf of unconsciousness, and there to remain a million of ages more or less?

All that can be said about that hypocondriacal hope is, that it is a little better than hell. 'Tis not a "good hope"—"a lively hope"—"comfort of the Scriptures," nor any such thing.

The spirit of the ancient flagellants lives even to this day. There are not a few who instead of receiving the testimony of God, which witnesses to them that believers have passed the dead point, and that henceforth they are on the ascending grade, already animated by that light "that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," set themselves, taxing all their ingenuity to whittle down their good hope and make as little of it as they can. They remind me of the late venerable Mr. Baldwin, who used to make jests of his infirmities, and when asked, "How are you to-day, Mr. Baldwin?" would answer, "O, I am a great deal worse than I was yesterday, I thank you."

If you would have a "good hope," then, do not make subtractions by casting away many ages of happiness, for it will be found that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared." It is all addition and no subtraction, when seen in true light.

It is a good exercise to remember that we who believe are united to Christ, being his body, his flesh, and his bones.—Eph. v. 30. And that he tells us that we are sharers in his fortunes: if he is dead, we are dead; if he is unconscious, we are unconscious; but "because I live ye shall live also."—John xiv. 19. What an imagination to suppose Christ, whose members we are, to be going about with dead flesh and bones in him.

Not only is the doctrine that I have reviewed repulsive and pernicious, but it is, as I am persuaded, exerting a pernicious influence upon you. Allow me then, in all kindness, to advise that you eschew all such reading as THE WATCH TOWER, by Homo, and betake yourself to the simple Word by Deo.

With kind regard,

H. LYMAN.

RESPONSE BY L. C. THORNE.

Rev. H. L. thinks the idea of unconsciousness between death and the resurrection is dreadful. He admits that the doctrines we advocate "may seem to be sustained by Scripture," and urges as an unfailing test of Bible interpretation, that if the explication presents "a view that is dreaded by the Christian heart, there is something false about" it. The likelihood of a doctrine to excite in any Christian heart a sense of dread depends wholly upon the stand-point from which that doctrine is viewed. They who have found that the Bible reveals no future life for any who die in impenitence, and that "as drouth and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave those which have sinned," look upon the theological hell as altogether horrible, too monstrous for serious consideration. Others, spanning with eye of faith a period of purging, and preparation for saintly communion, see the whole human family crowned with immortality and glory, and they hold that even the possibility of any part of mankind falling into non-existence is rather too terrible to think of. Another class, holding that at death the souls of all mankind enter upon a glorious onward and upward career, reject, as awful, that period of punishment and preparation for saintly communion. So it will be seen that what H. L. is pleased to term an unfailing test is in fact no test at all.

But suppose we admit his test, what then becomes of his doctrine of eternal torment? There is no theory as to the future of the wicked that inspires such intense "dread" in all hearts as does that. Nay, it excites worse and more harrowing feelings than dread in every thinking mind. Dr. Edward Beecher truly says of it, "it involves God, His whole administration, and His eternal kingdom, in the deepest dishonor that the mind of man or angel can conceive. The human mind cannot be held back from abhorring such a theory, except by the most unnatural violence to its divinely inspired convictions of right and honor." Albert Barnes says: "When I look upon a world of woe, filled with hosts to suffer forever—when I look upon friends, and upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger, . . . I am struck dumb—it is all dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it." This language by these eminent men expresses somewhat the mental experience of all who set about a serious contemplation of the subject. Judged, then, by the test suggested, the torment theory is annihilated, and our friend is compelled to choose between the destruction of the wicked on the one hand, and Universalism on the other. Which will he take?

He says, "The whole Christian church turns with nausea from the doctrine" of unconsciousness in death. This is far from the truth. It is a fact that many, many thousands of earnest, faithful Christians, both in this country and in Europe, have learned that without Christ, who "hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel," the race had perished, gone out of existence; and they cling lovingly and gratefully to the resurrection of the dead as the gospel hope of a future life. Anything dreadful in this? Paul told certain ones at Corinth who denied the resurrection (a thing H. L. practically does, though he sneeringly admits it may take place a million of ages, more or less, hence), that "if Christ be not raised . . . then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Now, in view of the theory that the "they which have fallen asleep in Christ" had already entered upon the enjoyment of heavenly blessedness, will any candid man undertake to tell us how their salvation depended upon the resurrection of Christ? They were saved whether Christ had risen or no. To suppose they which fell asleep in Christ, either before or after his death, but especially before, were removed beyond the possibility of perishing in the event of Christ's failure to come forth from the grave, is to make Paul's language utterly meaningless. We view this subject from the united stand-point of reason and revelation, and seeing that infinite love has provided a way of escape from death, we lay hold upon it and rejoice that God "in abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." A lively hope of what? Why, a lively hope of redemption "from this body of death." And this is called dreadful. Nay, good brother, it is glorious indeed; and well will it be for all professed followers of Jesus, if, like faithful Paul, we are willing to labor, and suffer all things "if by any means" we may "attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

Of the list of texts under head of "true view," expressing, as H. L. believes, his view, we notice only the first and the last, they being more than fair samples of the whole. "He that believeth hath everlasting life." This, strange to say, is adduced in support of consciousness in death. What will not men do to bolster up a theory? The life which is obtained by believing "on the Son" is not that which Rev. H. L. believes secures consciousness in death, for he holds that life is possessed alike by believers and unbelievers. He takes a text, or rather a part of one, the conditions of which undeniably restrict its application to a certain class, and quotes it as evidence of the existence of a principle which he holds to be common to all classes irrespective of character. This is convenient truly, but quite inadmissible. If the expression "he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life" were admitted as proof of consciousness in death, then the antithetic expression, "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life," must also be admitted as proof of unconsciousness in death. What then becomes of the doctrine of inherent immortality? Dr. Adam Clarke properly says, in explanation of the words hath everlasting life, "he has already the seed of this life . . . having been made a partaker of the grace and Spirit of him in whom he hath believed." Says Paul, "if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by (or, because of, margin) his Spirit that dwelleth in you." —Rom. viii. 11. That "because of" is the proper rendering is attested by many eminent scholars who adopt it. Dr. Hodges, who also recognizes its propriety, says, "according to this reading the indwelling of the Holy Spirit is the ground or reason why believers are not left in death." He that believeth on the Son, has dwelling in him, then, the principle of eternal life. He is "begotten" of the Spirit and will be born into everlasting life by a resurrection from the dead. Consequently he is said to have that life already.

The last quotation under head of "true view" is from 2 Tim. iv. 8. Paul says, he has "kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Yes, it is from henceforth laid up for you, but when will you get it, Paul? "The Lord, the righteous judge, shall give it to me at that day." What day, Paul? The day of Christ's appearing. The crown will be given to all who "love his appearing." Drs. Clarke and Lange both admit that the expression, "that day," refers to the Lord's second coming, and that then will Paul "publicly" receive his crown.

It is claimed that the thief went directly to heaven, "where God is." This we in all confidence deny. Christ was not false to his promises. Immediately after his resurrection, he asserted "I am not yet ascended to my Father." How, then, could the thief have been with Christ in heaven, "where God is," since Christ was not himself there? We have Christ's word for it, that no such promise was fulfilled. But it may be urged that Jesus' soul went to heaven, and that he meant he had not been there bodily. David said, "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell" (hades, or grave). Who did David here speak of? Let the Holy Spirit answer. On the pentacostal feast day, Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, quoted the above language and declared that David spake not of himself, for "he (David) is both dead and buried," but "being a prophet," he (David) "spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell" (hades, or grave). We have, then, the affirmation of the Holy Spirit that on the third day after the crucifixion Christ's soul came out of the grave, and we have also Jesus' own word that he had not been to heaven. The testimony of two such witnesses ought to be sufficient to satisfy our Presbyterian friend, H. L.

He seems determined, however, to have it that somebody went to glory at death, and so he says that "Stephen went directly to heaven" sure. It is quite unnecessary to multiply words on this point. Suffice it to say that the account says nothing about Stephen's going to heaven. It does say he "cried with a loud voice, Lord lay not this sin to their charge. And when he said this, he fell asleep." Why say he did not?

We would be not a little surprised, if any thing contended for in the interests of modern theology could surprise us, that our brother should urge the presence, at the transfiguration, of one who did not die, as evidence of consciousness between death and the resurrection. The presence of Elias, who was taken up in a chariot of fire—translated, no more proves nor suggests such conscious existence than does the presence of the apostles, as none can fail to see who properly consider the matter. If Elias was there he was there in person, and if Moses was there, he also was there in person, for the account reads, "Moses and Elias" appeared "talking with him." If only Moses' immaterial soul had been there it could not have been seen, for material eyes cannot see immateriality. As Moses died and was buried, it inevitably follows that if he was present on the occasion, he was previously raised from the dead. The charge of Jesus to the disciples, "tell the vision to no man," intimates that Moses and Elias were merely represented, or personated. But however that may be, the circumstance of the transfiguration cannot be pressed into the service of consciousness in death.

The last text referred to by H. L. is that relating to Paul's "desire to depart and to be with Christ." As this is thought a very strong text in opposition to our views, we will give it a trifle more attention. Let us look at both text and context. Commencing with verse 20 we read, "According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, (me) whether it be by life or by death. For me to live is Christ, (Christ what? Why Christ magnified, for Paul says Christ shall be magnified by his life) and to die is gain." (Gain to Paul? No. Gain to Christ. Paul says, Christ shall be magnified by his death; and in that respect Paul's death would be gain to Christ). "But if I live in the flesh, this (Christ magnified) is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I wot (know) not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ which is far better."

Paul then is in a strait betwixt two; and that he did not know how to make choice between them is evidence that he did not believe in going to glory immediately at death; for, had he done so, he could quickly have decided the matter. His "desire to depart and to be with Christ" could not, therefore, have been one of the straits betwixt which he was. Speaking of a time when he and his brethren were terribly persecuted in Asia, "pressed out of measure above strength, insomuch that they despaired even of life," Paul says, "we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead; who delivered us from so great a death, and dost deliver; in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us." Thus we see that when death stared Paul in the face he had no desire to meet it, but if it were the Lord's will that he should then suffer it, his trust was not that he should be glorified in death, but that he should be raised from the dead to eternal glory.

Again, says Paul, Phil. ii. 27, "For indeed he (Epaphroditus) was sick nigh unto death; but God had mercy on him." Epaphroditus was Paul's companion in labor. Sickness had stricken him down, and from Paul's language we may fairly infer that his physical sufferings were equal unto death itself. Would it then have been an act of mercy on the part of God to have restored Epaphroditus to a life fraught with all the sorrows resulting from persecution instead of instantly relieving him from all his trials by transferring him right to glory, if taking saints there at death is a part of the divine plan? We readily see why Paul regarded the restoration of his fellow-soldier to health as an act of mercy to both of them; but we think our friend, believing as he does, will find it hard to conceive how either Paul or Epaphroditus could see in it the bestowal of any mercy upon the latter. The two straits, we conceive to be life and death. Paul plainly stated that in either case it would be gain to Christ, inasmuch as he was to be magnified.

Paul, moreover, always presented death as undesirable; and subjected, as he was, to sore trials and afflictions, persecuted on all sides, oftimes suffering more than death daily, he could not look upon life as desirable. So neither of the two being attractive, he knew not which to choose, for he desired, though he did not, perhaps, expect, a third and very much better thing than either of the two, which was to "depart and to be with Christ." Paul desired translation. He was a man of towering faith, and we find him at one time recalling the case of Enoch, who, by faith, "was translated that he should not see death." Translation being very preferable to either life or death, there was nothing strange in Paul's desiring it. There are times when all God's tried ones desire it.

Paul instructed the church at Thessalonica respecting the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead, and seeking to comfort some who had friends sleeping in Jesus, affirmed that "we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (precede) them which are asleep." Paul did not take upon himself so aimless and absurd a task as would have been that of assuring the Thessalonian brethren that those who are alive at the coming of Christ shall not "meet the Lord" sooner than those who fall asleep in him, if the latter class are already present with him when he comes.

Paul also told the Corinthians, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die."—1 Cor. xv. 32. Upon the assumption that the real, thinking person is conscious between death and the resurrection, and in the case of believers, that consciousness is a happy one, Paul must have been guilty of miserable folly in saying that if the dead rise not, "let us eat and drink; for tomorrow we die," for he could not but know that himself and all saints would be immeasurably advantaged even if the dead shall never rise. He did not argue, if the dead do not rise, we still have immortal souls that must either be happy or miserable, and hence we should deny ourselves and labor for Christ. No, nothing of that; but he stakes all upon the resurrection of the dead, and says, if there is no truth in that, let us eat and drink and enjoy life upon true epicurean principles, for to-morrow we die; and beyond that there is nothing. There is no misunderstanding Paul here. His position unquestionably is, no resurrection, no future life; a proposition which would be utterly baseless if men never wholly lose life.

Our brother's eagerness to defer the coming of Christ "a million of ages, more or less," is strongly suggestive that he is one of those termed "last days scoffers," who say, "where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were." There is no evidence that Peter here refers to individuals who deny the Lord's return altogether, but to a class who, professing Christ, see nothing of the gathering signs of his near return; but say of course he will come, but "where is the promise of his coming" within "a million of ages, more or less?"

All such expressions and insinuations as "afflicted with inflammation of the duodenum," "hypochondrical," "hibernating like a toad in winter," etc., are so unbecoming their author we pass them by in silence, deeply saddened that they emanated from a fellow-laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. May we all seek to more and more love the appearing of our blessed Lord; and, if alive at his coming, be by faith "translated and not see death." Whether thus redeemed, or whether delivered from death, we may sing unto the "Lamb," "Thou art worthy . . . for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." That this glorious experience may be ours, let us be ever upon the watch tower, for the Master said, "blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching."

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

IMMORTALITY IN CHRIST.

DEAR SIR—You will rejoice to learn that the glorious doctrine of Life and Immortality in Christ is finding an entrance into many Christian hearts. Thoughtful persons, not a few, are discovering that the traditional notion of the creature man, sinful dust and ashes, being in himself necessarily and essentially immortal, is a mere human invention, without a shadow of foundation in God's word. A gentleman in Essex has lately offered a purse of one hundred guineas to any one who will produce a single text of Scripture to prove the natural immortality of the soul. Those who hold the dogma, and denounce all who do not, ought certainly to come forward with one text at least. It is to be hoped that this offer will lead many to search the Scriptures for themselves. Then they will find it written, not that every one, whether believer or unbeliever, but only "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever," he only that believeth in Christ "shall never die."—1 John ii. 17; John xi. 26.

A learned and pious divine lately discoursing upon the subject, remarked as follows—"On what do I base my faith? Not in what is called the immortality of the human mind. I do not know—not one knows—what matter is, and therefore no one can, with any amount of intelligence, predicate any thing about immateriality; not on the instinctive longings which we all have for a future life; not on the constitutional immortality of the human soul, for I believe that the constitutional immortality of the creature is a contradiction. On what, then, do I ground my faith? On the revealed will of God. The duration of any creature's existence must always depend on the will of the Creator, the absolute One. I say philosophically that the continuation of any creature's existence for a day or for an hour must depend upon the will of that God who created the universe, whose we are, and whom we are bound to serve."

Thus we see that the truth is progressing, the good seed is springing up: let us thank God, and take courage. You, sir, and others, have sown in tears; you will assuredly reap in joy, reap a rich harvest of blessing both here and hereafter, for "ye serve the Lord Christ."

I am, dear sir,

Yours respectfully and gratefully,

E. ELCOCK.

A PRIVILEGE OF THE SONS OF GOD.

WE should dwell much on the confidential nearness into which grace has brought us to Jesus. It has made us sons, and given us access through Him, by one Spirit, to the Father. Little cares, little trifles, little perplexities, make up the sum of our little lives. To meet these, we need the spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba; for we need a parent's care, a parent's heart, and nothing can suffice us, save to be shown to the Father. We lose so much holy joy because we so little know Him. How would the thought, My heavenly Father knoweth what things I have need of, deliver us from care about many things! Rarely do we find Christians going as children to their Father; telling him with artless confidence, the little things that try them, sure of finding a Father's heart into which they can cast their cares. We may be strict and busy in public worship and service, but it is in the closet that we have specially to do with the Father, and to tell him all our private necessities, which can be told to none but him. Do you, my brother, experimentally know this privilege? It is certain that you do not, unless you are no longer a servant, but a son.—The Witness.

From M. C. Harriman.

Dear Herald: It has been a long time since my pen has scratched aught to thee; and even now I do not expect to write any thing worthy of thy columns; but I would that peace might reign. And as joy comes to my heart from thee, I desire also to diffuse the sweet peace of conscience that dwells in my own bosom. The palpitations of thy heart I know are varied, as thy blood flows through many veins; and if all these beatings are not in perfect unison with each other, yet we hope all thy members will be reconciled, and perfect bliss enjoyed by all thy bands.

"Thou spreadest forth thy wings like the morning, and lo, light is diffused through the earth; thy lips are opened, and people listen to hear the words thou wilt utter: thou speakest, and men believe with the heart unto righteousness, and confession with lips is made unto salvation."

The doctrines thou showest forth (though some tell me that none are converted by them), turned my steps from going in the ways of death; they unfolded to my clouded vision the justice of a God of love; they helped me to place my trust in Him who alone is able to save; and to give my confidence to one who is abundantly able to pardon; they learned me that "his ways were ways of pleasantness, and all his paths were paths of peace;" they taught me that perfect love casteth out all fear; and as where fear is there is torment, so also where there is no fear, but love, there torment has no lot or place.

Do men despise thee! Be not dismayed. If they revile thee, fear not; for the moth shall eat them (the wicked) as a garment; and the worm shall eat them like wool: but "righteousness shall be forever, and salvation from generation to generation." Remember the Lord was persecuted, buffeted, and slain; and he did no sinful thing. Be steadfast, therefore, immovable to the end. Then shall thy members be brought together into one building, not built by hands, but erected by our God and by his Christ.

O, that thy bands were wholly loosed; that thou mayest be set free indeed, and thy light shine, and thy voice be heard, even to the ends of the earth. O that the redeemed of the Lord might hear, and come to Zion with everlasting joy on their heads, and joy and gladness be obtained, while sorrow and sighing flee away.

Thou professest to be a herald of the kingdom of God; and of life from death: these truths are glorious; but "who hath believed thy report?" Whose ears have been unstopped to hear? Who hath repented or chosen life? Thank God, some have heard and believed, through grace and the mercy of our Lord. Others have stumbled because of the traditions of men. Still others, who care not for the things of the Spirit, have chosen the path whose end is death. But remember, beloved, that although our loved ones may sleep in the dust, torn ruthlessly from our side by the last enemy of man, death, yet the promise is, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that sleep in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs."

How good God is to those that love him, those who love his service, and feel it no disgrace to be humble. Also, how merciful to those who by nature are the children of wrath, those who will not come that they may have life; but who choose rather to wander out of the way of understanding, and remain in the congregation of the dead; to those, when their Adamic life is ended, and the law claims its own, and each goes to his own place, it can be said, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; for thou hast made all their memory to perish. They were driven away from the tree of life lest they should eat and live forever in sin." Thy will, O God, in mercy, be done.

I would say, let all thy teachings be with the true spirit. Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. That spirit has been manifested. Can it be an offence, in one so unworthy, to desire its continuance? Let us all abide in it, that we may be quickened by it. The day when the crowns shall be given hasteth greatly. We hear the rumble of its chariot wheels from far; the mighty echo of its trumpet voice vibrates on the agitated air. Let all watch and be sober, that that day overtake us not as a thief. For a fiery stream shall issue and come forth before him, signifying the Son of God. Yes, beloved, thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land now specially near. O Zion, thy salvation cometh, thy inhabitants shall not say I am sick, and thy people shall be forgiven their iniquities. For now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up: yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them; and they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked. Shun not to declare the whole counsel of God, whether men hear or forbear, for it will prove a savor of life unto life to some.

May the God of love be with you until the coming of our Life-giver; then may we be transformed from this body of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 6, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Christian Passover, in this City.

The Anniversary in "remembrance" of the death of "Christ, our passover, who was sacrificed for us," will be celebrated by the Believers in the yearly memorial of that event at the Cooper Institute, (Room 18), Friday evening, April 15; exercises to commence at half past seven precisely. All who love the Lord Jesus are invited to join with us on the occasion, whether they are with us in the anniversary views or not. It is the Lord's table, and all His friends will find a welcome.

The entrance into the place of our meeting is at the corner of 4th Ave. and Eighth St., New York City. Please be present at the hour appointed.

The Passovtr Feast in Philadelphia.

Our Christian friends of Philadelphia and vicinity are invited to the house of Br. Jas. L. Boyd, No. 1,330 Columbia ave., (a few steps from his former residence) to observe our Lord's Memorial Feast on its coming anniversary, Friday evening, 15th inst.

A Rich Tract.

FIFTY DOLLARS WANTED IMMEDIATELY.

There has been a request to have the Questions by Rev. Wm. D. Bridge, and the Response by Leonard C. Thorne, which appeared in the Herald of Life, March 16th, republished in a tract. We propose, that not only that, but the article in this week's issue, on the first page, be added to the tract, and both issued in one. Nothing of more interest has recently appeared. No one can impartially read these two calm and clear responses, of Br. Thorne's, without feeling that both the Methodist and Presbyterian ministers are well answered, and we all have occasion to praise the Lord for the grace which has enabled our beloved Brother so ably and clearly to set the truth before our minds. Br. Thorne took no interest in religion till the Life views were presented to him about ten years since. They commended themselves to his understanding and heart, and won him to Christ. Steadfastly has he walked in the Lord ever since, rejoicing in the light and love of the same. He rejoices in the great things God has done for him, and not for him alone, but for others also through his instrumentality, and that of the truth.

The articles we now propose to issue in a tract, show that he has been taught in the school of Christ, and has been no idle scholar. The spirit of his Responses show how he has learned in "meekness to instruct those who oppose themselves" to what he regards as the precious truths of God's word.

We ask our friends—the friends of truth—to furnish us immediately with $50 that these rich and instructive articles may go out on their glorious errand of blessing our fellow creatures by leading them from darkness to light, and from the traditions of men to drink of the pure waters of "the river of life," that they, too, may be made to rejoice in Christ Jesus our Life-giver and our Hope.

The tract will be about 24 pages, and the first 2,000 will cost between $50 and $60. Whatever you send in aid of this object, you can have returned in this tract or any of our "Campaign Documents," or Books in our Catalogue, that you may choose. Let us have your response without delay.

"Life in Christ Only."

"Three Letters to the Editor of the 'Christian World.' Revised, with notes and additions. By Edward White," etc. "London: James Clarke & Co., 13 Fleet st., E. C., 1870.

We have received the above pamphlet from England, from the Author. It contains 56 pages. The "Christian World," in which these Letters first appeared, has a circulation of 117,00, weekly; so that they have been widely scattered in England. Mr. White is a Congregational Minister, or was, twenty-five years ago, when we first heard of him, and imported his original work on the above subject; an octavo volume of several hundred pages. About that time we received several letters from him which were published in our Bible Examiner, which was then issued in Philadelphia. Since that time we have had no direct communication with him, and hardly knew what position he occupied.

We have not yet completed the reading of the pamphlet just received, and cannot speak with certainty of his present position, but judge it has not materially changed in the last twenty-five years. The views he and others are promulgating in England are evidently on the increase, and we trust the light of "Life in Christ Only," may continue to increase on the other side of the Atlantic till the darkness that has covered Christendom there, may be dispelled and the true doctrine shine on every side, to the glory of God the Father and the praise of His grace in Jesus Christ.

We shall give extracts from the work received as we get time and room.

Campaign Documents and Books.

We have a good supply of all the works in our Catalogue on hand at this time; and hope there may be a large call for them, and that they may be judiciously circulated. It is useless to give to those who will not read; but where any interest is manifestsd, be sure to have something to give.

We have just issued a second thousand of the Tract on "The Judgment," which has been paid for by our Br. E. Wolcott, of Keyport, N. J. These will be sent gratuitously to such as desire them, by their sending to us the amount of postage, which will be two cents on seven copies, and in that proportion for each additional seven.

English Literature.

"The Rainbow: A Magazine of Christian Literature, with special reference to the Revealed Future of the Church and the world: Edited by William Leask, D.D." His address is, "34 Sandringham Road, London, E." [England.]

The number for March is received. It is a Magazine of 50 pages with cover. We are pleased to know the work of spreading the Life Views is progressing in England; yet we think an advance step in their theory will be found necessary to save them from being overwhelmed by Restorationism. They seem studiously to avoid the idea that there is no revival into life of the wicked dead; and some of them talk of the wicked, after their resurrection, undergoing extreme torture, according to their deeds, in gehenna, terminating in their final extinction. We beseech our brethren in England to consider whether such doctrine is not a remnant of the endless torment theoy; and whether it is possible to reconcile it with a wise and just government, such as the "Judge of all the earth" most certainly does and will maintain. Can it comport with the chrracter of a "Just God and Life-giver," whose grand characteristic is set forth by "the beloved disciple" in this language, "God is Love."

We believe it utterly impossible to reconcile the attributes of God with any such doctrine as that of the reliving from the dead of wicked men for purposes of torture, whether for an endless period, or one hour; they are both abhorent to that sense of justice which the Creator has implanted in the human breast and which led Abraham to reason with the Lord saying, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"—Gen. xviii. 25.

We are encouraged, however, to believe that the subject of the non-revival of the wicked dead will yet be discussed in England; and if so, we have no fear but it will result in the rejection of this last remnant of the torment theory, and men will see that "God is Love."

Destroy and Destruction.

These words are of frequent occurence in the Bible, in speaking of the end or punishment of the wicked. Our opponents have labored hard and long to turn away the force of the words so as to make them harmonize with their idea of perpetual existence in torment. The Greek word used to express this destruction is apollumi. Dr. Mortimer, in his letter to Rev. Samuel Minton, London, says, "Apollumi, whenever and wherever it occurs in a Greek author, has but one meaning—the destruction of the object to which it is the active verb:" he adds, "an immortality inherent in man, is an unscriptural figment." He further says, "Our future life, and our immortal life, are everywhere in Scripture represented to be the gift of God in Jesus Christ."

"Rev. Dr. Mortimer," was "late Head Master of the City of London School." He speaks hence, as a scholar; and though he may have some things yet to learn—and who has not?—he evidently sees that all future life is "a gift," a favor bestowed on men "in Jesus Christ." Such a life cannot be a curse; but must be a blessing. Hence no wicked man ever has it: death destroys them forever. "The Second death," of which some talk so much, is death without recovery; and in that sense it was used among the Hebrews. A sinner dying in his sins is destroyed forever: he is "punished with everlasting destruction;" he "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." He has no part in "the gift of God," a "future life;" his doom is fixed unalterably in death. The "gifts of God" make rich and add no sorrow.

If "the goodness of God" will not "lead us to repentance," we "reap corruption"—no life is attached to it; the very idea of corruption excludes life in any form or degree. Corruption cannot die, because it is utterly destitute of life; and life cannot cease where it has no existence. Hence a dead sinner is dead forever; he has no life principle connected with him; he has sown to the flesh, and of the flesh has reaped corruption; that, is his end; he is destroyed.

One ground of encouragement that this subject will not long lie dormant in England, is suggested by a "Letter," on the cover of the "Rainbow" for March, which contains the following remark on 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, "Paul hesitates not to say—I give a literal translation of the passage—'But if Christ has not been raised (from the dead), your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins; and as a consequence (ara kai) those who fell asleep in Christ were annihilated (when they fell asleep.')" That the author of this translation may be seen to be a man of eminence, we will give his letter entire, with Dr. Leask's introduction to it. It is as follows:

Immortality.—Letter from the Rev. Dr. Mortimer, late Head Master of the City of London School, to the Rev. Samuel Minton, Minister of Eaton Chapel, London:

My Dear Minton.—I send you a copy of Preston's Ecclesiastes, together with a Latin Version of Mendlessohn's Translation. How far they clear up the difficulties of that most difficult book you will yourself be able to judge. Preston is Lord Almoner's reader in Arabic, at Cambridge.

I read your little work entitled, "The Way Everlasting," with great interest. One ought to feel thankful for every publication which forces the Clergy and educated Laymen to consider how far their interpretation of Scripture is a mere stereotyped repetition of conclusions jumped at in ages when Greek criticism was unknown; and how far they will bear the crucial test of strict critical analysis.

I hestate not to bear my testimony to the correctness of your statements, as to two matters of much importance—first, that apollumi, whenever and wherever it occurs in a Greek author, has but one meaning—the destruction of the object to which it is the active verb; secondly that an immortality inherent in man, is an unscriptural figment. Our future life, and our future immortal life, are everywhere in Scripture represented to be the gift of God in Jesus Christ. See 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, where St. Paul hesitates not to say—I give a literal translation of the passage—"But if Christ has not been raised (from the dead), your faith is vain; ye are still in your sins; and as a consequence (ara kai) those who fell asleep in Christ were annihilated (when they fell asleep.") That this is the right rendering of the double aorist koimeethentes and apolonto is indisputable. It is lost in our translation by the words being incorrectly translated as perfects. With them must perish the idea that Scripture warrants a belief that immortality is inherent in man. This passage states, that, but for the success of Christ's interposition on his behalf, proved by his resurrection from the dead, death annihilates the Christian. Well might St. Paul add, in the contemplation of such a destiny, "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." The only Scriptural reply is, 'But now Christ has risen from the dead, a first-fruits of those who have fallen asleep." I omit egeneto which is admitted to be an interpolation. Make what use you like of these few lines, and believe me to be,

Very faithfully yours,
G. F. W. Mortimer, D.D.
72 Eccleston Square, S.W., Jan. 5, 1870.

We think Dr. Mortimer in this letter has settled the fact—if his translation of 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, "is indisputable," as he say it is—that those who die in their "sins" are "annihilated when they" die. The Doctor says, "This passage states, that, but for the success of Christ's interposition on his behalf, proved by his resurrection from the dead, death annihilates the Christian." Surely this makes the case strong as we can desire. It plainly stands thus—Christ interposes on behalf of his people, or believers in him, to rescue them from death; but for this, "death annihilates the Christian." If the reason why they are not annihilated by death is, that Christ secures their revival from the dead, because they are "Christians," or believers, then it follows, inevitably that those who are not believers, or such as die in their sins, "death annihilates" them. We do not know that Dr. Mortimer intended to insinuate that as his belief; but it follows from his statements as plainly as any logical conclusion that was ever arrived at.

If Dr. Mortimer, Dr. Leask, Rev. Edward White, or any other learned and logical Life Believer, can escape this conclusion, without abandoning the main principles which separate them from "orthodox" expositors, let them make the trial. They may be reluctant to come to our conclusion, but we see no door open to escape this result, and to this result we fully believe all Life Believers must come at last.

Immortal-Soulists: Look Here.

It is a pertinent fact that, although the word "soul" occurs nearly five hundred times in the Bible, it is not once prefixed by the terms "immortal," "never-dying," etc., so profusely applied to it by modern theologists of every sect. But we do find, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

We clipt the above from "The Nazarene," a little magazine, issued at Stockton, Cal., by Wm. N. Glenn. This single fact, so briefly stated is enough to bring an impartial mind to a stand before ever again using the terms "immortal-soul"—"never-dying soul," etc., which expressions are unknown to the Bible, and stand in no higher authority than heathen speculations and Popish dogmatism.

Early in the sixteenth century, the contest waxed warm, "The Platonists," says Mr. Ham, "laboring hard to establish their favorite dogma of the soul's immortality, in which they were most effectually aided by the Pope, who came in with his baton of infallibility, and at once decided the controversy by the dictum of spiritual authority. A Council of the Lateran, held in 1513, under Pope Leo X., pronounced the proper immortality of the soul an article of Christian faith. And this Council, Luther says, 'was of so little authority as to be laughed at and despised by the Romanists themselves.'"

"The advocates of the doctrine of the soul's immortality need to be reminded of this suspicious passage in its historic progress. The seal of authority was affixed to it by a Roman Pontiff—a man, the worthy counterpart of England's Charles II.—fond of fashion and field sports, and mixing up in all the dissipated excesses of the sacred metropolis."

The doctrine of inherent immortality, held and promulgated by the modern churches, lives or dies with the "infallibility" of the Popes. It answers the corrupt purposes of that corrupt church; and it cannot fail to pollute any other body calling itself a church. It perverts or corrupts every truth of the Bible; and, as Wm. Tyndale, the translator of the Bible, and a martyr, said, in reply to an argument by Sir Thomas Moore, "In putting souls in heaven, hell, and purgatory, you destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection."

Luther had attacked the Pope's dogma that "the soul is immortal." Sir Thomas Moore replied to him, and Tyndale responded to Moore. It is a truth, becoming more and more evident, that the doctrine of an inherant immortal soul is rooting out from popular theology, the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. That fact was notorious in the funeral services of the late Dr. McClintock, in this city, where two eminent bishops of the Methodist E. Church officiated, and no mention was made of the resurrection, but the dead one was at once placed in heaven; thus theoretically saying a resurrection is useless and virtually impossible; hence, practically denying that Christ is "the resurrection and the life."

Such is the legitimate result of this corrupt and corrupting notion of an immortal soul in man; a notion which is so firmly imbedded in modern theology, that its advocates denounce us as "infidels" who oppose it. Be it so; we had rather be called infidels than to follow the "Mother of Harlots" in her decree of the soul's immortality. We hope and pray that many will yet be found to be "My people," by obeying the call of God, saying, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."—Rev. xviii. 4.

It is by this sin of affirming the inherent immortality of the soul, that she has carried on her "merchandise;" among which has been the largest share "of souls of men." On this sin has arisen her "purgatory," and Protestants have made it their passport to heaven or hell at death, and thus overturned the great and grand truth, so insisted on by our Life-giver and his Apostles, of "the resurrection from the dead;" they have, so far as human perversion can do it, "destroyed the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection," as Tyndale says.

When will these corruptions cease? That, the Lord only knows; but by His grace, we shall expose and fight against them till God shall say our work is done.

"Inhumanity."

Horrible.—An English paper tells a revolting story of the captain of one of the Waterford cattle steamers. Finding himself short of fuel, he resorted to the live-stock to supply his furnaces burning alive one hundred pigs. And it is said that this is not a solitary example of inhumanity; but the cattle boats plying between the Thames and Hamburg have in more than one instance, been guilty of burning their live stock when short of fuel.

We cut this item from the "Advent Herald" of recent date. We suppose that "orthodox" paper to indorse the "horrible" character of "burning alive one hundred pigs" by the "captain of a steamer" in "his furnaces."

We would ask if it is more horrible to burn "live pigs" than to burn human beings? The imaginary being, which "orthodoxy" calls "God," according to their theory, is determined to burn, in "his furnace," which they call "hell," not "one hundred live pigs," but unnumbered millions of live human beings; and to see that they do not die, like the "pigs," he will "exert his almighty power to sustain their being," and "make their pains cut most intolerably deep;" and this in a duration which is to have no end, or eternally! Such is the teaching of the so-called "orthodox," to which school our cotemporary, the "Advent Herald," belongs.

We do not wonder they use the word "horrible," in speaking of the "burning alive one hundred pigs," though the pigs could not survive many seconds in the "furnaces" of the steamer, and their misery is ended. Yet they teach that their God is determined on a vastly larger business in "live stock," of the human family, in "his furnaces," with the power and disposition to keep up the torture ad-infinitum! Such is boasted "orthodoxy:" shocked at the "horrible" sight of burning live pigs, but complacently justifying the endless burning of millions on millions of human beings, without respite and without end.

"Resurrection of the Unjust."

Br. Storrs: I had placed in my hand a work entitled, "A Vindication of the Resurrection of the Unjust: By J. H. Waggoner."

There are a few points in it which I deem worthy of a refutation, and if you think proper you may publish the following. He quotes from some of our works:

"It is by connection with Adam, as descendants from him, that death came to those whose personal sins are forgiven." He then remarks: "In these statements it is admitted that mankind do not now die on account of their personal sins. For if the present prevailing death is the penalty of personal sin, by what principle of justice do they suffer that penalty after their personal sins are forgiven? Do they really believe that God executes the penalty of sins after they are forgiven? If so, in what consists their forgiveness? And here against this non-resurrection theory, I bring this charge, that it entirely ignores the gospel doctrine of the remission of sins, and contradicts every statement of the Scriptures in regard to forgiveness. In this it stands in direct opposition to the gospel system."—Page 11.

"The question now before us is this: Is there any forgiveness in the gospel? . . . For I assert, without fear of contradiction, that the forgiveness of sin and the execution of its penalty cannot exist together."—Page 12.

To place the matter fairly before the readers, I will make a few more quotations:

1. Present or "first death" is not the penalty of personal transgression to infants, as they have no personal sins to die for; they die "in Adam," or by virtue of their relation to him.

2. Present or "first death," is not the penalty of personal sins to the justified, their transgressions having been forgiven, and of course, are not punishable. Therefore this death also is solely the result of their relation to Adam.

3. All the wicked sustain the same relation to Adam that do infants and saints; they are subject to the same "Adamic condition." This is conceded. And therefore they die, "by virtue of that relation," as do infants and saints, and not on account of their personal sins. They who deny this third point, or maintain the contrary, are justly held to prove that the wicked do not sustain that same relation to Adam, and are not subject to its consequences, as are infants and saints. This we do not think they will undertake. But they must see that a failure on their part here involves their whole system.—Pages 13, 14.

Waggoner's whole book rests upon these few propositions. Therefore to refute these the whole is gone.

"What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? As I live, saith the Lord, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel;" . . . for "the soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. xviii. 2–4. And Paul speaking of Israel's dispensation says, "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every disobedience received a just recompense of reward."—Heb. ii. 2.

It is a remarkable fact that in all the Old Testament dispensation not a solitary instance occurs in which men are charged with the Sin of Adam.

But "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses."—Heb. x. 28. I wonder if this was for personal sins, or for Adam's transgression?

Now the first question to be settled is, In what relation do we stand to Adam? Here I may differ from some of my brethren in the principles laid down by them; but as I am not discussing men's principles, but the Bible question, and as I have always been opposed to laying down our principles of justice, and then judging God from our stand-point of what God can or cannot do, in accordance with our principles, I shall leave them all out and look at the Scriptures as I find them.

I read that God made Adam of the earth, an earthy man of the dust of the ground. And Paul gives me a definition of this first man: "And so it has been written, The first Adam was an animal."—1 Cor. xv. 45, 46. Now the simple fact of placing the man in the garden did not change his nature, but his condition. He would have died if he had never been placed in the garden and never had sinned. But placing him in the garden he was in reach of the "tree of life," which would have prevented him from dying and have continued him in endless life. But when placed in that condition, it was sin which placed him outside of the reach of the tree of life; and hence the judgment pronounced upon him. The threat was, "For in the day thou eatest thereof, in dying thou shalt surely die." And the judgment pronounced is in accordance with the threat. God does not say, I will execute you or kill you. No; but he explains his condition to him, "For dust thou art (and in the natural course of events) and unto dust thou shalt return."—Gen. iii. 19.

The time for the event depended upon the care Adam took of himself. Now, Adam being animal, and we being descended from Adam partake of his animal nature, and die because of that nature, whether saints, sinners or infants. But says Br. Waggoner, "It is because we have sinned in Adam. Does not Paul say, As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned;—Rom. v. 12?" Now if we can understand the Apostle in these remarks, we have cleared up the whole difficulty, for there is a difficulty and some of the ablest minds have been puzzled in this chapter, "for until the law sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law."—Rom. v. 13. Now would Br. Waggoner and others make Paul to contradict himself in these two verses, and tell us that Adam's sin is imputed to us all?

For says Waggoner in his first proposition, "Death is not the penalty of personal transgression to infants, as they have no personal sin; they die in Adam." Are they sinners by imputation? Paul says sin is not imputed where there is no law. But are they not under the Adamic law? Paul says again, "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." But Paul says again, they have all sinned. Under what law have they sinned, when Paul says there was no law?

Waggoner says, Page 12, "The full penalty of the law is executed upon both alike, saint and sinner." What law? friend Waggoner. Why did you not tell us, so that we could examine your law? "For until the law sin was in the world." What law? Paul answers, A law was given to Adam, and then for a long period death reigned although there was no law. Now the Mosaic law enters, that sin may abound. During this long period, from Adam to Moses, sin was not imputed; but now a new law enters, and men are to be tried by this new dispensation. Under the first law, one man was tried and failed and the world was condemned to its animal nature, and Adam sent away from the tree of life, and he and his race left in a perishing condition; death reigned. A new dispensation enters; and a new man is tried under the new dispensation; for Paul says, Adam was a type of him that was to come. The first man was tried and failed, and was sent from the tree of life into the animal world; and we die being in Adam just the same as the horse or ox dies because it has an animal nature. But the second man, who is tried under the new law succeeds; and in him God restores the new principle of life; it is by partaking of him as the tree of life. Jesus says, "I am the bread of life, that one may eat thereof and not die."—John vi. 51." And this is the will of him that sent me, that of all which he has given me I should lose nothing, but raise it up at the last day." "Verily, verily, I say unto you; He that heareth my word and believes on him that sent me, has everlasting life, and comes not into condemnation, but has passed out of death into life." (Union translation.)—John v. 24.

The first Adam was tried, failed, and was banished from the Tree of life. "And not only so, but we even boast in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received the reconciliation," (from the broken law of Moses;) "for this reason as through one man (Adam) sin entered into the world and through (his sin) death: so also, death passed upon all men." The Emphatic Diaglott places the words (in whom all sinned) in brackets.

This second man, Christ, was tried and obeyed God under his trial; magnified the law, and God was reconciled to Israel by the accomplishment of the law by Christ, justified his people from under that law, and introduced a new dispensation called the Gospel. That gospel offers life, not in the present state, but by a resurrection of the dead.

Now then, as Waggoner's propositions are,

1. Present, or "first-death" is not the penalty of personal sin to infants. 2. It is not to the justified, their transgressions being forgiven. 3. All the wicked sustain the same relation to Adam: Therefore, they die by virtue of that relation. "They who deny this 3d point, are justly held to prove that the wicked do not sustain the same relation to Adam."

But we would say to J. H. Waggoner, the relation we hold to Adam has nothing to do with the gospel relation we hold to Christ. We can admit all of these three points, and what then? Infants, Christians and sinners die because they hold an animal relationship to Adam. But Christians have life by the relationship they hold to Christ. Where then is J. H. Waggoner's charge that this doctrine ignores the gospel system in regard to forgivness? But says J. H. Waggoner, "The punishment of personal sins may be averted, according to the plain declarations of the gospel." We ask him how, except upon the plan of a union with Christ? It required a book of 100 pages, to refute a very simple truth, which stands thus; "God said unto Adam, Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." David says, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed upon them."—Ps. xlix. 14. "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." "Jesus said your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead."—John vi. "This is the bread that cometh down from heaven that a man may eat thereof and not die;" in the sense that your fathers died. Those eating of me will not die. Did these fathers die the second death? No; but according to J. H. Waggoner, they will. Well, why did not Christ say so? "Then said Jesus, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." But says J. H. Waggoner, that means eternal or future life. Very true, and that is just what they lack. Paul says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not raised; then they also, (as well as Christ) which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

"But these as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Peter ii. 12. Here we have the simple truth that man is an animal, and his tendency is to perish like the brute beast. And we read "that God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life."

Now, friend Waggoner, our gospel finds men perishing, going to decay, out of life; and it, in the language of its author, comes to them and says, "For the bread of life is that which cometh down from heaven and giveth life to the world. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth of me shall live by me." It would have been a source of gratification to me at least if J. H. Waggoner would have told us by what power these dead sinners are coming up from the dead. I read, that Paul asked this question, "And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us ward who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand."—Eph. i. 19, 20. We might charge J. H. Waggoner with preaching a gospel containing a principle which gives a resurrection without Christ. For Jesus said, the will of his Father was, that he should lose nothing which was given to him, but should raise it up at the last day. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day.—John vi. 39, 40.

NEW ENGLAND JOTTINGS.

BY RUFUS WENDELL.

VIII.

[NOTE.—The following article—"On Special Light from Heaven"—constitutes the 9th chapter of an anonymous English work (first published in London in January, 1862) entitled "The Study of the Bible." I have been reminded of it by perusing the article on "The Bible and the Bible Alone," which Bro. Storrs has transferred to this week's HERALD. I venture to commend the extract here given, to the careful consideration of all.—R. W.

ON SPECIAL LIGHT FROM HEAVEN.

"This Book, this Holy Book, on every line
Marked with the seal of high Divinity,
On every leaf bedewed with drops of love,—
This lamp, from off the everlasting Throne
Mercy took down, and in the night of Time
Stood, casting on the dark her gracious bow."

POLLOK.

THE notion of a special light being vouchsafed to the prayerful reader of Scripture, is as destructive of the Divine Record itself as it is of man's responsibility in rejecting it; for if God, by His Holy Spirit, communicates directly with the minds of men now, as an Interpreter, such communications will assuredly control any words given to mortals eighteen hundred years ago.

So men, who hold to this sort of Divine aid, are already beginning to reason. "Are we," it is now said—not by sceptics only, but by Evangelical teachers—"to bring down the word Inspiration to a use merely narrow and technical? asserting it only of Prophecy, and other Scripture writings, and carefully excluding from it all participation by ourselves, in whatever sense it might be taken?" Are we to "become a class unprivileged, differing from the anointed men of Scripture and Scripture times,—shut down to a kind of second-hand life, feeding on their words?" Is it to be believed that "they were inspired, while we in no sense can be? If so, there is no relief for us but in a recoil against Inspiration itself, even that of the Holy Scriptures; for who will credit that men were inspired long ages ago, when now any such thing is incredible?"*

The recoil thus spoken of as inevitable, finds its expression in those later forms of criticism which are now issuing from our great seats of learning, according to which the inspiration of the First Century is to bow before that of the Nineteenth; consciousness is to be made the test of truth; the miraculous is to be expurgated; and if, as a necessary consequence, the Bible loses its authority, the result may be regretted, but it must be considered as inseparable from progress.

The root of these terrible errors, whether men will hear it or not, is the notion, that the Holy Spirit enlightens the mind by other means than by the purification of the nature. This is evident from the ground taken by one of the leading writers in the "Essays and Reviews,"† who boldly asserts, not only that "Inspiration is a permanent power in the Church," but that the Bible always supposes in its readers "an illumination kindred to its own." In explaining what he means, he quotes, as an authority, St. Basil, who speaks of the Holy Spirit "as an intellectual light, affording illumination to every rational faculty in the investigation of truth;" "the light which clears mental perplexities, and the secret energy through which every organ discharges its functions aright." In the faith of this doctrine of the indwelling Spirit in the Church, it is asserted the creeds were developed, doctrine was drawn from doctrine, liturgies were collected, and Gentile customs were adopted.

But what follows? Why, of course, this: that as "the Comforter at present acts within the bounds of our capacities, leaving us liable to error, and the shortcomings of our generation," so "it is in harmony with the Divine dealings to suppose that while Apostles and Prophets enjoyed a larger measure of illumination, they, too, were left liable to shortcomings in knowledge, or humanity in reasoning." The argument culminates in the question, "What, then, is the authority of mere SCRIPTURALNESS apart from what good men approve, and from what fair historians think credible?" The answer implied is,—Nothing at all.

Such are the consequences involved in a doctrine which is to this day cherished with the utmost tenderness by, we believe, all Evangelical Churches. The difference on this point, between the Society of Friends and other Christians, is simply one of degree. The doctrine itself is held in common.

We lay it down, then, as a fixed principle, that he who would understand the Bible must believe first, that God, in giving it, has not withheld any thing necessary for its comprehension, so far, at least, as present duty is concerned. Secondly, that to seek to control the inspiration of Prophets and Apostles, by any fancied inspiration of our own, is a miserable delusion; and thirdly, that as a consequence, whether we approve or not, we must either feed on the words of men who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost eighteen hundred years ago, or wither in our pride; and this, not because "the Apostles and Scripture writers are set between us and God to fence us away," but because the action of the Spirit of God on man, when not exercised miraculously, as at the planting of the Christian Church, and as in the case of the Apostles and inspired writers of Scripture, is on the moral nature only, and never directly on the intellect; that the Holy Ghost enlightens, not by a process of addition, but by one of subtraction; not by giving to the intellect any light or power of which it would otherwise be deprived, but by removing moral obstacles to the free and healthy action of the natural faculties.

The contrary view, however spiritual or consoling it may seem, destroys all tangible distinctions between inspired and uninspired communications; favors mysticism; lowers the authority of the written Word; and justifies, so far as any thing can do, the most fanatical interpretations of Scripture. For it is evident that if a man's understanding of Holy Writ depends on any thing else than the right use of the faculties God has given him (which of course implies their non-perversion by dislike and prejudice), the Bible cannot be regarded as occupying the same position as any other book, but must be interpreted by a light which, try to explain it as we may, can never be more or less than a personal inspiration, in which case, as related to any written document, such personal teachings must be supreme.

It is both curious and instructive to observe how error changes its form, without changing its nature. It would really seem as if Protestants, like Romanists, believed that A DIVINE REVELATION, without AN INFALLIBLE INTERPRETER, was no revelation at all. Dr. Whately has well shown that this "craving for infallibility, than which there is no more powerful principle in human nature,"—and of which the views we have combated in relation to the Holy Spirit are but one manifestation,—not only "predisposes men towards the pretensions, either of a supposed unerring Church, or of those who claim or who promise immediate inspiration," but becomes by consequence, as we have seen, the parent of no small amount of infidelity. It is an error "that falls in at once with men's wishes, and with their conjectures; it presents itself to them in the guise of a virtuous humility: and they readily and firmly believe it, not only without evidence, but against all evidence."

Vain, however, is it to hope that by any such means we can evade our responsibility. What we really want is, that blessed indwelling of the Holy Spirit,—the only influence we are authorized to seek and to pray for,—which is not intellectual, but moral; which is inseparable from candor, love of truth, and obedience generally; which manifests itself in growing sympathy with the Divine character; and which therefore involves clearer perceptions of, and a deeper insight into the Divine mind and will as exhibited in the Bible, than can be obtained in any other way. For, saith the Lord himself, "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light."

* Dr. Horace Bushnell, (Sermons on the New Life, p. 46, American Edition.) It is right to say that Dr. Bushnell adds:—"Not that we are to assert or claim the same inspiration with the writers of Scripture. God has a particular kind of inspiration for every man, just according to what he is, and the uses He will make of them."

† Dr. Rowland Williams, in "An Earnestly respectful Letter to the Lord Bishop of St. Davids," 1860.

THE DOUAY BIBLE MISQUOTED.

Eld. Z. Campbell, in his article this week on "The Jubilee," professes to quote from the "Douay Bible" as follows: "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every man presseth against it." This is manfestly a reference to Luke xvi. 16, which in the common version reads: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." I can imagine no reason why, in this instance, Eld. C. should pass by King James and resort to the Douay, unless it is because the latter has "presseth against it" where the former has "presseth into it." Assuming this to be his motive, I have two observations to offer.

1. Several considerations forbid that the preposition eis should in this passage be rendered "against." Those considerations need not here be named; but I venture the opinion that no translator of the Greek would here think of rendering eis by the English word against.

2. Eld. Campbell has sadly misquoted the "Douay" rendering of Luke xvi. 16. In a fine copy of that version, loaned me by a Catholic neighbor, the passage in question appears as follows: "The law and the prophets were until John: from that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every one useth violence towards it." If Eld. C. has a "Douay" rendering differing from the foregoing, I should like information respecting it. If he has none, whence did he derive the rendering given in his article? The Douay note on "suffereth violence," in Matt. xi. 12, is as follows: "It is not to be obtained but by main force. By using violence upon ourselves, by mortification and penance, and resisting our perverse inclinations."

SALEM, Mass., April 1, 1870.

FROM GEO. W. BROWN.

BR. STORRS: Since leaving home Feb. 15th, I have visited Northfield, Mass., and preached one Sunday and several evenings with them, and the people were very attentive to hear, and quite a number have embraced the truth of Life only in Christ and the immediate coming of the Lord; so we can reckon them as belonging to the "Life and Advent Union."

From there, I went to Brattleboro, Vt., and preached at West Brattleboro, Friday and Saturday evenings and over Sunday. The people are interested to hear on these great truths, and we scattered quite a number of Campaign Documents, so as to keep the truth before the mind. I have just received a letter from Br. Miller, inviting me to come and hold meetings one week in the village; he thinks good may be done in the name of the Lord.

Brethren pray that God may bless the effort and the people may be saved from the false idea that they may be frightened into the kingdom by the fear of torment in a future life. They say, "If those who neglect so great salvation are only to die in their sins, I don't care whether I am saved or not." But they are deceived in that matter. Let the inhabitants of earth be convinced that there is no salvation for them, and they would tell quite another story; they would say as the prophet has it, "The harvest is passed the summer is ended, and we are not saved." They will then own the truth that they wanted to be saved; and God grant some more may own the truth before it is too late and accept the great salvation while it is offered free.

Br. Barker and myself have had a series of meetings in Woodbury, Conn.; the people were very attentive to hear, and we trust some seed was sown on good ground, and as it was the first they had ever heard on this subject, they were astonished at the doctrine; but we exhorted them to search the Scriptures to see if these things are so; and if they take that course many will believe the truth, as it commends itself to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

Keep up good courage, brethren; truth is gaining slow and sure, and the honest will see it when it comes fairly in contact with their minds.

But the cry is still raised, "We do not want doctrine we want to get up a revival, and if you preach doctrine you will kill it; we have too much doctrine preached." But by close examination we find it is not the quantity, but the quality they object to; they do not like sound doctrine; see 2 Tim. iv. 3. But God help us to keep about our work and preach the word. Amen.

WOLCOTTVILLE, Conn., March 21, 1870.

FROM JOSIAH M. FIKE.

DEAR "HERALD OF LIFE:" I have just received my HERALD and tracts, and was rejoiced once more to see something from your office. I am teaching a short term of school here in this small village, and have also lectured here five times. Twice on the subject of "Inherent Immortality;" once on "The Kingdom of God," once on the "Signs of the Times," and once on "God's plan of Reconstruction." Had very attentive audiences most of the time. I have also held a discussion here with a Methodist preacher, upon the subject, "That man has not inherent immortality, and is therefore not conscious between death and the resurrection." I affirmed, and Mr. Smith denied. We debated two evenings, on the 8th and 9th inst., speaking an hour a piece each evening to a very crowded house, resulting in the breaking up of their protracted meeting which they had begun; and also, probably of opening the eyes of some to the truth of "No Future Life only in Christ."

I am confident our "Redemption draweth nigh," from the "Signs of the Times," which are upon us. When scoffers boldly say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" etc., and men are crying, "Peace and safety," others, "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof," and some who "depart from the faith," etc., "Men's hearts failing them for fear." Let us look up and "watch and pray," for we "are not the children of darkness, that that day should overtake us as a thief in the night; but we are the children of the day," because we give heed unto "the words which are spirit and life." Yours in the Hope of the gospel.

GENEVA, Iowa, March 22, 1870.

FROM T. W. AND P. P. VICK.

TO OUR ELDER BR. GEORGE STORRS—Greeting: Feeling ourselves incompetent to say any thing edifying to any one, yet willing to cast our mite into the treasury of the Lord, although it is only the prattle of infants (as Sister Weaver said), yet we are thankful that our Master loved such, and took them in his arms and blessed them, and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." When we first commenced reading the HERALD OF LIFE, last April, it seemed almost wrong; they taught the Scriptures in such a different light from that in which we had always viewed them, having been brought up and always believed in the Methodist doctrines. But as the paper was subscribed for, and sent to us by dear ones, who are firm believers in the Life views, we felt ourselves in duty bound to read and investigate for ourselves; and to-day we are thankful that we did so; for we find great peace and joy in believing that "God is Love," and that all things work together for good to them who love and put their trust in Him. We now greet the HERALD with joy, as a harbinger of good tidings from those more deeply versed in ancient literature, and clear minded to search out the hidden mysteries contained in the volume of inspiration than ourselves; and we bid you "God speed." Go on: search deep for pure and living fountains that never will run dry.

We had thought, some time ago, that the theme must be nearly exhausted; that there was not much more which could be said on the subject; but every paper seems to be just as full of interest as the preceding, and we are led to exclaim, How abiding the source from whence they spring. We thank you, Br. Storrs, for the sermons you sent us, "God is Love," and The Judgment. Inclosed you will find 25 cents. Please send us your Six Sermons, cheap edition, also, Devil, Satan and Demons, and Defence of the Bible, and oblige.

KALAMO, Mich., March 26, 1870.

FROM ELD. E. B. TAFT.

BR. STORRS: I would not have my long silence to be an index of non-appreciation of our inestimable paper. No, my testimony is in keeping with the many whose interest in the great truths which it advocates enables them, in a measure, to comprehend the great work that it is accomplishing. May the Lord, who has thus far given guidance and wisdom, continue with you, and with all those who assist you in this work, is my earnest prayer. My health is not sufficiently restored for me to attempt much in this noble work. Yet, as opportunity offers, I do what I can. Your brother in the Gospel Hope.

STOCKTON, Cal., March 18, 1870.

Z. MCLESTER, Paris, Tenn., writes: I read the HERALD regularly every week with singular interest; and a good deal of it twice and thrice over; although I know it is not paid for, which I feel is wrong if I could help it. So I enclose you one dollar more at last, and will deny myself other necessaries to that amount. How I do wish some one or more, would accept Jno. R. Beasley's challenge, that we might have a full display of the best theological talents on these great and all absorbing propositions that are now agitating the religious world.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Your paper is "paid for" in full to the end of this volume.

MARIA E. BELLMAY, Plainville, Conn., writes: I thought I would write a few lines, and perhaps for the last time, as the Doctor has decided that my case is incurable. I am liable to be taken away at any moment; but thank God for the hope that I have beyond the grave. This is my birth-day. I am fifty-one. What have I done all these long years for God? Little, I fear. I do thank God that I was ever led to read the Life views. It has led me to see that "God is love." Love is his Name; love is his theme. The HERALD OF LIFE I do prize. It is next to my Bible. I do not quite understand all the Life views; neither do I understand all the Scriptures; but I am praying daily for wisdom and understanding. If you have any tracts to give away, I wish you would send me a few. I can do something for God in the way of scattering tracts. I have not the means to buy. I do want all to see and know what I think and feel to be God's eternal truth. You sent me some tracts a good while ago. I did not count them to see how many there were. The first I knew they were all gone. Your unworthy sister in Christ.

March 28.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL FOR APRIL is received; interesting as usual: a beautiful quarto Magazine of 16 pages; well calculated to please and instruct children. One dollar a year. Published by Alfred L. Sewell & Co., Chicago, Ill.

GOOD HEALTH FOR APRIL has come to hand. To those who desire such information, we should judge it to be a valuable Magazine. It is a Journal of Physical and Mental Culture, published by Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield st., Boston, Mass. Terms $2 per year: or 20 cents monthly.

SPORTS AND GAMES.—The numbers for January and April are received. It is a Magazine of Amusements for all seasons. LIFE IN UTAH: or, the Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism. Being an Expose of the Secret Rites and Ceremonies of the Latter-day Saints, with a full and authentic history of the Mormon Sect from its origin to the present time. By J. H. Beadle, editor of the Salt Lake Reporter, etc. This work is about to be issued by the "National Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa." Issued by subscription only. Residents of any State desiring a copy should address the Publishers. An agent is wanted in every county.

"THE NEW CYCLOPÆDIA OF ILLUSTRATIONS," By Rev. E. FOSTER, will be a double column royal octavo, complete in one volume, of about the size of a volume of Appleton's New American Cyclopædia, with an Introduction by Rev. STEPHEN H. TYNG, D. D.

An announcement in your paper that the work will be forthcoming will much oblige,

Yours, truly,
W. C. PALMER, JR. & Co.

IF you do not wish to speak ill of any, do not delight to hear ill of them. Give no countenance to busybodies, and those who love to talk of other men's faults; or if you cannot decently reprove them on account of their quality, then direct the discourse some other way; or if you cannot do that, by seeming not to mind it, you may sufficiently signify that you do not like it.

A GREAT many professed Christians have no other idea of religion than that it is the means of getting to heaven when they die. As to doing any thing for God while they live, it does not enter into their plans. I tell you, my brethren, I do not believe there is one in five hundred of such professors that will reach heaven; for there is a magnanimity in true religion that is above all such contemptible meanness.—LYMAN BEECHER.

THE NEED OF JESUS.

I need thee, precious Jesus, for I am full of sin;
My soul is dark and guilty, my heart is dead within;
I need the cleansing fountain, where I can always flee—
The blood of Christ most precious, the sinner's perfect plea.

I need thee, precious Jesus, for I am very poor;
A stranger and a pilgrim, I have no earthly store;
I need the love of Jesus to cheer me on my way,
To guide my doubting footsteps, to be my strength and stay.

I need thee, precious Jesus, I need a friend like thee,
A friend to soothe and sympathize, a friend to care for me;
I need the heart of Jesus, to feel each anxious care,
To tell my every want, and all my sorrows share.

I need thee, precious Jesus, for I am very blind;
A weak and foolish wanderer, with a dark and evil mind:
I need the light of Jesus to tread the thorny road,
To guide me safe to glory, where I shall see my God.

I need thee, precious Jesus, and hope to see thee soon,
Coming in thy glory, to take thy people home;
There with thy blood-bought children, my joy shall ever be.
To sing thy praises, Jesus, to gaze, my Lord, on thee.

THE PAPACY.

THE following article came into our hands some time since, taken from the "New York Sun;" but a press of other matter has prevented our giving it to our readers earlier. It contains matter which will interest all who are watching the Roman power and its efforts at this time. We rejoice that there are men in that church who will reveal its corruptions.

THE CATHOLIC FAITH AND ŒCUMENICAL COUNCILS.

In the Œcumenical Council now sitting in Rome, the question of Papal infallibility has not thus far been taken up. Yet it had been supposed that it would be one of the most pressing points to be settled; and it is said, we know not how truly, that the unexpected hesitation in approaching it is in a measure due to a recent German work on The Pope and the Council, written by three or four Catholic theologians of Munich, under the assumed name of Janus. An authorized translation is published by Roberts Brothers.

The volume contains a comprehensive account of the Catholic Church, and displays an exhaustive knowledge of ecclesiastical history, which it presents arrayed in opposition to the Ultramontane theory. The great division in the bosom of the Church which is said to have been silently widening for so many years is placed clearly before us, and we can trace it from its earliest beginning up to its present unquestionable importance.

In the first stages of the Church, when the several Christian provinces were placed under the spiritual guidance of their respective bishops, the only superiority of the Roman Bishop lay, according to the work now before us, in the fact that he was ranked as the first of the Patriarchs. In the controversies which occurred in those days, the Popes were often unable to establish their own views, and the other churches maintained their peculiar usages, without giving rise to any permanent division. Throughout the fourth century dogmatic questions were determined only by Councils of all the Bishops.

In the time of the Roman Empire the Popes took no part in convoking these great Councils, which were called together by the Emperors. Although the Popes held the first rank in the church, they were not always allowed to preside at such meetings. But the ambition of the Roman Bishops led them constantly to increase the power of their own See, and in the course of time the Roman Church became preeminent far beyond its original position.

But although the importance of the Roman prelates gradually increased, no serious attempt was made to introduce the theory of Papal Infallibility until the time of the famous Isidorian decretals, about the year 845. Up to that period the Church was indeed held to be infallible, but the infallibility was believed to reside in the Council, which gathered together all ecclesiastical wisdom. That was considered to be divinely inspired, and its decisions on all questions of faith, were respected as final.

The important fact about these decretals, however, was that they were fraudulent, and that forgery abounded in them. This forgery was committed in the middle of the ninth century. It subverted the whole ecclesiastical order, and exerted such a powerful influence that the discovery of the fraud five or six centuries afterward, could not overthrow the changes which had been based upon it. Other forgeries had already given rise to the maxim that the Pope was supreme, and could be judged by no man. But the Isidorian decretals furnished a foundation for the doctrine of Papal Infallibility. They are declared by our authors to be the work of a monk who desired to enlarge and protect the power of bishops. For this object he forged spurious decrees of the earliest Popes, acts of synods, and writings of church dignitaries. In effecting his purpose the compiler was also obliged to introduce much matter tending toward the doctrine of Papal Infallibility, and the final result was, that the rules relating to the protection of bishops died out, while the principles respecting the supreme authority of the Roman See acquired immense importance, and became the groundwork of the vast new system which gradually arose.

Nicholas I. was Pope at the time these forged decretals first became widely recognized; and although he was ignorant of their false character, they were welcome to his audacious ambition. With their assistance his power was greatly strengthened. But in spite of the supreme position which the Roman Church had attained, for two hundred years after his death its internally demoralized condition prevented any great extension or enforcement of its rights. Nevertheless, the great corruption in the Church was used as one of the strongest argument for the further elevation of the Papal power, since such a concentration of authority was supposed to be necessary for its purification. The doctrine of Papal Infallibility—that is, that the perfect inspiration, and consequently the right to supreme rule, resided in the Pope—was accordingly put into formal shape in the year 1450 and later in 1516.

The new system grew apace. Not only was it held that the Pope had sovereign authority in spiritual affairs, but that he was "God's locum tenens on earth, set to watch over the social, political, and religious condition of mankind like a Divine Providence, as chief overseer and lord, who must put down all opposition." The Popes asserted their right to political dominion, and declared boldly that they were properly lords and masters of the whole world, and that emperors and kings were but delegates of the Papal authority. The Roman Church gradually assumed all the former jurisdiction of the whole Church, and "became the Roman Court." It was the arena in which was carried on transactions about privileges, dispensations, exemptions, and the like; and the Curia soon grew to be a vast power, exercising its rule to the limits of Christendom, and unrestrainedly domineering over the world which lay submissive before it. Such Councils as were now held were entirely subservient to the Pope, and so great became the falsehood, simony, and universal corruption in the whole Church that Marcellus II. exclaimed in anguish that he did not see how a Pope could be saved. In the fourteenth century came the schism of the Antipopes, when two Popes, an Italian and a French, divided the religious world and anathematized each other. Partly on this account, but chiefly from the universal horror at the perverted condition of the Church, which gave rise to a violent reaction against its authority, for the first time in three hundred years, a free and independent Council took place in 1409. But it did little more than depose two Popes and elect a third. The famous Council of Constance, several years later, won the first real victory over the Papacy. That synod affirmed that a fully convoked Œcumenical Council derived its authority immediately from Christ, "and that every one, the Pope included, is subject to it in matters of faith, in the healing of schism, and the reformation of the Church." But although this council was upheld by universal feeling, although the Pope at first acknowledged its authority, yet the ecclesiastical system was too elaborate and strong to be lightly overthrown. The Council undertook the work of reform, but the Pope soon turned against it, and his mighty influence proved sufficient to overbear its most vigorous attempts. There was a period when the Pope and the Council were at open war, but the Pope easily conquered, and the Council gradually disappeared in impotence and oblivion. From that time forth the evils of the Church were considered to be hopelessly incurable, and increased from year to year. The tendency toward the doctrine of Papal Infallibility became constantly more pronounced, and it was adopted by the order of Jesuits with vehemence. It is chiefly by this order that it has been sustained and inculcated.

While the earthly power of the Pope has almost vanished, the desire to attribute to him supreme spiritual, if not material authority has only increased in the Ultramontane party. Among these the Jesuits are the most active spirits, and the question is still undecided whether these shall prevail, or that liberal Catholic party who profess their desire that the Roman Church should rather return to her original belief, and accept the decisions of Councils as the highest authority. The object of the Councils is only to expound and apply the doctrines of the early Church. The Pope desires to promulgate new laws and points of faith.

The work whose argument we have now presented, is perhaps the most important in all the throng of literature which the present Council has evoked. Its learning and its ability are alike remarkable; its positions are taken with great decision, and are always fortified by an array of facts that seem impregnable. Though its reasoning is without mercy, its temper is always excellent, and the sincere devotion of its authors to the Catholic Church cannot be denied. We do not believe that their efforts or the efforts of those who sympathize with them can avail to prevent the Council from proclaiming Papal Infallibility as an essential dogma of the Catholic creed; but the outside world will not fail to look with curious interest for the symptoms of a new protest and a new schism among those who have now made so gallant and so impressive a contest against an idea which they have hitherto condemned as false, and denounced as incompatible with a genuine faith.

IF you do not wish to speak ill of any, do not delight to hear ill of them. Give no countenance to busybodies, and those who love to talk of other men's faults; or if you cannot decently reprove them on account of their quality, then direct the discourse some other way; or, if you cannot do that, by seeming not to mind it, you may sufficiently signify that you do not like it.

AGE TO COME THEORY.

OBJECTIONS TO, BY A. BOYNTON.

MUCH has been written on, and many believe in, the above theory, and an occasional writer in "our paper," ventures to express an opposite belief. Free thought and expression is tolerated, yea encouraged; this is one important reason why we prize the HERALD OF LIFE. May it ever maintain its present liberal character. We understand the Scripture to represent the first Adam as inferior and to give place or be supplanted by the second Adam. The two Adams representing the two races which spring from them; one called the seed of the serpent, the other the seed of the woman. True, Christ is designated as this seed; but does not Paul say, "The God of peace shall bruise satan under your feet shortly?"—Rom. xvi. 20; showing an intimate relation of Christ and his saints with the promise in the garden, Gen. iii. 15; "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The work of the first Adam was to multiply, replenish and subdue the earth. The second Adam's work is to gather out of all nations a seed to serve him. The great and last agency for which is the gospel of the kingdom which shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. xxiv. 14. End of what? Gentile time, age, dispensation; is this all? The question was of Christ's coming, and the end of the world. The answer sums up, "Heaven and earth shall pass away." Peter says "The world that then was being overflowed with water perished. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—2 Pet. iii. 7; read the whole account and mark its fulness of expression. All that the flood could destroy was destroyed. That the flood was universal, may be reasonably inferred from a seed of every kind being preserved in the ark. The salvation of Noah and his household by the ark was, as we understand, a type of our salvation by Christ; see 1 Pet. iii. 21. Does not the commission given by Christ to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature,"—Matt. xxiv. 19, and Mark xvi. 15, 16, and its fulfilment as predicted by Christ cited above, "This gospel shall be preached," etc.,—Matt. xxiv. 14, show a finishing up of the work of mercy and grace?

Again. Christ's exposition of the parable of the wheat and tares (Matt. xiii. 37–43) precludes we think, any "remnant left," for future probation or trial. The Law was given to one nation only; the Jews: its territory was also limited, but the gospel breaks down every barrier, includes without distinction every nation under heaven, visits all climes and is limited only by the earth. Now is the (judicial) judgment of the world.

Christ's second coming as prophesied by Enoch, is "to execute judgment upon all."—Jude 15. "And the earth was reaped."—Rev. xiv. 16. Rewards given. "Eternal Life" and the reward of the inheritance, "at his appearing and kingdom," not a thousand years afterwards. What chance for another crop; another harvest? Well, says an objector, what about those Old Testament prophecies which seem to have a bearing on this subject? Just here we think, lies the error; taking the moon to give light to the sun. Let the glorious gospel in all its spiritual (we do not say mystical) nature and sense be taken as taught by Christ and his apostles and all would be plain. See Gal. iv. 26; iii. 28, 29; Eph. i. to ivth chapter inclusive.

A FIRST-RATE GHOST STORY.

WE copy the following from "Zion's Herald." We think we have seen it before, but perhaps our readers have not. It is a pretty good illustration of "ghost-seeing," of which many immortal soul believers make so much use in support of their theory. If they had half the courage of the author of this story, they would generally find themselves in about the same business he was.

A GHOST STORY.—One night between Bill's O'Jacks and Upper Mill, I saw a ghost, or something like a ghost. I had been across the hills to Marsden to give a temperance lecture and was returning home about twelve o'clock at night. There were two of us, and we were both on horseback. My friend had a small horse, and I had quite a large one. The night was rather dark, but not so dark as to prevent us seeing our way, or dimly discerning objects near at hand. We had mounted the hills and crossed the summit, and were slowly making our way past a place where a murder had been committed. "What's that?" said my companion as we came near to a point where a rugged lane opened into the main road,—"What's that?" I instantly saw a huge misshapen creature, resembling a polar or a grizzly bear rolling noiselessly along before me. "What is it?" said my friend; and "What is it?" said I; and I instantly felt a kind of headlong daring, and I spurred my horse and started in pursuit. My friend came on behind. The faster I went, the faster went the unshapely thing before me, rolling along as silently as death. "What is it?" said my friend; "What can it be?" said I; and I spurred my horse again. Faster and faster I flew, and faster rolled the spectre or the mystery. I began to gain upon the thing at length. "Come on," said I to my friend, "Push on," said he. And on I pushed as fast as my horse could carry me. I now began to gain upon the dreadful thing, and at length I passed it, and slackened my speed. We had got it between us at last, and I turned back to face it. It was an ass—an unshod ass. Poor thing! We had frightened it shamefully, and almost frightened ourselves. Three asses the reader may say. Well, we will not quarrel about the number; but there was one any way, and a quick-footed ass it was.—Joseph Barker.

THE SANCTUARY TO BE CLEANSED.

Psa. cxiv. 2.—"Judah was His Sanctuary." Although they [the Jews] are to be gathered to their own land; yet they are not the Sanctuary, because they are the host spoken of in the context.

Christ is called a Sanctuary. Isa. viii. 13, 14. "Sanctify the Lord of Hosts Himself; and let him be your fear, and let Him be your dread, and he shall be for a Sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both of the houses of Israel; for a gin and a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem." Now as Christ was spotless, therefore he needs no cleansing, consequently he cannot be the Sanctuary spoken of in the text.

Heaven is called the Sanctuary. Psa. cii. 19. "For he hath looked down from the height of his Sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth." And in Matt. vi. 10, we learn that God's will is done in heaven; therefore we conclude that it does not need cleansing, from the fact that it has never been trodden down!—All is purity there.

Mount Zion, or the land of Palestine, is called the Sanctuary; and this is the Sanctuary spoken of in the text. Ex. xv. 17.—"Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance; in the place O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Psa. lxxviii. 54. "And he brought them to the border of his Sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased." Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Isa. lxiii. 18.—"The people of thy holiness have possessed it, [Palestine] but a little while; our adversaries have trodden down thy Sanctuary."

Dan. ix. 16, 17. "O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain . . . O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary that is desolate."

Here we have immutable testimony that Palestine is the Sanctuary that is to "be cleansed" at the ending of the 2,300 days—years, of Dan. viii. 14.—Selected by W. H. HANFORD.

THE ANTIQUITY of man is now in earnest debate, and many are bold to affirm that it is proven as reaching to very remote times. If it were not for a very strong desire to overthrow what are supposed to be chronological commitments of Scripture, and to make a case against the faith of many, the strength of the evidences to sustain this new theory would have a better chance of being brought to the proper tests. The evidences when sifted of fraud, to which there is great temptation, and of which it is conceded there has been not a little, are frail indeed for the foundation of such positive opinions as are advanced. One fact of paramount importance in the consideration of this problem is perpetually ignored and that is the interference of mind in the disposal of human remains. A trilobite could hardly appear otherwise than buried in the ancient sea-bed, with whith its life was identified. But a man, penetrating caves, digging catacombs, or shafts, or mines, or wells, and roaming everywhere at will, may bury himself or his tools, or be buried by others, in any gravel of any age still remote from his own. The Duke of Argyle may drop his penknife in some cave he searches, and leave it to rust with bones of reindeer, or hyenas, or bears of primeval times, till some future explorer as wise as he, find and identify it with primeval times along with flint implements, skulls, bones, gravel and all. The men of ancient times are quite as likely to have had reasons for penetrating beneath the surface of the earth, as our modern savants who are so anxious to build up a favorite theory. There is no objection to verifying the theory if possible, but much, to hasty inductions. Let it be conceded that there are some remains which cannot yet be explained on any other theory. They are less in number than the fingers on one hand; and others, regarding which equal positiveness of assertion was held but a short time since, have been shorn of all value by more careful investigation. One can afford to wait on the whole. The Christian Union.

"MY FATHER'S WILL."

MR. John Price, a pious old man, was walking one day on the road from the farm to the sanctuary, with the New Testament in his hand, when a friend met him and said; "Good morning Mr. Price." "Ah! good morning;" replied the aged pilgrim, "I am reading my Father's will as I walk along." "Well, what has he left you?" said his friend. "Why, he has bequeathed me a hundred fold in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting." This shrewd and beautiful reply produced a happy effect on the mind of his Christian friend, who was in sorrowful circumstances, and he went on his way rejoicing. CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

THE VALUE OF A GOOD NAME.

IF we could tell our boys and girls how many hundred times in life, and in how many unexpected ways, they will find it to their profit as well as pleasure to have a reputation for truthfulness and integrity that no suspicious circumstances can destroy, they would hardly believe us. And yet just such things often happen as are narrated in this story which we find going round the papers:

In the school of Dr. Woods, none were allowed to enter the conservatory without leave; but a boy's handkerchief with his name upon it, had been found there. Just at the close of school the doctor called the name of James Howard. The whole school became silent with suspense. "James Howard, what has he done—such a noble boy, such a good boy!"—all thought. Dr. Woods himself believed he must have been sent into the conservatory by the teacher of botany. So he asked,—

"James Howard, have you been into the conservatory to-day?"

"I have not sir," replied James, in a clear calm tone.

"I believe you James," said Dr. Woods, "although your handkerchief has been found there. You are not the boy to tell an untruth."

So James sat in his seat unmoved. Every boy in the school believed him, and almost envied him his good name.

Dr. Woods said no more on this subject except these few words: "Let every boy learn from this incident the worth of a good name, especially when appearances are against him."

How came James' handkerchief in the conservatory?—for, as I have said, it was contrary to the rules of the school for a boy to enter there unbidden. James had loaned it to a small boy named John Rand, to tie up some nuts, the day before, when they had a little ramble together. The boy forgot to return it. He also forget the rule of the school against entering the conservatory, but seeing the door open, rushed in to look at some rare flowers. The handkerchief being partly out of his pocket, dropped upon the ground.

See here the evils of heedless forgetfulness. The boy had exposed a schoolmate to censure, and, had it not been for his previous good name, his teacher would have surely thought him to be the offender. At least, so thought John Rand.

How ashamed he felt, when Dr. Woods said those words about a good name! The words kept ringing in his ears. He had broken a rule of the school, and was afraid to own it. He thought the doctor would despise him if he knew, and so would the boys. All that day, all that night, he had no peace. At length he went to James. He was not afraid to tell him all about it.

"I did forget it, James; truly, honestly, I did," said the child; "but I'm afraid the doctor wont believe me as he does you."

"Yes he will," replied James. "You have been so short a time in school, there's some excuse for you. Go at once, and own up; for the longer you put it off, the harder it will be. Always own a fault at once. Don't be afraid; the doctor will forgive you."

Thus encouraged, the boy went to Dr. Woods, confessed his fault, and was forgiven; but he learned a lesson on forgetfulness which he always remembered.—Selected.

"QUICK RETURNS."

JAMES R. WHITE, Esq., Superintendent of Broad and Arch-street Methodist Episcopal Sabbath-school, is reponsible for the following:

"My son," said a banker to his young hopeful, "I want to give you a lesson in business. Here is a half dollar. Now, if you can find any boy whom you can trust, who will take this money and pay you interest for it, you may lend it to him; and if you invest this wisely I'll increase your capital."

When night came the banker said:

"My son, how did you invest your money to-day?"

"Well father," replied the little fellow, "I saw a boy on the street without any shoes, and he had no dinner, so I gave him my fifty cents to buy something to eat with."

"You'll never make a business man in the world," said the banker; "business is business. But I will try you once more. Now here is a dollar to invest; see how well you can do it."

A loud peal of laughter from the boy followed this speech, which was thus explained; "My Sunday-school teacher said giving to the poor was lending to the Lord, and she said he would return to us double; but I did not think he would do it quite so quick."

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

A FATHER (if he can be called such), once said to his brutal wife in the presence of his little child—"Half of this large blanket is enough to keep the old man warm, as he can lie on the kitchen hearth." The little one begged for the other half. Why darling, said the father what will you do with it? I'll keep it for you, the child replied, so that when you are as old as grandfather, I'll give it to you to sleep in.

A SAD REFLECTION.

AN old man was knocked down by his son and dragged to the front door, when with a voice almost inhuman, he screamed out—STOP, STOP MY SON! When I was about your age, and my father was as old as I am now, I levelled him to the floor of that room, and seized him by the hair of his head, and dragged him to this spot; but here I relented and let him go.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

"THE JUDGMENT TO COME."

AN EXAMINATION OF ELD. WM. SHELDON'S JUDGMENT THEORY.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

WITHIN the past eighteen months, Eld. Wm. Sheldon—the author of a work entitled "Adventism," and also the writer of a number of tracts—has given considerable publicity to his peculiar judgment theory, which appears to be quite favorably received, if not favorably adopted, by leading opponents of "Life only in Christ." In consideration of this we have been led to believe that a few paragraphs upon the subject would not fail to interest all seekers after truth as well as show, at least to some extent, the unscriptural nature of the arguments advanced to sustain the theory of the re-living of the wicked dead.

The theory in question is rooted and grounded upon the assumption that a mortal resurrection awaits the whole race of Adam. But our brother, in putting forth this assumption, should have borne in mind that this is not one of those self-evident truths which need no proof, and he should, therefore, have given us some Scripture to sustain it, or have frankly acknowledged that there was none. If a mortal resurrection is the doctrine of Scripture, by all means let us have the proof of it.

Br. Sheldon's adoption of the mortal resurrection theory appears to be one of necessity to enable him to frame any thing like a plausible argument in favor of the revival of the wicked dead. But the question is not what may be a plausible opinion, but what do the Scriptures teach? This alone must be our standard of authority and only source of appeal in a matter of so much importance.

If (as Br. Sheldon asserts) "God's word presents the resurrection of the dead," at the last day, "in the simple sense of coming to life again," we believe it is not unreasonable to demand the chapter and verse where such proof may be found in the Holy Scriptures. But we do not hesitate to declare that such a doctrine is not embraced in the plan of redemption as made known by divine revelation. A revival from death to mortality is neither promised nor threatened, nor is it formally stated in the word of God. If the mortal resurrection theory were true, of what force would be the oft-repeated promise of Christ to raise up the saints "at the last day?"—for by this promise He makes a deliverance from the bonds of death conditional and peculiar to the righteous. He says: "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 40.

Again: Paul argues that a resurrection of any of the dead depends entirely upon the resurrection of Christ; and we believe but few will deny that if Christ had not been raised from the dead, the whole human family would have perished. Now, let us inquire: How does Christ's death affect the race of man so as to restore to them again the same (blood) life which they derived from a mortal parent, and which, through his disobedience, is forfeited to the law? For says Paul: "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men."—Rom. v. 12. But again: was Christ raised from the dead to mortal life? The Spirit of God was the agent which quickened Christ from the dead—did that Spirit quicken Christ into mortal life? If so, for what purpose? If he was raised from the dead in immortality—by the power of an endless life—then, indeed, must the mortal resurrection theory collapse; for Christ was the "first fruits" of the harvest, and the harvest, which should come afterward, must correspond with the sample. The "first fruits" and the harvest must be of one character; and therefore, the immortal resurrection of Christ involves the immortal resurrection of all who constitute the harvest—or, in other words, all who shall be raised from the dead "at the last day." This conclusion is sustained by many positive declarations of Scripture, only a few of which we can now introduce. Paul in 1 Cor. xv. declares that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," (Gr., aphthartos, immortal); and thus according to Paul's testimony a mortal awakening of any of the dead is cut off, for he speaks of "Christ the first fruit" (Emphatic Diaglott translation) and "they that are Christ's at his coming," as being the predestinated subjects of the resurrection. The same Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead shall also "quicken" the mortal bodies of the saints into endless life, and thus bring them from the land of darkness and silence into the glorious light of immortality.—Rom. viii. 11.

Br. Sheldon evidently sees the force of Paul's testimony regarding the resurrection, and to avoid the dilemma into which his mortal resurrection theory necessarily leads, he gives us a sad conglomeration of ideas and assumptions, which only the more fully show the fallacy of his position, and its utter irreconcilability with the Scriptures of truth.

1. He tells us that "God's word presents the resurrection as a pre-requisite to judgment, when the term is used in the simple sense of coming to life again;" thus assuming that the meaning of resurrection when applied to the whole race is simply a restoration to a mortal state, or to the Adamic condition the second time—for he says: "The delivering up of the dead must precede their judgment."

2. But apparently aware of the conflict of Paul's testimony with his position, in the same paragraph he informs us that when the term is applied to the resurrection of the righteous it must be understood in an additional sense, viz: as including an "appendage," or as two events; first, the "coming to life again"—and second, (after the judgment has taken place,) the "change" to immortality; for he tells us that "immortality is an addition to this reorganization and waking up of the dead saints."

3. Though he would have us understand that the "coming to life again" of the dead is the "resurrection proper," and that the "appendage," or change, to the righteous is "included in the term," and is "inseparably interwoven with the resurrection of the just," yet in the next breath tells us that it is "the RESULT of judgment."

4. He says, "in order to judgment, there must firstly be a knowledge of facts involving guilt or innocence." . . . "But the divine Judge already knows all he can know about the matter, and does not need to go through with an investigation to secure this information." No language could more plainly admit the position of believers of "Life only in Christ" regarding the judgment, and this admission is fatal to his whole judgment theory.

5. With his admission that the judgment to come "is not for the purpose of giving information to our Judge as to who is guilty and who is innocent," he necessarily narrows the nature of the judgment at the appearing of the Lord Jesus to two ingredients as follows: "(1.) The pronouncing of sentence, or making the decision known, by the Judge. (2.) The execution of the sentence, or carrying out the decision of the Judge." But we are informed that this will all be done "instantaneously" after the "reorganization and waking up" of the dead, so that the "change" will come "like electricity to every saint." The conclusion is that the judgment will be done so quickly, and the "appendage" will come so soon after the judgment has taken place, that Paul did not make a very great mistake when he said that the dead shall be raised "IN incorruption," "in glory," "a spiritual body," etc.

In the foregoing we have as briefly as possible shown the theory of our brother, upon which he argues the necessity of the resurrection of the wicked dead. Much of his theory has been sufficiently answered in the preceding part of this article, for his whole superstructure rests upon a sandy foundation, which we believe but few unprejudiced Bible students can fail to perceive.

FIRST.—Do the Scriptures sustain the assumption that "coming to life again" of all the race is "pre-requisite to judgment?" or, in other words, do the Scriptures affirm that the "reorganization and waking up of the dead" (to a mortal state) must precede the making "known" of the decision and its execution?

Our brother, like many others who have doubtful theories to maintain, flies to the book of Revelation—manifestly the greatest symbolic book of the Bible—and cites us Rev. xx. 12, 13, as proof of his assertions. This is acknowledged by learned men of all denominations, to be the most difficult chapter in the book to interpret. But we inquire, does it sustain his position?

It is very difficult to see how our brother, with any degree of consistency, can assume that "the dead," referred to in this chapter, comprises both classes, who simultaneously "come to life again" as a "pre-requisite to judgment," when a verse in the same chapter declares that "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. . . . Blessed and holy is he that hath a part in the first resurrection." If verses 12 and 13 are literal, as is assumed, how will Br. Sheldon prove that the 5th verse is not also literal? As he assumes that one passage is literal, to sustain his peculiar notions, unless he can prove that the other is not literal, what becomes of his judgment theory? Thus his own chosen chapter puts his argument to flight; for to present any thing like a harmonious interpretation of Rev. xx. Br. S. must apply verses 12 and 13, to one or the other of the two classes previously brought to view.

But is there any evidence within the Scriptures that the phrase "the dead," in verses 12 and 13, includes the wicked? "The dead" are represented as standing "before God," and are therefore in his presence. But the Scriptures inform us plainly that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord," (Heb. xii. 14); and we are therefore led to believe that none will be ushered in the presence of God but "the pure in heart," as our Saviour intimates in his memorable sermon on the Mount. (Matt. v. 8.) This affords us reason to believe that Rev. xx. 12, 13 refers to a class—the righteous—and not to the entire posterity of Adam. Another reason to sustain this conclusion lies in the passage itself. The phrase "before God," in our English version, competent Greek critics inform us, should read "before the throne," in accordance with the oldest manuscripts. The eminent Samuel Treggelles, LL.D., says that this reading is guarantied by manuscript authority of at least twelve hundred years old. The popular Emphatic Diaglott and American Bible Union translations give the same rendering. The Revelator locates the throne in heaven (Rev. iv. 2, 6); and therefore, if our brother's theory be true, and the wicked shall "stand before the throne" of God, then they will get to heaven, at Christ's coming, as well as the righteous. But Christ, speaking of the two classes of the human family, at his coming, says: "One shall be taken and the other left." Dare we doubt that Christ's arrangement is not right? However, John decides the character of those who shall stand "before the throne." He says they are "a great multitude which no man could number OUT of every nation and all tribes and peoples and tongues," who have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." —Rev. vii. 9, 14—Bible Union translation. This proves as clearly as language can, that those who stand before God do not comprise all mankind, and that our brother's theory is therefore a fallacy.

SECOND.—What authority has Br. Sheldon, as a Bible expositor, for making two applications of the term resurrection with reference to Christ's second coming? He makes it apply to the dead, before the judgment has taken place, in the sense of their "coming to life again," irrespective of character; he afterwards applies it to the righteous after the judgment as including an "appendage," or their "change" to immortality. Therefore, to the righteous he makes the resurrection embrace "two stages"—or two events—one to transpire as a "prerequisite to judgment," viz: their "coming to life again;" the "second stage" to take place after the judgment, viz: their change to immortality. How many "stages" are comprised in the assumed resurrection of the wicked we have not yet learned. It is very difficult for us to comprehend how a professed Bible student should put forth such a theory when the most common Bible reader can hardly fail to see that such an application of the term resurrection, as used with reference to re-living of the dead at the last day, is without a shadow of support, and is plainly opposed by Christ's own words. He says: "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and a resurrection from the dead, . . . are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 35, 36. Again, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life," i. e., shall not see life of any kind. (John iii. 36.) Quotations to this effect might be greatly multiplied, but for our present purpose these will suffice.

THIRD.—Will Br. Sheldon explain how the "appendage," or "change," to the righteous can be "INSEPARABLY interwoven" with their resurrection, and yet, as he says, be "the result of judgment?" Can he harmonize his contradictory positions? (1.) He says that the resurrection is "pre-requisite to judgment;" (2.) that the "appendage" to the righteous is "inseparably interwoven" with their resurrection, and therefore, his first position is not true; and (3.) that it is "the result of judgment," and if so, his second position is untrue. Surely one may well be in a mystery to know what his real position is.

The unsoundness of our brother's reasoning is too manifest to require much attention from our pen. It is not within the province of any man to harmonize such an array of assumption with the pages of inspiration.

FOURTH.—With our brother's admission that the investigative judgment is now in progress, and that "the divine Judge already knows all he can know" about the "guilt or innocence" of mankind, what grounds has he for his mortal resurrection theory? If the investigative judgment is now in session, (which is Bible truth), then every man's destiny, at the end of his pilgrimage, is decided in the infallible mind of Jehovah, and no reason appears for their revival into mortality simply for the manifestation and execution of this decision, and such an assumption is contradicted in the most positive language by the Scriptures. (1 Cor. xv.)

Does the Bible warrant us to suppose that God will put forth his mighty power to restore the race to mortal life with no good to flow therefrom to his creatures? Our brother's theory presents God in the vindictive character of a cruel executioner, who will cause to re-exist a large majority of the human family, that by one fierce blast of his wrath he may return them to the same condition from which they were awakened.

Our brother's admission that the investigation takes place prior to the resurrection is fatal to his position, and leaves him without a plausible reason for the re-living of the wicked dead.

FIFTH.—If the "judgment to come" is simply "making the decision known" and "the execution of the sentence," which will be accomplished "instantaneously" after the "reorganization and waking up" of the dead, as our brother asserts, what realization will the race have of a judgment? In the light of such an idea does not the "reorganization and waking up" of the wicked dead appear like a useless affair? What will a flash of consciousness be to them? They entered the tomb under the condemnation of God; and their doom is fixed (according to our brother's own theory) prior to the resurrection. Then why disturb them with only a moment's consciousness? Their punishment is not in being made alive, being tormented, or being slaughtered in fearful wrath. "THE WAGES OF SIN IS DEATH." Will not God's judgment decision be made known, and the justice and goodness of his character be as fully manifested to his creatures by the gracious deliverance of the saints from the chains of death, as by flashing one ray of consciousness upon the wicked dead, and allowing them to sink back into the silent dust of unconsciousness?

"God is love!" The impress of love is stamped upon all he does. To maintain any theory not in harmony with this sublime doctrine is to throw the whole system of revealed truth into confusion. And we cannot so dishonor God as to believe, contrary to the positive declarations of Scripture, that he has purposed such a fate for the wicked dead as would forever overthrow the supreme attribute of his character.

There are a number of other points involved in this discussion, which, at some future time, we may make the subject of another article. The space which we have already occupied admonishes us to close.

We regret that our brother has placed himself in such an antagonistic position to the plain teachings of Scripture; and in our review of him, we cherish nothing but the spirit of Christian love, as all Christians should manifest one toward the other.

CONCLUSIONS REGARDING THE JUDGMENT.

1. The investigative judgment is now in session, and we are now on trial for a future life. The record is now being made, which, at the close of our brief career, determines our eternal destiny. Every man is the witness against himself, and every hour the time in which he gives testimony upon which the divine Judge will base His decision, whether he shall have eternal life, (life from the dead) or "shall not see life." (John iii. 18, 36; v. 24; vi. 40; xx. 31.)

2. The judgment at the last day will be administered by Christ, as God "hath given him authority to execute judgment."—John v. 22, 27; Jude 14.

3. The executive judgment takes place at Christ's coming, and the decision is therefore rendered prior to the resurrection, but intimately connected therewith. The execution of the decision confers immortality upon the subjects of the resurrection, and as "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," the decision is executed at the resurrection, and not at some period of time afterward. (1 Cor. xv. 51–54; Col. iii. 3, 4; Phil. iii. 20, 21; 1 Thess. iv. 15 –17; 1 John iii. 2, 3.)

From the Rainbow.

HENGSTENBERG AND THE HEBREW MONARCHY.

THE German critic has issued a work on the Jews and their prospects, which we consider confused and unscriptural. To disparage the man or the author, would neither be righteousness nor policy. He is unquestionably a man of great powers and acquirements, and has come out victorious from many a tented field, where the Anakims of Rationalism and Atheism went down before him. But strange enough, the man who could vindicate so powerfully the miracles of the past, has no eye for the miracles of the future. His faith in one direction so realising, fails him entirely in another. And it fails just where it should have the firmness of a rock, and be commanding as some great mountain range, whose foundations are deep, and whose brows are clothed with light above the region of stormy darkness. The following fragment indicates the theory which Hengstenberg develops with some elaboration:

> The Christian church being then the legitimate and proper continuation of Israel, to it must belong most of the promises, which superficially examined, are supposed to furnish a pledge of the future salvation of the Jews. They have already found their fulfilment in the victorious career pursued by the church through all past centuries, in its irrepressible tendency to spread out to the very ends of the earth, in the spirit of reformation by which it is swayed, and in the light which arises to it ever afresh out of darkness: in a word, these promises are being fulfilled every day before our eyes. It is a sad denial of the grace vouchsafed by God to his church, to refer the glorious promises of Scripture almost exclusively to the future, not to be able to follow out the hidden traces of divine blessing, both in the past and in the present, to fail to discern in the church the true Israel, and in its place to dress up an Israel of the fancy out of the Jews, to speak slightingly of the church, and contrast it with that kingdom of God which is first to come when the Jews are converted.

All through his work the Professor pleads that the visible church is the true continuation of Israel, that Gentiles only get into it by affiliation, that there is but one house under two administrations, that the visible church is not merely the continuation of Israel, but likewise the kingdom of God. He grants, as a scholar and thinker, that the argument of Paul in Romans conclusively proves that blinded Israel will be converted to God, but denies any restoration of land or monarchy; they are to have the same blessings as converted Gentiles, nothing more, nothing less.

To those who deny or doubt the restoration and perpetuity of Israel, I have two arguments to submit before I subject the Professor to dissection.

I. We have one class of persons deeply impressed with the order and beauty, the magnificence and stability of the present cosmical arrangements. The regal sun duly crimsons the gates of morning, and shakes the white splendor from his tresses in the meridian. The queenly moon as duly bathes the earth in silvery radiance, a softer glow in which the heart often moves more freely, and rests more profoundly. Ten thousand stars burn out gloriously from that vault overhead, which is black as the raven's wing. In our own "rock-bound world," field and forest, mountain and river, sea-shore and atmosphere, day and night, winter and summer, all perform their ministries as vassals of the Most High, and we drink in our life continually from the ordinances of God. Very well. All the people who share such feelings, will understand the following passage from Jeremiah xxxiii.: "Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord, if my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them."—24–26. The reader will perceive that the promises of God are bound up not merely with the throne of David, but likewise with the literal seed of Abraham, in restoring them from captivity and confirming them as a nation in the land. But this merely by the way. The emphasis lies here. If the ancient people are finally cast away, if the throne of David is not ultimately and abidingly established over the house of Jacob in the city of Jerusalem, then, the dreadful inference follows by strict consequence, the Being whom we have worshipped as God, believing that he was our life, has no covenant with day or night, and is not the Author of the ordinances of nature, or the Creator of heaven and earth. When we arrive at this, we may follow Darwinian development, or Holbach Atheism, or Schelling Pantheism, no matter which, seeing that our own Jehovah is gone; for either the creation is an unreal vanishing show, or if it be real, some other god built the solid masonry of the great house, lighted the lamps in the dome, and hung the grand paintings on the walls.

But if we insist, as we are likely to do, that the God of Abraham is our God, and that there is no other than he, and that the ordinances which he founded are abiding, why then, Israel returns to Palestine, and David's throne is seen in the holy city.

II. There are Christian people who believe that the sidereal worlds will one day disappear; that the solar system will be shaken, and pass away, and of course, our planet with the system to which it belongs. They teach that we shall have new heavens and new earth in the absolute sense. I do not belong to these people, and I shrink from their theory as something monstrous and hideous. But all Christian men believe in great cosmical changes. All can meet in the fact of transfiguration, renovation, renewal of youth and beauty, nature glorified as well as man, all creation sharing in the liberty of glory.

On the renewed earth, which is more than paradise regained, appears the Metropolitan City; stupendous in dimensions, and supreme in splendor and beauty.

The changes have been great and manifold from earth to sky, for the light of the moon is as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun is sevenfold, and there is a city where neither of them is needed. Doubtless, from the aisles of solemn forests, and from the banks of shining rivers, and from fields ever green, where roses are thick in the grass, the dwellers on the restored earth will look up through a purer medium to a brighter host of stars. To all who believe in new heavens and new earth, I have an argument to offer. When Peter declared his faith in new heavens and earth, he quoted the promise of God, which is found in Isaiah lxv.: "For, behold, I create new heavens and new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." Israel was surely included in this creation. "But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy."—17, 18. But it is not the fact of their being included in the work which I have immediately before me. It is another phase, which the same prophet brings out in the last chapter of his prophecy. After describing how the Gentiles will bring the Jewish people from all nations to Jerusalem, it is added: "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall YOUR SEED and YOUR NAME remain."—22.

Even those who believe that Arcturus and Orion will burn out, that the Northern Crown, and the Southern Cross, and all other existing suns and constellations, are devoted to destruction, look for no other shaking. The ancient orbs and systems are to be shrivelled up as a scroll, but the new creation is to be eternal as its Author. Hence they can join with myself and others, who believe in no such absolute sweeping, but who see a new earth arising in the perfection of a finer order, and the vesture of richer bloom and beauty, which is to be unfading. Not an absolute new creation, but new as man is new when sin and mortality are purged away from him by a double regeneration. But we all believe that the new heavens and the new earth REMAIN FOREVER. There is then no escaping from the restoration and the perpetuity of Israel in Jerusalem, for God says to the seed of Abraham, returned from captivity into their own land: "So shall your seed and your name remain."

But now for the Professor. To his most general statement we reply, it is no fault of ours that most of the prophecies are *un*fulfilled. If the Professor will definitely decide which are fulfilled in the past and the present, we shall not seek to shift them into the future, but if unfulfilled prophecy is ever to be fulfilled, into the future we must look for the accomplishment. The special theory of our Professor, we shall undermine and explode. His living in the city of confusion is evident from the following assumptions.

I. That the church is the continuation of Israel, or one house under two administrations. This cannot be, for one house was left desolate, the other became the temple of God. True, an elect remnant entered into the new house, but only by a new birth and new ordinances, not on the ground of their ancient standing. But the whole thing is absurd, for in the covenants of promise made with Abraham, though all families of the earth are promised blessings in him, the land is never promised to any other save his natural seed. It is likewise worth notice, that in new covenant discourses of authority, Samaria and the Gentiles never hear a word about the throne of David, or the sure mercies of David: such preaching is for Jewish hearers. The ancient people are as distinctive as ever they were in regard to the special matters of their inheritance, when their regeneration is accomplished, and the new covenant comes into force among them. There is, however, one matter which has not receceived sufficient consideration among those who have been patient and fruitful laborers in the field of prophecy. They are all agreed that Israel will be the first among the nations of earth in flesh, that the supreme dominion cometh to the daughter of Zion, that Jerusalem will be the throne of the Lord and the central city of holiness and power. But it is not so generally, or so clearly understood, that Israel the first born is shut out forever from the glorious destiny continually held out to her. She might have had the first place, but will only have the second. Had she been faithful, the Lord would have made her people a nation of king-priests, and all nations would have passed into her hands for rule and moral training. But she miserably failed, and hence the kingdom of God, so far as the supreme administrative dignity is concerned, was taken from her, and given to a nation bainging forth the fruits thereof. The apostle Peter faithfully describes the peculiar people, the royal priesthood, the holy nation, who are heirs of the kingdom, power, and glory, under the whole heavens. The Hebrew standing will indeed be noble, but higher still the glorified kings of that crowning age. The administration is in firmer hands, for the lords and princes of the kingdom have had deeper experience and riper culture. From tremennous perils of inward and outward conflict, they have come forth victorious, approving themselves fit for monarchy and judgment. Fleshly devices and allurements, and pomps of exceeding worldly glory, pangs of bereavement, famine and cruelty, wrath of earthly powers, and energies of wicked spirits in high places, were all brought to bear upon them, to destroy their love for truth and purity, to shake their trust and hope in God. But they were more than conquerors through him that loved them, and suffering with him here, shall reign with him hereafter. Let this serve, among other purposes, as an answer to the charge of Hengstenberg, that we undervalue the church.

II. That the great visible corporation known for ages among the nations, was the church. This is a deadly inveterate superstition, and has led many distracted persons into the undrained bog of Rome. I see that formidable power vividly before me, with its prelates and priests, and councils, and dogmas, with its crusades, persecutions, massacres, and autos-da-fe, and, with its pomps, processions, splendors, and revolutions, but I cannot recognize any semblance to the church. The most plausible answer which I ever received, was this, "Can you not see that Israel remained the people of God even in idolatry and uncleanness, amid almost universal corruption of truth and morals?" But this, though the best that can be said, reveals neither logical nor analogical power, nor acquaintance with the new covenant. The people of Israel were a distinct race in the flesh. They had never gone through the gates of regeneration. But the new people were from all races, and were to be manifested as a twice-born people, living in the Spirit, and bringing forth the fruits of holiness. No true church without truth, unity, and holiness.

III. That the professing church is the kingdom of God. This is another of the assumptions of the Professor. It is very strange, and reveals a delusion almost desperate. The little flock who constituted the nucleus of the church, were promised the kingdom as a reward. "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." The churches after full manifestation, were still taught everywhere, that through much tribulation they must enter the kingdom. The great nobleman who went into a far country to receive a kingdom, has not returned for its revelation. He will judge the living and the dead at his "appearing and his kingdom." There has indeed been a spurious imitation of the kingdom. A succession of false priests, combining limited regal power with wide ecclesiastical dominion, have claimed the glory. Mistakes are sure to be made by the flesh in looking at this hierarchy. It is hoary in antiquity, terrible in power, gorgeous in gold and purple, armed with a thousand spells over the property and senses, the freedom and conscience of mankind. But a slight inspection by anointed eyes, brings out the fact, that this hierarchy is neither the church of Christ nor the kingdom of God. Its dogmas are substantially heathen, its moral spirit fiendish and revolting, its history development from the depths of Satan. The tremendous structure is built on falsehood, soaked in saintly blood, and defiled by the worst pollution. In its developments and battles, its defeats and triumphs, its pretensions, works and glories, we see neither the spiritual activities of the church nor the pure glories of the kingdom, but simply the wicked force and sensual enchantments of a vile usurping corporation. A hierarchy purely of the flesh, in its rise, progress, and decline, only marked by all human passions and unregenerate lusts. False pretensions, false documents, false relics, false miracles, duplicity, avarice, ambition, revenge, ferocity, cruelty, and licentiousness.

But if we look outside of Rome into the various camps where they refuse to drink from the golden cup, or acknowledge the mysterious woman, though we may see more of the church, we see even less of the kingdom. There is certainly more daylight, fresh air, and liberty. There is more truth and purity, more advanced intelligence, and more decided godliness. The freshening gales of freedom blow both from human fields and from a higher continent. Science and philosophy are not proscribed, and there is no very rigid despotisms established over conscience. But there are rival camps, and they have rival banners; all varieties of doctrine, from Athanasianism to Socinianism, and from Socinianism to the borders of Atheism. Call up Luther, Swedenborg, Laud, and Priestley, and get them to consult with the Bishops of Oxford and Natal, that they may tell us what the church is! But the best samples of the professing church have but little resemblance to that pure and undivided reality which came into manifestation on Pentecost, in Jerusalem, amid moral and miraculous wonders. But this professing church is still farther away from the ideal of a kingdom which demands unity, authority and glory, the presence of the great King, the cleansing of the territory, and the subjection of the people. That kingdom is indeed a dream of Origen or Swedenborg, which reveals no visible royalty, no central holy city, no inviolate land, no united subjects, no majestic law, no common banner under which the nations may rally and march onward.

The Passover Feast in Philadelphia.

Our Christian friends of Philadelphia and vicinity are invited to the house of Br. Jas. L. Boyd, No. 1,330 Columbia ave., (a few steps from his former residence) to observe our Lord's Memorial Feast on its coming anniversary, Friday evening, 15th inst.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 13, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Zion's Herald.

The above named paper, after a long silence, speaks once more. We give its notice entire as follows:

Rev. N. D. George has put a very important work before the public, entitled, "Annihilation not of the Bible." His kindred work, "Universalism not of the Bible," has been of great use in furnishing the ministry with an armory of spiritual weapons against that error. This will be found equally useful against a more subtle poison, which does not, like that, attack truth from without, but from within. Every preacher, where this error creeps, and it creeps everywhere, should buy and study this apt compend; and every person bitten with this delusion, should be provided with Bro. George's antidote. It can be found at J. P. Magee's.

This item is Editorial. We have here a tolerably clear statement of Br. Haven's mind about the matter in hand. The doctrine of "No future or eternal life without a union with Christ," and "all the wicked will God destroy," or "annihilate," is, in his estimation, a "delusion"—a "subtle poison." He tells us "Every person bitten with this delusion, should be provided with Bro. George's antidote." He states that "the error creeps everywhere." Thus Br. Haven gives it a pretty wide berth. That it is everywhere, we somewhat doubt; as to its "creeping" any where, it happens not to be of a creeping tribe. It walks erect where it goes, for the plain reason that it has no fears of any of the "antidotes" that have ever appeared, or ever are likely to appear. Our old friend Nathan D. George tried his hand against the Life views several years ago; but in spite of that "antidote," Dr. Haven being witness, the doctrine has made an advance that seems to alarm our opponents. "Rev. N. D. George" has once more come to the help of the falling Dagon of inherent immortality and eternal torture. Well, we are glad to have the devotees of that system of belief come forward in its defence. The hotter the battle the sooner it will be over.

"Zion's Herald," or its editor, Br. Gilbert Haven, talks as if the abundant charity prevailing in that quarter would see that "every person bitten with this delusion should be provided with Bro. George's antidote." We would be glad to see that charity so abound as to supply a few thousands of us with it; and as the hated doctrine "creeps everywhere," the sooner they undertake the work the less it will cost them. If they will send a few thousand copies of the "antidote" to us we pledge ourself to see that they go into the hands of "persons bitten." We have seen so much quackery advertised—such as Prof. Mattison's and Dr. Landis,' both of which the Methodists have tried—that we should really be glad to see something that possesses the character of an honest and candid reply to the arguments from the Bible with which we have stated and defended our positions on the Life question. N. D. George's may be such a work: we will be glad to find it so; yet judging from the above notice in "Zion's Herald," we have our fears that the effort of "Rev. N. D. George" will have a relationship to Landis' and Mattison's.

Let our opposers, however, use the best weapons they can procure, and we venture to predict that the Life views will march on over all their batteries, slaying their Goliahs with the smooth stones of truth, which are all-powerful against the doctrine, "Ye shall not surely die."

Our friends will observe one confession of Br. Haven in the above notice, viz., the Life views are spreading "everywhere." Has he and his brethren been asleep all this time? Have they made no efforts to arrest the "poison?" If so, why have they made no headway against it? It is evident they have not: it marches onward more and more rapidly from every attempt that is made to impede its progress. It rolls on in England, carried forward by some of the strongest minds in that quarter of the world; and if our Boston cotemporary thinks it is to be arrested by the power of any human mind, whether N. D. George or any man more mighty than he, let them do their best, and still it will go "everywhere," and the Moloch of Christendom will die in its presence, and cease its work of torturing human victims, and God will yet be vindicated in his character and government, against all the defenders of inherent immortality, and a future life of torture in hopeless misery.

We gave last week, from the "Rainbow," an item on the terms, destroy and destruction, from Dr. Mortimer. On the same terms we find, in Rev. Edward White's "Life in Christ Only," an item from "Dr. Weymouth, Head Master of Millhill School, and a most distinguished scholar," says Mr. White, in which occurs the following language:

"My mind fails to conceive a grosser misinterpretation of language than when the five or six strongest words which the Greek tongue possesses, signifying 'destroy' or 'destruction,' are explained to mean maintaining an everlasting but wretched existence. To translate black as white is nothing to this."

Such testimonies as Dr. Mortimer's and Dr. Weymouth's should have some weight in the minds of candid inquirers after truth. What is it makes theologians practice such "gross misinterpretations of language" as that spoken of by Dr. Weymouth? The answer is easy and obvious. It is that corruption of Bible truth which assumes man's possession of inherent immortality. That is the "poison" which needs an "antidote;" and if "Zion's Herald" cannot find one, it shall not be our fault.

Methodistical Alarm.

Some time since, we gave an article from the "Methodist Home Journal," showing that an alarm was felt, lest the twin doctrines of inherent immortality, and endless torture should be uprooted by the progress of the doctrine of No future or endless life out of Christ; which our opposers call "Annihilation." It seems the alarm does not abate, as appears from the item in "Zion's Herald," which we have noticed in an article preceding this. Here comes another from the "Home Journal" of March 26th. All this goes to show—our enemies being judges—that the Life Views are steadily advancing, and commending themselves to thinking minds. Such is the inevitable tendency of the doctrine of "Life only in Christ." The following is the article entire from the "Home Journal." We shall append a few notes.

"The Coming Question" Again.

Since the appearance in the "Home Journal" of the brief article under this heading some weeks ago, there have been several allusions to the subject and to the article in some of our secular papers, and we have received a number of communications, "strictly confidential," indicating desire for light on the part of the several writers: from all of which, we infer two things:

1. The editorial above alluded to, has been not a little misunderstood—misunderstood as advocating, or at least, exhibiting a leaning toward the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked; and,

2. There are many candid minds in the churches that are more or less unsettled, and honeslty and eagerly seeking for new measures of light upon the question.

We are not aware that we can claim any light on the subject not already possessed by our brethren: while our circumstances and the numerous claims made upon our time in these days, forbid the faintest hope of doing justice to a question of such magnitude. The article in question was put forth to arouse inquiry and timely investigation. In various parts of the country ministers have already been expelled from their churches for heterodoxy on the point, and other cases of discipline, it appears are in prospect. It seems to us therefore, high time that some champion of the doctrine of the perpetuated existence in penal misery of persons impenitent to the end of life, should present a well considered exegesis of the passages from the Word of God that are claimed to bear, pro et con, on the question whether sinners are to be forever held in being and forever punished. (1.)

Very few persons in the churches seem to have any leaning toward the dogmas of the Universalists, or to regard their tenets, or the influence of the sect as even harmless; and accordingly evangelical Christians have made common war upon their doctrines from the first. Indeed the young men of the ministry have been well trained to this branch of polemics in the sections of country where Universalism became prevalent or even threatened to prevail for the last fifty years; and it is doubtless a result of the persistent opposition that the sect has manifested but little growth.

But the attack on orthodoxy is now from a point entirely new; since the question whether the wicked are to survive evermore is wholly distinct from the question whether they are to be converted at, or after death, and so be eternally blessed. The batteries of the enemy are in position at a point on which our guns have never been trained; and it becomes us to readjust our ordnance and carefully get the new range. (2.)

Who then will step forth for the defence of the immortality of the wicked and of their punishment, against this new phase of heterodoxy?

1. Who will meet the argument founded on the natural and common signification of the words claimed to be habitually employed in the Bible to denote the final retribution of sinners; as "shall perish," "shall consume away," "shall be consumed," "shall be destroyed," "shall not be," etc.? (3.)

2. Who will expose the fallacy that as "everlasting" and its cognates do not always in the Bible import duration strictly endless, therefore their use in connection with the threatened doom of sinners does not necessarily imply more than that they shall suffer while they exist? (4.)

3. Who will show that man's instinctive horror of continued torture instead of execution is a mark of his depravity or short-sightedness; and that in proportion as any man becomes elevated in character, and educated upon the Bible he finds his opinions molded to the Bible idea of torture instead of execution for criminals? (5.)

4. Who will show, either that the administration of punishment continued without end is obviously incompatible therewith?

5. The devil is not dead nor dying, though he has been a condemned criminal six thousand years or so; and the prediction of him is in the language of the vision of John, "And the devil was cast into a lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and the false prophet are; and shall be tormented day and night, for ever and ever." Upon sinners is to be pronounced the penalty that they are to depart from God with his curse, "into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." (6.)

Who will rescue these Scriptures and others of their tone, from the new glosses that have been put upon them, and wield them for the demolition of the new dogmas?

In a word, who will overthrow the position of the Annihilationists and set forth the truth of God, blazing with a clear and steady light, in the eyes of all inquirers after the right way of the Lord? G.

Notes on the Foregoing.

1. If "Zion's Herald" is correct in its statement, there is a "champion of the doctrine of the perpetual existence in penal misery" of the lost, already in the field; and the more such, the better for the Life Views. More "Ministers, in various parts of the country," will be "expelled from their churches," rather than uphold the blasphemous doctrines of inherent immortality, and eternal torture. Our Methodist brethren cannot wake up too soon to the "Magnitude" of the "question." The more they turn up the soil beneath their feet, the faster the sunlight of the truth of Life only in Christ will penetrate, and the more rapid will be the growth of the knowledge of the truth that "God is love," and that life future is His gift bestowed only on such as comply with His specified conditions. Let your "champions" then be fully armed, and come to the battle like men. With God's help we will meet you; but you must keep to the Bible, and a sound criticism of its language.

As to "sinners being . . . forever punished:" We believe their punishment is eternal as much as our opponents do; but we believe that punishment is a death state never to be revoked—"The wages of sin is death:"—Rom. vi. 23; and, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood" (become a partaker of Christ) "ye have no life in you;"—John vi. 53. To talk of a living existence of men who have no vital union with Christ, is a palpable denial of the testimony of Him who is "the way, the truth, and the life."—John xiv. 6.

(2.) Here is some honest truth. A new field is open for your skill. You will find your "guns have never been trained" to reach our "batteries," and never can be while you keep in God's field, "readjust" your "ordnance" as you will. We are clearly out of any "range" your "guns" can reach. The only point on which you can plant them is the hill raised in Eden—"Ye shall not surely die;" for that is the only stand-point known in the Bible for the defence of inherent immortality, and if you cannot vindicate the character of the author of that saying as a truth teller, you stand no chance of reaching our position by any "new range" you may "get." We are quite willing to have you make the experiment.

(3.) Sure enough "who shall meet the argument founded on the natural and common signification of the words" used "in the Bible to denote the" final doom of sinners? Our opponents have tried their "batteries" to knock the common sense meaning of words out of the Bible, and supplant them with the "traditions of men;" but common sense men get their eyes opened by that mode of warfare, to see that the ammunition used for this purpose was unquestionably first manufactured in Eden, by an inventor called "the serpent," be he who he may. His words received as truth, have compelled all the votaries of the doctrine of inherent deathlessness to change the common sense use of the terms "perish—destroy—destroyed—consumed—die—death—shall not be," etc., to mean, "Ye shall not surely die." The day for such perversion we trust is near its end; and the "old serpent" is likely to have his "head bruised," and Jesus alone be exalted as the Life-giver: for "God has given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son;" so we must be in Him to have an eternal living existence. He that does not believe this, "has made God a liar;"—1 John v. 10-12; he may have done so ignorantly, and "the time of this ignorance God" may have "winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent" of such perversion of his word and accept the truth of Life only in Christ.

(4.) We ask no change of the sense of the term "everlasting." This word expresses our idea of the duration of the punishment of the lost. When they die "they are dead, they shall not live;"—Isa. xxvi. 14; their death is everlasting in the strict sense of the word. Prove it is everlasting torment if you can. We know you cannot. No such doctrine has any authority from the Bible, and lives only in the traditions of men who have made void the testimony of God in the matter.

(5.) Yes, let them show it if they can. The Bible is clear for "execution;" and God has given Jesus "authority to execute the judgment." Only think, He who "beheld Jerusalem and wept over it," foreseeing the tribulation coming on that wicked city, is to be the eternal tormenter of unnumbered millions of the human family. If so, unless his heart is changed, since here on earth, He will eternally "weep" over the miseries of the lost. Does not the doctrine of endless torture make Christ the Tormenter, and thereby convert Him into the theological devil? You are shocked at such a thought; and well you may be; but is it not the legitimate conclusion from the doctrine of eternal torture, while Christ must be admitted to be the executive power?

(6.) Our friend's last resort is that of all theorists who fail in argument, viz., to the symbols of Revelation. If the devil of Rev. xx., is the theological devil, and is literally in the theological hell, then, "the beast" there, is a literal beast, and so hell torment believers bring up with plunging dumb brutes in fire and brimstone; for the devil, be it remembered, "was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and the false prophet are," etc. Alas for the poor brute creation under the manipulations of torment theorists! To save their dying idols—immortal souls and endless torture—they send along, ahead of their devil, "beasts," literal cattle! Such is the strait in which their theory places them.

"Die Twice."

Salvation depends on Regeneration, a second birth of the Spirit, which unites us to the Life-Giver. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His," and will "die" the Second Death. Unless born twice, men will die twice.

The above language is found in Rev. Edward White's pamphlet, which he sent us from England a short time since. We highly esteem this brother; but we wish to make some suggestions on statements in this quotation. That "salvation depends on Regeneration" we fully believe; but what does regeneration include? Certainly it includes something more than being "begotten again;" though that is essential to "a second birth of the Spirit;" yet it is not the birth itself, any more than a begetting in nature is the birth. Being begotten and being born are two distinct matters as well as different in time. The child is first begotten; passes on in an embryotic state till a maturity is attained, and after that is born.

Just so it is spiritually, or in the work of the Spirit of God. We are begotten again by the word of truth, in the hands of the Spirit. Our future life, while we remain here, is our embryotic state in spiritual matters; our birth depends on our coming to a certain maturity while thus situated. The birth takes place at the resurrection, at the last day.

Christ "was the first-born from the dead:" (Col. i. 18): "the first fruits of them that slept." See Rev. i. 5, 1 Cor. xv. 20. He was "the first-born among many brethren."—Rom. viii. 29.

The "Regeneration," or new birth, does not, therefore, take place, in the strict sense, till the resurrection; and that which is not first begotten can never be born; those who are born from the dead are those in whom the Spirit of God dwelt while in this life; and being thus born, "they are the children of the resurrection" . . . "neither can they die any more."—Luke xx.

Br. White says, "Unless born twice, men will die twice." Will he tell us how a man can literally die twice unless he is born twice? The thing, to our mind, is an impossibility. Hence the idea of "the second death" being that of "twice" dying becomes clearly an error; it is a figment of the torment theory, and has no more foundation in the Bible than eternal torture.

A man cannot die twice unless he is twice born.

He that is born twice cannot "die any more."

Hence the second death is not dying twice.

The Saviour said to his disciples, "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory," etc.—Matt. xix. 28. The time when the Bible "Regeneration" is to take place is clearly set forth here as in the age to come, when Christ shall sit in the throne of his glory. That is, at and after the resurrection of the saints, or their birth from the dead. In that resurrection the wicked dead have no part, and of course do not literally die twice. Their death being final and eternal—never to be revoked—is called "the second death," which death "hurts" not any in Christ, or any "born from the dead"—over such, that death "hath no power:"—"neither can they die any more." Such we regard as the Bible truth on this question.

Inherent Immortality.

The following testimonies we find in a Note on pages 6 and 7 of Edward White's work just received. Let Methodist Bishops and others ponder them well. It is a long road, that never turns, and some of the theologians of our country may yet find their craft in danger from the progress of the truth on the immortality question. Let them prepare to travel to the music of "Life future and eternal only in Christ." To that result their doctrine must ultimately come.

"That the natural immortality of man's soul is discoverable by reason may be denied on the ground that it has not in fact been discovered yet. No arguments from reason, independent of revelation, have been brought forward that amount to a decisive proof that the soul must survive bodily death."—Archbishop Whately on Future Life p. 17.

Dr. Hampden, late Bishop of Hereford, says, in his Bampton Lectures, "The notion of the separate existence of the soul has so incorporated itself with Christian theology, that we are apt at this day to regard a belief of it as essential to orthodox doctrine. I cannot, however, help viewing this popular belief as a remnant of scholasticism. I feel assured that the truth of the resurrection does not rest on such an assumption. What our Lord says in answer to Martha's declaration, 'I know that he shall rise again,' when He proclaims Himself the Resurrection and the Life, is to this point. The Jews then entertained a philosophical belief of a future state. Our Lord tacitly reproves an assurance on such grounds, by His strong reference to Himself; 'I am the Resurrection and the Life: whosoever believeth in Me, shall live though he die'"—p. 210.

Mr. Heard, whose work on Body, Soul and Spirit, or the Tripartite Nature of Man (Clark, Edinburgh), is a thorough discussion of the whole question of Immortality, based on a scholarlike knowledge of the subject, says:—"When two gases, uniting in definite proportions, combine into a new substance with distinct properties of its own, unlike those of the gases when separate, we call this tertium quid by a name of its own. For all practical purposes water is still an element. It is not a fusion or a mixture, as of water and wine, much less of one floating on the other, as of oil on water; but it is a union in which the very substance itself of oxygen and hydrogen, and not the phenomena only, are absorbed into a new substance, with new and distinct phenomena of its own, which we call water. So in the union of mind and matter in the formation of man. Man is not a mixture of mind and matter, much less an immortal mind in a mortal body; but he is the identity of two distinct substances which lose their identity in giving him his. Man, and not mind by itself, is thus the true monad. For aught we know to the contrary, the one element might pass away to form fresh combinations of mind, as the other element, matter, passses away to form fresh combinations."—pp. 236, 7.

"Kant's Kritik ought to have set at rest the popular way of speaking of the soul's natural immortality. Here is Philosophy throwing up the tables, after passing in review one by one the usual arguments by which it is attempted to roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre. Whatever may be thought of the constructive part of Kant's Kritik, the destructive is positively unanswerable. Yet in this country at least, to judge from recent editions of Bishop Butler, Kant's criticism is almost unknown. It is a curious instance of that habit of mind which the late Archbishop Whately called Proof-proof. An argument is demolished, as we think, but we turn our backs and it starts up again as lively as ever, proving what a little hold logic has over men's convictions when their wishes go in the other direction. To reason from our wishes is very illogical, but it is very natural, and very human."—Heard, p. 231.

The best argument in illustration of the statement that Nature, if it teach anything on a future state, can teach at the highest only survival, not eternal immortality; and that being law, not gospel, it can teach only a future state of condemnation, will be found in a book of the last century, little known, but worthy of republication: Joseph Hallet's Discourse on the Impossibility of Proving an Eternal Future State by the Light of Nature, p. 210, in a work published by Noon, 1729. It is strange that those who are always and rightly insisting that there is no salvation under the "Law," should so steadfastly maintain that Nature can teach us a future state of Rewards as well as Punishments. If Nature teaches the immortality of the soul, it teaches also the eternal misery of the whole of mankind without any exception. "Judgment came upon all men to condemnation;" and if this condemnation be endless suffering it is the natural heritage of all mankind.

Truth Unshaken.

I had heard that somebody has recently published a book against our position, no future life for any who die in impenitence, and that the arguments are thought by some to be unanswerable; so, not having seen the work, I very naturally supposed the author had made some new and strong points. This he undoubtedly has done looking at the subject from the mortal-resurrection stand point.

Upon first reading Br. Grim's review in last week's paper, of some of the arguments of the work, I felt that the gibralter-positions, so considered, had been shown by the review to be quite untenable. Fearing I may have under-estimated the one, or over-rated the other, I subsequently gave it a careful second-reading, and so simple and plain is the truth made to appear I am led to wonder more than ever why it is that our friends on the other side of the question are so long in getting at the truth.

As oft as they are driven from one refuge they fly to another. They have been kept pretty much upon the wing during the past few years, and the resting places are much fewer now than formerly. It sometimes happens that when people get at the truth readily and with little difficulty they are not thoroughly established in it. Opposition puts them into "Doubting Castle" and sometimes undermines their faith. But it will not be thus with our beloved friends of the "two-deaths" theory. When they do get at the truth on that point, as they surely will sometime, they will believe it without reserve. They will be as immovable as the "eternal hills." Once there, their rest will be glorious. May God bless them and speed them on the way both for their own sake and that of the truth.

The "Rich Tract."

RESPONSE BY RANDOLPH E. LADD.

Br. Storrs: I most heartily and cheerfully respond to the call "for $50 or $60" to produce in tract form our dear Br. Thorne's answers to brethren Bridge and Lyman, and enclose herewith, five dollars, and will pay cost or selling price for 200 copies as soon as printed. I had it in my heart to make the request to have it done last week, but was hindered. Now let it be done as speedily as is possible, and add the tract to our list of Campaign Documents.

May God bless and preserve the life and health of that dear Brother in Christ, with whom my heart is knit as was David's with Jonathan's.

How gloriously the light is shining to those whose fetters are broken off, by the Holy Spirit guiding them into all truth.

"Life only in and through Christ," is the talismanic charm that opens all other Scripture truths. We by thus believing "set to our seal that God is true."

My heart is full of praise and thanksgiving this blessed morning. I have just arisen from the first perusal of Br. Leonard's manly and Christian article in reply to the low attempted witticism of H. L. May God forgive him, and show him his folly. Your affectionate Brother.

Tophet and Gehenna.

The following extracts are from a work entitled "The Handwriting of God, in Egypt, Sinai, and the Holy Land," by Rev. D. A. Randall.

The Renowned Village of Hinnom.

This is called in the Bible, "Valley of the Son of Hinnom," and in the Hebrew Ge Hinnom. The Arabs call it Wady Jehenam, which is evidently the Hebrew name transferred to their language. In this valley, as we proceed, we shall find the Gehenna and Tophet of Scripture.

Here was Tophet. Under the apostate kings of Judah that subsequently [that is to Solomon] reigned in Jerusalem, this portion of the valley became the seat of the most horrible idolatrous services. Here under the very brow of Zion, overlooked by the magnificent temple of the living God, the most revolting of heathen abominations were practiced. Here "Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with blood of human sacrifices and parent's tears," had his groves and altars. He is represented as a large brazen statue, hollow within, and arms extended as if to receive and welcome his victims. Heated with fire, children were placed as offerings upon the extended arms, and fell into the burning furnace below.' During the term of sacrifice, drums were beaten to drown the cries of the burning innocents. "Imagination," says one, "can picture the monster ready for a victim surrounded by priests, a band of drummers, and an excited multitude; while here and there a Hebrew mother is seen, pale and haggard straining her devoted infant to her bosom for the last time."

We can scarce believe that such horrid and disgusting rites have been practiced upon this place where we now stand; but Moloch was an ancient idol, and often the children of Israel had been warned against honoring his altars. They had been taught his worship in idolatrous Egypt; and Moses had given them solemn warnings against it, the Lord instructing him to say, "Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, that giveth any of his children unto Moloch, he shall surely be put to death; the people of the land shall stone him with stones."—Lev. xx. 2. The awful idolatries of this valley were broken up by good king Josiah, who made the valley a place of pollution.

He determined so to defile the place that the Jews disposed to idolatry would utterly abhor and forsake it. The idolatrous priests were degraded, the altars demolished, the groves cut down, and the place defiled with dead men's bones. This portion of the valley became a receptacle of filth and offal of all kinds from the city. Here corruption and the worm held banquet, and fires are said to have been kept continually burning to consume the piles of filth that were deposited here. From this it was, that the Greek Gehenna from Ge Hinnom became to the Jews a forcible illustration of the displeasure of God against transgressors, while the continual riot of the worm of corruption and ever burning fires, furnished the Saviour with his impressive imagery of future retribution in which he has taught us it is better to cut off an offending hand or foot, and enter life maimed, than to have the perfect body to be cast into hell (Gehenna) "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Thus Gehenna and Tophet, ordained of old, are now our instructors; their very names are among the writing God has written in the dark depths of these gloomy valleys to admonish us of his displeasure against transgressors.

Connected with this valley is another remarkable fulfilment of prophecy. Isaiah says of this place, in allusion to its character: "Tophet was ordained of old; . . . he hath made it deep and large; the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it."—xxiii. 35.

Jeremiah looks into the future and sees the fearful carnage, and the multitudes of slain that shall here be piled heaps upon heaps. The Lord directed him to take a potter's bottle, and come and stand in this very place, in company with some of the old priests, and in the presence of these witnesses to dash the bottle in pieces and say, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, even so will I break this people, and this city (Jerusalem) as one breaketh a potter's vessel that cannot be made whole again, and they shall bury them in Tophet until there shall be no place to bury."—xix. 11.

Though this was written six hundred years before Christ, and might have applied to the conquest by Nebuchadnezzar, how exact was its fulfilment in the siege under Titus, according to the testimony of Josephus himself! The city then extended nearly down to this place, and a portion of this valley was not only a great place of sepulture, but it was in this corner of the city, that the last struggle between the Jews and the Romans took place; and this retired portion of the valley would most likely be the place to which the dead slain in battle and dying of famine would be conveyed; and through one gate alone, we are informed, there was carried out between the 15th of the month Nisan and the 1st of Tamuz, two months and a half, one hundred and fifteen thousand eight hundred and eighty dead bodies. After this some of the citizens went over to Titus, and informed him that up to the time of their leaving "no fewer than six hundred thousand dead had been thrown out of the gates." (Wars V. 13. 7).

Tophet and Hinnom, what scenes ye have witnessed! Can all the flowing waters of Kedron and the fountains of thy hill-sides, even wash away thy defilements? Well did Jeremiah say, this place should no more be called Tophet, nor the Valley of the Son of Hinnom, but the valley of Slaughter. When Titus came into the conquered city, as Josephus informs us, and saw these valleys below Jerusalem heaped full of dead bodies, he was so horrified at the sight that he raised his hands and called heaven to witness that he was not responsible for this terrible destruction of human life!

Remarks on the Foregoing Extracts by La Fayette Norris.

Let it be noticed first, that one of the most talented of the modern orthodox divines has admitted and proved that the hell of the New Testament is the Valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem;—that it is the Tophet of the Old Testament. Hence we must look to Tophet for its meaning. The meaning of Tophet is easily arrived at, if we let the Bible decide. Jeremiah calls it the "Valley of Slaughter." He says in substance that it should become an immense burying ground to the wicked Jews. Now when our Saviour used the word Gehenna (hell) would he give it a meaning exactly the opposite to that which the prophets gave it, without mentioning the fact, if it was a fact? For surely a place of endless torment is as unlike an immense burying ground as we could well conceive. Would he not rather give Gehenna a meaning in harmony with the prediction of Jeremiah, which was fulfilled under Titus, a doom which many of the wicked Jews whom Jesus addressed actually received?

The Rev. Mr. Randall thinks that our Saviour used the term Gehenna as a type of the future punishment of the wicked. But I think we should not resort to a figurative sense when there is no difficulty in the way of interpreting it in the most literal sense. The Jews whom our Saviour addressed were actually in danger of being destroyed in literal Gehenna, or Tophet; and our Saviour wept over Jerusalem in view of this very destruction, as accomplished by Titus. To me it appears evident our Saviour could have used it figuratively in only one way, and that is by applying it in a general sense, indicating a similar doom to all impenitent sinners as was inflicted on those who were actually destroyed in Gehenna. Whatever their doom was, they should not see life. Life was placed in contrast to their punishment in Gehenna.

I notice further, that the "rioting worm of corruption" and ever burning fires preyed on dead men, and not on living beings; neither was the "worm that dieth not," the immortal soul as some would have us believe. For proof, see Isaiah lxvi. 24 and the Rev. Mr. Randall's description above. Although Titus was an unbelieving Gentile, yet he was filled with horror at what he saw in Gehenna. But modern orthodoxy has pictured its God as gloating over the doomed in a hell of endless torment, a punishment infinitely greater than that which Titus beheld. Can such a being be a God of love, whose tender mercies are over all his works? God condemned the wicked Jews for sacrificing their children to Moloch; and the good king Josiah under the sanction of God polluted it so that it should be no more used for such a horrid purpose; and yet we are told by modern divines, that this horrid sacrificing to Moloch in Tophet is a type or symbol of the future punishment of the wicked! How much more reasonable to suppose that God used Tophet after it was desecrated under his sanction, as such a symbol or type; for we know that he did execute just such a penalty upon many of the wicked Jews. But Tophet in its worst form would not symbolize eternal torments; for its victims were all destroyed and consumed.

I will close these remarks by requesting the candid to investigate the Bible thoroughly, and see if they can determine whether there is a hell of eternal torments reserved for the wicked.

The Immortality of the Soul Proved.

A friend of mine who lately removed to Michigan from this neighborhood, and who believes in "Life only in Christ," told me the following incident; She was invited to attend a Bible class in one of the orthodox churches conducted by a lady of influence in the church. It was the custom each Sunday to give out a subject for the next week; and each member of the class was expected to produce some passages of Scripture to prove the doctrine under consideration. "The immortality of the soul" was the subject to be proved by reference to the Bible. There seemed to be some trouble in the class to find any passages that came directly to the point to prove a doctrine so universally received as true.

After waiting some while to hear what could be said on the subject, and finding all in a state of suspense, the friend I speak of remarked that she had found one text that plainly assumed the doctrine in question, and referred to Gen. iii. 4, 5; all turned with eagerness to the passage, and read "The serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." The effect was startling; not a word was said; but to see the confusion and anxiety to close the books and make for the door, was a novelty seldom seen in these latter days of fables!

Letters and Extracts.

From Joel S. Richards.

Br. Storrs: I thank you for the package, and the paper asked for. I think I am fast becoming "settled" as to the correctness of the general position you advocate: No Life for those not in Christ; eternal life for all who have a resurrection.

I am reading the tracts and pamphlets, and thinking somewhat of the ideas inculcated. After reading I lend to those of investigating turn of mind. Already an interest is observable among some: opposition is provoked, and some are really cross; some are composed and candid, and say they are willing to step just so far and fast as evidence can be found to show the position to be in accordance with the actual meaning of the Scriptures.

Last week's Herald did not reach me. If you can send me March 23d paper it will be a great favor. I really have fallen in love with the paper for several reasons similar to those already named by other writers.

Should any readers of the Herald of Life look about their tables, shelves, or any place, where books and tracts are laid away, and find a few they would like to have scattered by one who has no ability in way of selling good reading, but can give away a vast amount to a great and widely scattered people (if he can get the papers and tracts, pamphlets and books), doing business here and elsewhere, you can have it done by being to the trouble and expense of sending per mail to my address. I am in a small village, to and through which many come and go from quite a distance in back towns; many vessels are doing business between here and many other places. My chance to get good reading matter in the way of many is very good, and I am not too proud or too lazy to do it. Thousands of pages of tracts and hundreds of papers have been furnished me by men and women of piety to be scattered, and it was done.

Of late I have offered one (who is cross), the chance to give me his papers and tracts for me to give others, which I promise to do, but add: "I will place a few of such as I can get with yours, and thus give all a chance to judge for themselves."

Being unable to engage in public effort requiring much action of the thinking machine, and anxious to do what I can, I will the more earnestly do as stated.

Rockport, Maine, April 5. 1870.

From Jno. H. Waterbury.

Br. Storrs: It has been a long time since I have had the reading of the Herald of Life, except the old numbers. I have much of the time been wandering (by business) through portions of the West, especially Minnesota, as far as the Pompetare junction with the Minnesota river. In many portions I find among the pioneers a goodly number of Adventists, but many bring with them their old traditions, inculcated while young. These impressions are hard to get rid of, with but little teaching, and hearing the true word. How can they hear without a preacher? and how can they preach except they are sent of God? There is some of the good seed sown and taken root in good ground, and in time I trust it will bring forth good fruit and yield abundantly.

In Handizohi county I found many believers in the doctrine of No life out of Christ. But many Adventists believe there is to be a resurrection, not only of the just, but also of the unjust. The just to life eternal, and the wicked to death eternal. I find some are trying to serve two masters at the same time. Some are holding on to their old prejudices, by tight hold of some old judicial law. This class with difficulty see beyond the law on some points. I wish it was possible for the emigrants to these Western prairies to have a few crumbs from the bread of life, while they are struggling to live here upon the earth their allotted time. My means are limited, but I will do all that I can, in concert with some good and generous hearts, to send out to those that are hungering and thirsting for the true Word of life.

The commencement of many in trying to make a home in the Western wilds, with small means, is not all sunshine. Yet by perseverance, after a few years, they become comfortable as to temporal wants. But man's wants are not all temporal, or some men's wants are for something beyond temporal.

Please send me one number of the Herald of Life, and I will send you a subscriber's money and thanks.

Truly your friend and brother.

From Daniel Chase.

Br. Storrs: I send you the twenty-five dollars that I pledged to give, to sustain the Herald of Life at our annual meeting at Springfield, Mass. You may recollect the circumstances. I offered fifteen dollars, and after that I said, Should I not give the most to sustain the great crowning truth? I feel that there is no truth taught in the world more plain than that there is no life future, only as we receive it through Christ, as a gift; and I cannot conceive of any life in anything that is dead. Unless there is a new life that is separate from the first given, we shall not know more than the beasts that perish.

I am still a member of the Baptist church, my wife and five children are all of the same church. I will hope on trusting in the power of God's truth to open the eyes of the blind, and unstop the deaf ears, and break up the fallow ground of old forms and customs that are not sanctioned by the word of truth. I am alone, yet not alone; for I feel the love of the Father through the Son, with the truth are with me, helping me to fight on, feeling that this is a holy warfare, and that the victory is the Lord's; and my prayer is, Let me and all of ours glory in nothing save in the cross of our Lord and Master; and yet it is no cross, if we have that love which casts out all fear.

O, what rich and heaven born truths I see now, compared to views I once entertained. I did not then see that I was robbing the Father and the Son of that honor that belongs to them. Then it was mystery mystified, confusion worse confounded; now it is harmony harmonized, glory glorified. Last year I sent you five dollars for Campaign Documents. I sowed them broad-cast. The result God only knows. One thing is certain; it has caused some to think, and stirred up the drowsy minds. Yet they cannot give up, they must cling to the false belief that they have inherent in them, an immortal or a never dying soul. I pity them; I say, O Lord forgive them, for they know not what they do.

I wish some one of our brethren would come this way. Br. Brown gave me encouragement at our camp-meeting at Springfield; but has not come as yet. I wish that if any one does think of coming, that he would give notice to me in the Herald in season that I may give timely notice. If you have on hand some Campaign Documents that you will send me, I will try to distribute them personally, by the help of God, to those that will read them.

From Eld. T. K. Allen.

Br. Storrs: Br. Samuel Bursell of Prosper, Min., has just handed me two dollars to send you, to pay for his subscription to the Herald of Life for this year. He wishes me to write to you that he is well pleased with the paper, and thinks the letters it contains from week to week from the different brethren are very spiritual, the perusal of which is to him a feast of fat things. He embraced the doctrine of the Lord's near coming a quarter of a century ago, and now feels strong in the faith that there is no life out of Christ. Under his hospitable roof and from bounties of his well-spread table, I have often been refreshed in my travels through his section of country. For which may the Lord reward him, in the day of his coming. Yours in Christ.

Winona, Minn., April 5, 1870.

From Eld. Z. Campbell.

Br. Storrs: I see in the last Herald of Life, in Br. Wendell's "Jottings," that he has jotted considerable upon my misquotation of the Douay Bible. I quoted it from memory, not having seen the text in that Bible for years. I did not attempt a translation of the Greek text, or any alteration or amendment of the Douay translation. But, quoting from memory, I used the words—presseth against, where I ought to have used—useth violence toward.

Had this been done intentionally to wrest from the Scriptures their true meaning, it would have been a sin worth nearly a half column of jottings. But as it is, it will puzzle a savan jotter to tell the difference between presseth against, and useth violence toward. Now, if Br. Wendell never commits a greater sin than this, he will surely get into the kingdom of God; and if he gets in before I do, I hope he will take his Douay Bible with him, so when I get there I can have the privilege of acknowledging all my sins in "sadly misquoting" it, so that I too may remain in the kingdom with him.

Auburn, Me., April 9, 1870.

Remarks by the Editor.

Few men better understood the Greek than the late "Rev. Wm. Ramsey," long a Missionary among the Greeks. In conversation with him at his house in Philadelphia, 25 years ago, he called our attention to the text, which is spoken of above, and informed us the true sense and meaning of it was, "presseth against it; in the sense of opposing it: or, using violence, as one taketh hold of an object violently to thrust it from him." As to this or any other criticism on this text we take no part now, only to state a fact.

From Susan E. Teeple.

Br. Storrs: Although a stranger, you will see I have called you brother, but I trust we are in Christ as we have been long in the way and expect to enter the port of endless rest at one and the same time. I well remember your writings in the past; and more especially that pamphlet of Six Sermons on the immortality of the soul, and have the dead knowledge? I purchased one in the year '45 or '46, and gave it a candid investigation, and lent it to all others that would do the same. I finally gave it to a friend far away, and sent to the office and got another; and it has been some time since I let that go.

In talking with some Methodists that were getting very much interested in the views we hold most dear, I spoke of that pamphlet, and they thought they would like much to read it. I did not know where to send for it, as there was not as much said about it as there used to be. But I have a pamphlet, "The Constitution of Man, and his Final Destiny: by Dr. John K. Finley," and on the cover I see among Campaign Documents a cheap edition of the Six Sermons. I thought it likely it was the work I have referred to. Please send it to me, and the eight first named Campaign Documents.

Hotchkissville, Conn.. March 29, 1870.

From W. H. Whitman.

Br. Storrs: We have been spending our evenings reading the Scriptures, and writing on the subject of the kingdom of God, thinking of sending it to the Herald for publication. But have concluded that it would do its readers but little good. The object is to show the kingdom was not set up at pentecost. We are surrounded by those who believe it was set up then. And we heard a college-bred man undertake to prove it, some six weeks ago, which set us to writing on the question. One text he quoted was Matt. xvi. 28. He tried to make it appear that the kingdom was set up in the life time of some that heard Jesus speaking. He seemed so intent in whipping us, that he forgot he was putting a weapon in the hands of the Universalist, that would cut his own throat on another subject. For if the kingdom was set up in the life time of some that stood by, or at pentecost, as he had it, the second coming of Christ took place at pentecost. How learned men can be so deceived, we cannot tell.

We need a tract directly upon this subject, to circulate among those who hold the doctrine. We intend to try and get our article on the kingdom published in a paper in our county, in order to get it before those who need to read it. But whether we will succeed we cannot tell. We intend to make the effort in a few weeks.

If we were able, we would like to send and get a few tracts, to scatter in Galesburg, a town seven miles east of us. A few of "Man's nature and destiny"—"The living Soul," and "The Judgment," might set some to studying the Bible. We intend to give them something to read as soon as we can. All the tracts we have scattered in the West, have been mostly among those known as "Campbellites." And there are none of them in Galesburg except one or two, that we know of. We would like very much for Z. Campbell to write some on the events connected with the second coming of Christ to the earth.

Obituary.

From Eld. B. Matthias, Lanesville, Kansas.

Townsend.—I received the sorrowful news of the death of our friend Dr. Samuel P. Townsend, of Scotch Plains, N. J., a few days since. He had been poorly for a long time; but of late was thought to be getting well. But a severe, and as it has proved a fatal cold, has blasted all our hopes.

He was a man of many virtues; large-hearted, generous in his charities, and never weary of doing good, always laying plans for usefulness, and doing good as he had opportunity. I have many a time heard him say, the Herald of Life ought to be sent out in the hands of Newsboys, like other city papers, that the people might be more generally informed of the better life. He was an early believer in Adventism, as you know, being an attendant at the House of Prayer in Albany, N. Y. He believed the extreme doctrines of life and death. Life sure and ever, to the believer, and simple and real death to the wicked, without hope or possibility of any intermission, longer or shorter. When in the vigor of his manhood he exemplified the most indomitable enterprise.

His long illness had the power on him that it always wields on those the Lord means to save. "His end was peace."

I send you herewith an extract from a letter I received from one of his brothers, which comforted me greatly:

New York, March 22. 1870.

Friend Matthias: It becomes my sad duty to inform you of Brother Samuel's death, which occurred Tuesday the 15th inst., at four-and-a-half o'clock in the afternoon. He had been better, as I wrote you some time since, and we felt strong hopes of his ultimate recovery, but alas! on the Thursday previous to his death he took a heavy cold, which resulted in congestion of the lungs and bowels, and closed his earthly career as above stated. He was perfectly rational and conscious to the close, but for the last half hour was unable to articulate words. Being satisfied in his own mind that he could not recover, he was anxious to die, and dreaded only the final struggle. He several times said, "I am going to fall asleep in Jesus—I want to fall asleep in Jesus."

The Christian Passover, in this City.

The Anniversary in "remembrance" of the death of "Christ, our passover, who was sacrificed for us," will be celebrated by the Believers in the yearly memorial of that event at the Cooper Institute, (Room 18), Friday evening, April 15; exercises to commence at half past seven precisely. All who love the Lord Jesus are invited to join with us on the occasion, whether they are with us in the anniversary views or not. It is the Lord's table, and all His friends will find a welcome.

The entrance into the place of our meeting is at the corner of 4th Ave. and Eighth St., New York City. Please be present at the hour appointed.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

"THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH AS IT IS IN HEAVEN."

Come Jesus, King of kings,
And reign on David's throne;
O come, and Life eternal bring,
And gather Israel home.

Raise Abra'm from the dead,
Who did believe thy word;
And for his mighty faith was made,
The "Friend" and "Heir" of God.

Gather his scattered seed
From every land and clime;
And settle them in very deed,
In promised Palestine.

For, Gentile pilgrims sigh
To be with Israel blessed;
The long-sought, promised hour is nigh,
Come, give Thy people rest.

We long for sin to cease,
Oppression, death and pain;
But we shall ne'er have health or peace,
Till Jesus comes to reign.

O come, thou mighty King!
Take David's royal throne;
All power into subjection bring,
For all, thy power shall own.

Let proud, vain Gentiles cease,
To boast o'er Abra'm's seed;
For Christ, the mighty Prince of Peace,
Will come, their cause to plead.—Joel 3d.

Cease then, poor mortal man,
To curse whom God hath blessed,
If you his judgments fierce would shun,
Or, gain his promised rest.

Come, Great Restorer, come;
Cleanse Earth from every stain;
Cause it like Eden yet to bloom—Ezk. xxxvi. 35.
Come Jesus, Come and reign.

SCOTLAND, Conn.

HOW SHALL WE LIVE AGAIN?

AN INQUIRY BY J. C. WHEELER.

"AND if Christ be not raised your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins."—1 Cor. xv. 17.

Paul says, If Christ be not raised, your faith is a fancied one, without foundation; and we have no sacrifice of blood to wash away our sins. So we remain sinners. All must come to this conclusion, that sin when it is finished bringeth forth death; and sin will eternally hold men under its dominion, if they die in their sins; [perished.] Hence Paul declares, if Christ is not raised ye are yet in your sins. Not in Adam's sins. And if so, they are perished. Then if this be the fact, all must come to this conclusion, If Christ is not risen, the whole family of men, both good and bad, must be eternally held under the bands of death, for the reason Paul has assigned, viz., they have died in their sins; unless the Lord lends a helping hand. Well, says one, He has, and made provision to bring up all out of the grave, or death.

To such persons I would kindly ask for Bible proof; for I find no place in that Book, where Jesus died for Adam's sins. If so, God is under no obligation, as they say he is, to raise up the whole human family to life; for the Lord never works on credit; He is indebted to no man. What he has done for the family of mankind is freely done, without debt or credit. So by grace are ye saved, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. QUESTION. From what are we saved? ANSWER: From death or the grave. Then if Paul's testimony be true, that we are raised from death or the grave, the question would arise, By what are we raised? I answer, by grace; which is a favor shown to us by God alone; also, an unmerited one, not a debt; it is a free gift. Now to the word.

When man was helpless, what did God do to show them a favor? Jesus saith, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, may not perish but have everlasting life."

Thus we learn from the above scripture, that God has made provision for one class only, and not the whole family of mankind; if He has, all will get eternal life, for it is all the gospel affords; for, says Paul, The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth. So then, none but believers are saved from death. Then we must come to this conclusion; unbelievers have no part in the gospel plan. If so, it will take that faith that works by love, and purifies the heart, to bring us in favor with his gospel; for there is no life mentioned outside of the gospel. In 2 Tim. i. 10, that life and immortality only are brought to light in the gospel; also, in 1 John v. 11, 12; John says, This is the record that God has given to us ETERNAL LIFE, [no other life recorded in the Book of God, to be given to any one by Christ but eternal life.]

So this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life. For, says Jesus, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." So if he does not believe, there is no resurrection. How harmonious is the word of God.

Christ died for our sins, says Paul; also, Christ gave himself for our sins. Then Jesus says, "The Son of man came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." He says, I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death, etc. Isaiah says, "Thy dead men shall live." God's dead men will live. So the dead, (or God's dead men) believers, shall be raised incorruptible. So all must get an incorruptible life who get it in Christ; as Paul says, As in Adam all die, So all in Christ shall be made alive.

The text then, is easily solved while placing ourselves in a position where God's Spirit can shine into our minds and illuminate them. Thus the Spirit and the word agree.

THE TEXT SAYS; "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain." I ask to whom is this language addressed? I answer, the church. Well, we will allow for argument's sake, that Christ is not raised. What then? Paul says, their faith or fancy of future glory through a resurrection, is vain. For Christ alone can forgive sins. And if he is dead, there is no atonement made; for without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sins. Consequently, those who have supposed their sins forgiven, have fancifully imagined it, and are still in their sins. Then in harmony with his word; the wages of sin is death; also, sin when it is finished brings forth death. Then comes the 18th verse in harmony with the text; "Then they, also, which have fallen asleep in Christ, (or, supposed their sins forgiven) are perished." Hence we easily come to the same conclusion with Paul. If a man dies in his sins the law will eternally hold him; for there is no future living without repentance. Sins must first be forgiven; then when man goes down the law can't hold him, but he will be made free from the law of sin and death; consequently he will be delivered from the bondage of death, while others it holds in its grasp eternally. Thus we learn that repentance and forgiveness of sins only, will give life; for, Jesus said, "Think ye that those on whom the tower in Siloam fell, were sinners above all men that dwelt at Jerusalem? I tell you Nay; except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Also Acts xi. 18, "Then hath God granted repentance unto life, to the Gentiles." So we find in harmony with God's word, no life except ye repent.

Paul says in conclusion to the above supposed position, in verse 19, "If in this life only, we have hope in Christ, [that is, a mere fancied faith of the future, and suffer deprivations in this present life—no comfort, only air castles built by fancy minds] we are of all men most miserable." Well he might say thus; for he would be without God and without hope in the world.

To turn the scale, Paul says, "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept." Hence you may rejoice in the Scripture that saith, "I am he that liveth and was dead, but am alive forevermore." Because he lives, we shall live also. Surely we are to live, for he only can make suitable atonement for our sins; for John says, "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin;" also, "if we confess our sins, he is faithful to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." So in the resurrection of Christ we can say, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again to a hope of living by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Thus Paul keeps in harmony with the text in the 21st verse; "For since by man (Adam) came death, by man (Christ) came also the resurrection of the dead." It is the dead. So we see, it's plain by our descent from Adam, we are mortal and go to corruption, both good and bad, because we have a dying nature; and we would eternally remain there if no provision had been made. But Paul says, by Jesus came also the resurrection of the dead. A question arises, How was it wrought in Christ? 1. Jesus was without sin; so he made himself an offering for sin, and condemned sin in the flesh. Says Paul, Once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin, by the sacrifice of himself. So Christ is once offered to bear the sins of many. Question: How many? Answer. As many as put off their sins by righteousness and have found pardon of the same; as Peter says, According as his Divine power has given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that has called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us, exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that was in the world through lust. So it is summed up in a few words. How many will be raised? Just as many as get their sins washed away by the blood of Christ. Atonement is made for those only. Then comes in the giant text so easily solved, 22d verse, "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." The very language implies only those in Christ will live again.

In conclusion, I would say, keep the mind of the Spirit; then it is easy to solve hard problems. If you lack wisdom, ask of God. Don't contend with those that have not the Spirit of Christ. Better be called a coward, than to contend and lose the Spirit out of our hearts. Remember ever to keep the mind of the Spirit, and all will go well. If the Lord directs by his Spirit, it is the right direction. These are the strivings of your Br. in Christ.

AGE TO COME THEORY.

OBJECTIONS TO, BY A. BOYNTON.

"FORASMUCH then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy death, and him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death, were all their life-time subject to bondage."—Heb. ii. 14, 15.

The power of death, as we read the Scriptures, is not a personal being, but an agent, a result, or consequence of things. Disobedience brought sin into the world, and death by, (or as a result of) sin. The natural fleshly or animal desire, indulged, obeyed produced this sin, which brought not only sin in fact, but sin in condition, as the extinguishing a light in a dark place is not only an evil, but a consequence of the unnumbered evils of that darkness. In this condition the race have ever found themselves. Death is the common lot of all; not on account of moral character, but of condition. All are the "children of wrath;" of their father the devil; ruled by the carnal mind which is at enmity to God, not subject to his law, neither can be; which law is love; and its requirement, the affections, the disposition, heart, the main-spring of action, filial obedience. Here is the devil or death power which Christ came to destroy; the natural or wild olive tree nature. Will he accomplish the object? The word says, He shall reign until all enemies are put under his feet; and the last enemy is death. Where then is a child of the first Adam? Remember, by nature (natural generation) they are the children of wrath; of that wicked one. The vipers' brood are none the less vipers however young they may be; and all alike meet our hate and destruction. So Christ will crush out all the seed, give complete deliverance, and a clean universe. Amen.

But when will he do this? The prevailing idea is, away in the mystic future; generally limited however to the term 1,000 years, but so mystical it is, that no wonder some put it tens, or hundreds of thousands of years in the future; yea, to all infinity. So men lose themselves in their own darkness. The expression for "he (Christ) must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet," 1 Cor. xv. 25, is interpreted by most to mean a future millennial reign. We with all due deference say no. Are the saints to reign? How? With Christ. So he now reigns with his Father on his throne, as the anti-type of Joseph and Pharoah of Egyptian history. Christ is now reigning for the purpose of subjecting the world to the Father; and this position he occupies relatively until his foes are made his footstool. So says the record. When he comes then the end, "when he shall have delivered up," etc.; an expression signifying a work of past completion. The last enemy is death. When is this destroyed? The 54 verse tells us, at the resurrection. Amen. Right here, Jesus our Redeemer finishes his work, that "God may be all in all."—28 verse. We would suggest a hint to Br. G. A. S., and others, that in the selection of the long or chief timbers for God's building, it is important that we be very careful to see that they are plainly marked, not with symbols or figures of doubtful import, but unmistakably defined, else the whole building is marred, disarranged, destroyed.

WORK FOR GOD NOT LOST.

IN March 1854, Bishop Simpson and myself were passing up the Columbia River, from Portland, Oregon, to the Dalles. It was before the keels of noble steamers had vexed the waters of the Upper Columbia. At the Cascades, 70 miles from Portland, we took passage in an Indian canoe for the Dalles, fifty miles distant. The whole country was a wilderness, unoccupied save by a small company of U. S. military at the Dalles and a few daring whites, adventurers, and some of them men of dissolute habits and depraved morals. Besides these, the Indians were numerous. Our crew in the canoe were two Indians and three or four squaws. The passengers besides the bishop and myself, were two or three Indian dogs, and two white men more depraved than the dogs. Their hides—the men's—were full of mean whiskey, and each had a quart bottle full to replenish from as evaporation diminished the supply they had imbibed.

Their mouths were full of cursing, bitterness, and obscenity. Their foul dialect, employed for the purpose of irritating their clerical fellow-passengers, was very annoying. Once or twice a stern reprimand rose to the lips of the writer, and it was almost half uttered, but at a signal from the bishop it was repressed. After awhile one of the drunkards fell off into a condition of insensibility. The other became silent. At length the bishop very kindly inquired of him whether his mother were still living. He very eagerly answered that she was. Another question, "Is your mother a praying woman?" "O yes." "Do you think she is praying for you every day?" With deep feeling the answer came, "I have no doubt of it." Finding that he had struck a cord that vibrated, the bishop continued, "Do you suppose your mother knows the kind of life you are leading?" The sensibilities of the dissipated youth were stirred, the fountains of tears were unsealed, and with sobs and flowing tears the young man replied that "he would not have her know it for the world."

The subject was followed up by the bishop, with an earnest, feeling exhortation, which was apparently well received. The day passed away. We lodged at an Indian camp, and the next morning parted with our whiskey-bloated fellow-passengers. The bishop has probably never seen those men since; but the seed he sowed there by the wayside brought forth its harvest in God's own good time, as the writer learned more than ten years afterward.

In October 1864, as I was coming down the Upper Columbia in a splendid steamer, one of perhaps a hundred passengers, a well dressed, respectable looking gentleman introduced himself to me, informing me, that he was the young man to whom the bishop put those searching but kindly questions in the canoe in March 1854, and that that interview had been made a life-long blessing to him, "for," said he, "I have drank no more whiskey; I have led a sober industrious life; I have amassed a competence, and I am trying to lead a religious life." He ascribed it all, under God's blessing, to the faithfulness of the good bishop.

Who will say that "bread cast upon the waters," shall not be gathered in its due season? We may not witness the germination of the precious seed, but it will germinate whether we see it or not. It was not until June 1868, more than fourteen years after the labor was bestowed, that Bishop Simpson learned of its result. Toil on, Christian worker; since thy labor is not in vain in the Lord.—T. H. PEARNE, in The Christian Advocate.

GOD EVER-PRESENT.

FEW truths of Scripture are more readily admitted than the ubiquity of God. That God is everywhere at the same time, looks reasonable and is believed by the masses of Christendom. On this point the learned and the unlearned, the saint and the sinner agree. But how surprisingly few of any class sufficiently realize what they believe and acknowledge? Every one who acknowledges this omnipresence, acknowledges that he is continually in the presence of his Maker; and that Maker, God. Not in the presence of a certain etherial, or electric substance in which he lives and moves and has his being, but in the presence of the intelligent, eternal, invisible, self-existent Jehovah, who is always "a God at hand and not afar off."

Do I say too much, if I say that few sufficiently realize this—realize it as David did, when he said to God, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven thou art there; if I make my bed in hell behold thou art there." Showing that no place is destitute of the Spirit of the Almighty. If men did sufficiently realize this, would sinners be so bold, or would Christians feel so weak? Yet it is for this very purpose that men should be conscious of Divine omnipresence, that God has written his ubiquity in Scripture, and stamped it upon creation.

This is a matter of plain revelation, and should be a source of perpetual comfort and relief to the Christian, and of continual fear and restraints to the wicked.

A general may feel secure when his enemies are defeated, and he rests in his strength surrounded by his army; but his security and the strength, however great it may be, is not to be compared with the power of that Being who surrounds every individual person either to uphold and bless him in righteousness, or else to frown upon or condemn him in his wickedness.

Every person should have a clear sense of this Divine presence, and especially every one who is trying to do the will of his heavenly Master. Every Christian should not only believe but should feel that the God whom he serves is present with him, and that, at all times, in all places, and in all power, truly, literally, and personally.

No doctrine short of this, has been revealed by God to man, and certainly no other is worthy to be attributed to Omnipotence. Jesus meant to teach this doctrine when he said to his disciples, "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world." "And where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Moses knew this truth when he forsook Egypt not fearing the wrath of the King, "for he endured as seeing him who is invisible."

Knowing then this attribute of Deity, what manner of men ought we to be as Christians in "all holy conversation and godliness." How little foolish talking and speaking should be heard from us who know and acknowledge that we are in the immediate presence of the eternal Jehovah? How few worldly and sinful amusements should stain our lives who believe that the recording angel is continually before us, from whose record judgment will be given at the last day! How little too ought we to care if the world forsake us, and cast out our names as evil, "for the Son of man's sake," when God himself is really with us and in us? And how bold also, ought we to be in opposing sin in every way, when thus so blessedly supported?

Then let every Christian say with one of old, "I have set the Lord always before me." Let this be his strength. And let every sinner feel that God fills "heaven and earth" with his presence, and that "all things are naked and open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do."—Selected.

The Christian who has put aside religion because he is in worldly company, is like a man who has put off his shoes because he is walking among thorns.

Man is like a watch; if evening and morning he is not wound up with prayer and circumspection, he is unprofitable and false, or serves to mislead.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

HOW SHE WAS LIFTED OVER.

ONE day a little boy asked his mother to let him lead his little sister out on the green grass. She had just begun to run alone, and could not step over anything that lay in the way. His mother told him that he might lead out the little girl, but charged him not to let her fall. I found them at play, very happy in the field.

I said, "You seem very happy, George. Is this your sister?"

"Yes sir."

"Can she walk alone?"

"Yes, sir, on smooth ground."

"And how did she get over those stones which lie between us and the house?"

"O, sir, mother charged me to be careful that she did not fall, and so I put my hands under her arms and lifted her up when she came to a stone, so that she need not hit her little foot against it."

"That is right, George; and I want to tell you one thing. You see now how to understand that beautiful text, 'He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.' God charges his angels to lead and lift his people over difficulties, just as you have lifted little Anne over these stones. Do you understand it now?"

"O yes, sir, and I shall never forget it while I live."

Can one child thus take care of another, and cannot God take care of those who trust him? Surely he can! There is not a child who may read this story, over whom he is not ready to give his holy angels charge.—Selected.

A MANLY ANSWER.

ALL honor to the boy who cannot be laughed out of doing right. A writer in the "American Messenger" says:

Five boys, pupils in the boarding-school, were in the room. Four of them contrary to the express rules, engaged in a game of cards. The fifth was not standing and looking on to see how the game would go, but engaged in some work of his own. One of the players was called out.

"Come," said the others to their companion; "it's too bad to have the game stop in the middle. Come and take his place."

"I do not know one card from another."

"That makes no difference. We will teach you. Come. Do not let our sport be spoiled."

The boy perceived that this was the decisive moment. Ah, just such are the critical points, sometimes the turning point of life. His resolution was instantly taken. He made no more excuses, but at once planted himself square upon principle.

"My father does not wish me to play cards and I shall not act contrary to his wishes."

This ended the matter. It did more. It established his position among his companions. It compelled their respect, and preserved him from temptation in the future.

Such a boy inspires confidence. The incident may seem small in itself, but it gives promise of the future better than thousands of gold. Three sterling qualities are manifested; a conscientious regard for the wishes of parents, superiority to fear of the ridicule of his companions, and decision. These qualities form a shield and a buckler in regard to all temptation. Happy the boy who is possessed of them. You would expect that his career would be honorable and successful.

Years have passed. That boy has become a man. Various and trying have been the scenes through which he has been called. Severe have been the temptations to which he has been exposed. But he has come forth as gold. No parent weeps, no friend blushes for him.

Are you a son, rich in youth, rich in hope, rich in a good conscience? Always regard the wishes of your parents.—Selected.

THE BOY WHO WOULD NOT BE A SILENT LIAR.

THERE were prizes to be given in Willie's school, and he was very anxious to merit one of them. As Willie was young, and had never had much chance to learn, he was behind the other boys in all his studies except writing. As he had no hope to excel in anything but writing, he made up his mind to try for the special prize for that with all his might; And he did try so that his copy-book would have done honor to a boy twice his age. When the prizes were awarded, the Chairman of the Committee held up two copy-books and said; "It would be difficult to say which of these two books is better than the other, but for one copy in Willie's which is not only superior to Charlie's, but to every other copy in the same book. This copy, therefore, gains the prize."

Willie's heart beat high with hope which was not unmixed with fear. Blushing to his temples, he said: "Please, sir, may I see that copy?"

"Certainly," replied the Chairman, looking somewhat surprised.

Willie glanced at the copy, and then handing the book back, said; "Please sir, that is not my writing. It was written by an upper class boy, who took my book by mistake one day instead of his own."

"O, O," said the chairman, "that may alter the case." The two books went back to the Committee, who after comparing them carefully, awarded the prize to Charlie. The boys laughed at Willie. One said he was silly to say anything about the mistake.

"I wouldn't have told," said another.

"Nor I," added a third boy laughing. "The copy was in your book, and you had a right to enjoy the benefit of it."

But in spite of all their quizzing, Willie felt that he was right. "It would not have been the truth," he replied, "if I had not told who wrote the copy. I would rather hold fast the truth than have a prize, for truth is better than gold."

"Hurrah for Willie!" "three cheers for Willie!" "Well done Willie!" shouted the boys, and Willie went home to his work happier than he could have done if by means of a silent lie he had won the prize.

You see now, if Willie had not spoken he would have told a silent lie. His silence would have made a false impression on the minds of the Committee, and he would have wronged Charlie out of the prize. We hope our little readers will resolve never to be guilty of silent lying. Hold fast the truth.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents, Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

HENGSTENBERG AND THE HEBREW MONARCHY.

[Concluded from last week.]

IV. That the professing church reaches into the Millennium. This is another of the assumptions with which our Professor confuses himself, and vitiates his reasoning. The Millennium, or thousand years' reign, begins with the glorious Advent of the Mighty One, and during his reign there is neither professing church nor real church, for the professing church has been dealt with as Babylon, and the real church glorified and exalted in power, sharing in a dominion which shall not pass away. Not distinguishing this, leads the Professor into that mingled truth and falsehood in which he teaches that the blinded Jews shall be converted to Christ, and then play a prominent part in the conversion of the world. Now it is true, and gracious truth, that the Jews shall be converted, and that their conversion will have an immense power over the nations of the earth—"life from the dead"—but it is not true that the Jews will be converted by the gospel, or brought into the church, or that they will do any thing in bringing nations into the church. All that we consider gospel has come to an end before the Jews are awakened, for it is only by seeing him in his glory, and finding his deliverance, that their hearts are pierced and broken (compare Zech. xii. with Rom. xi.) As to the Jews entering the church, there is no such institution in existence at the time when the Jews have their sins blotted out, and the darkness chased away forever. Those who once composed the true church, with hidden life, are the saints and mighty ones who have descended in glory with their divine Lord. The thrones are set, and they have come to judge and reign. Vast moral influence the restored Hebrews will doubtless have over the subject nations of the earth, but there are no additions to the church, the body of Christ, for that was perfect and complete when this trumpet voice called them from land, and sea, and Hades, and appointed their places in his kingdom. The nations find their home in Israel, but can never reach that church of the first-born which was married to the Lamb amid raptures and solemnities of surpassing glory. When our Professor gets a firm grasp on this reality, he will learn that church life, and church ordinances, and church perils, are all gone forever when Israel is restored, for that great work is in the porch of a new dispensation.

Hengstenberg confesses in one of his works, that the ground of Origen was substantially vicious, and that Luther in a measure emancipated the church from such influence, but it was only in a small measure, and exegesis will never be a reliable science until every vestige of the evil thing be entirely swept away. A man may prove or disprove any thing that enters his imagination, so long as the allegorising method remains. It is in consequence of cleaving to such unsound method, that we have the Professor representing the prophets as painting the glory of the Christian church (a thing which they never saw), while they are in truth describing the glory of Judah and Jerusalem in the latter day. We commend to his notice the mystery hidden from ages and generations, as it comes out in Ephesians and Colossians, revealed to the holy apostles and prophets of an advanced dispensation.

V. But now in the light of this statement, another work remains to be rapidly executed, an examination of the "express testimonies" which the Professor has discovered against the "future glory of the kingdom of Israel."

(a) The words of our Lord to the woman of Samaria: "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him."

"With this utterance of the Lord, the idea that Jerusalem shall once again in the future, acquire the position of a centre, is irreconcilable."

(b) The words of Peter to believers: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people."

(c) The words of our Lord in Matthew: "Therefore, I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a people (ethnei—nation) bringing forth the fruits thereof." He says these words "afford little prospect of a new and glorious Israelitish kingdom."

The reader will perceive that I have refuted these objections in anticipation, so that only a few words of supplement are needed. The hour was come when there would be local centre on earth, but that hour will terminate when our dispensation closes, and when the Lord in personal glory reigns in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem before his ancients gloriously. "And at that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered into it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem."—Jer. iii. 17. Hence, it is clear, that the centre shall be restored again. True, enough, the supreme princes of the triumphal age are described by Peter, and they inherit a glory in which Israel cannot share, for the saints take the kingdom. But Israel shall have all the glory promised to them, in country, monarchy, and temple, and become not only blessed themselves, but a blessing to all nations. Not to restored Israel, but to a nobler generation, belong the majesty of power and the glories of the kingdom. This, however, does not destroy the hope of Israel, but is the assurance of its accomplishment, for it is under the reign of Christ and his saints, his princes and mighty ones, that the quietness of Israel is secured.

The Professor proceeds to argue against the restoration of Jerusalem, by adducing passages in which Zion and Jerusalem are employed in the spiritual sense to designate the church, which imply, he says, "that the day of the physical Jerusalem is gone by forever." If there were any such passages, it would not follow that Jerusalem literal is never to be restored. This would still depend on the nature and amount of the positive evidence. But the kind of success which our critic has had in finding passages remains to be seen. He gives us two passages, the first in Gal. iv. 25, 26: "For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." The reader will bear in mind that our author insists that the church is the continuation of Israel, and that this is one of his proof texts. It is a sad illustration of the "exegetical tact" of which he speaks. The passage gives us two Jerusalems, one below and one above, but the church happens to be neither. The one below then was, and was in bondage. consequently the church was not its continuation. The other was above, and to the best of our knowledge has never yet descended. When that sublime metropolis is revealed, church days will be over, and the kingdom will have reached its splendor and perfection. The second passage to which he refers, is in Heb. xii. 22, 23; but it merits very different treatment to that which the Professor could afford. The passage and the context will furnish a suitable finish for this article. Have we actually come to Mount Zion, which was in old time glorious in situation, the joy of the whole earth? Has the New Jerusalem come down with its golden streets, where the essential light of Godhead burns, and shines, and sanctifies throughout, so that inside neither luminary nor temple is needed? Swedenborg gives the date of its descent, but I have not seen it yet, and considering the stupendous girth and attitude, if here, it ought to be visible. Who has seen the "innumerable company of angels?" Our Lord promised that we should see them. "Hereafter, shall ye see heaven open, and the angels ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." It will be a fine sight to faithful Hebrews, to see the effulgence from the higher city pouring down to their own holy mountain, and the bright messengers of God ascending and descending on the business of the King.

Who has seen the general assembly, and the church of the first-born? If I understand the matter, it is not born yet, but on some auspicious day will come into victorious manifestation. That will surely be the time when the "spirits of just men are made perfect," for we cannot conceive of their perfection until they put on their glorified bodies, in full summed personality. Hence we have come to these realities only by faith and hope, not yet by sight and actual possession. The context confirms this view of the matter. God shook the earth at Sinai. Haggai predicts another shaking more terrible, which includes both heaven and earth. "Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land." Paul referring to this promise in connection with the first shaking at Sinai, says: "Whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." It needs no proving to a careful reader, that the kingdom of power and glory is not manifested until after the shaking, and the shaking is still in the future. The inventory is given of things which cannot be shaken, and when that day arrives, we possess the inheritance of which we already have the title deeds. We have come to these things by well-grounded belief, by living hope, and ardent desire, and holding fast by the eternal life which God hath given to us, we shall one day come in possession and everlasting enjoyment. We are receiving the kingdom. There is something like a continuous work of reception as we grow in spiritual preparation for the glory which is to be revealed.

"STUDY TO BE QUIET."

NOTES ON 1 THESS. IV. 11.

"THE will of God," so the apostle tells us, "is our sanctification;" one word, and one thing, having, nevertheless, many parts, or at least aspects. One part of sanctification, quietness, "the ornament of a quiet spirit," is brought before us in our text. Do we not specially need it in these unquiet days?

1. Notice, first, the grace to be sought. He says, "Study to be quiet." Here we have both the object to be pursued, and also the way in which it is to be found.

(1.) The object—quietness—"to be quiet."

Speaking generally, this is the opposite of that restlessness which sin has brought. For the wicked are like the troubled sea, which cannot rest. Be quiet, therefore, unmurmuring, without those strifes and wraths, and envyings, and swellings, and tumults, which St. Paul mourned over in the Corinthians. Lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. And let the peace of God rule in your heart.

More specially, "to be quiet" is to be unmoved when the world rages or despises; the same in riches or poverty, neither puffed up by one, nor cast down by the other; the same though others outstrip us in this world; still quiet, even though false, or weak brethren judge us, or cause trouble.

The root of which peace is love, not self-love; for self-love is the root of all unquietness; while love, as we see in God, is the root of endless peace, even of that peace which is God's own, and which passes all understanding. This love, which spreads its blessings over all, which relieves the poor, melts the malicious, forgives the injurious, overcomes the violent, is ever quiet. The earth is noisy. Heaven, like God, is quiet.

Nothing but love can give this quietness. Narrow circumstances may shut a man up, but cannot quiet him. Like a beast in a cage, or a bridled horse, he will chafe and stamp. Such shutting up is not the quietness of the text.

(2.) Now see the way in which this quietness is to be sought. The apostle says, "Study to be quiet"—study. The word in the original is a remarkable one, and might be translated, "Be ambitious." It means literally that we should love the thing we seek, because it will be a glory to us. Thus the apostle says here, "Be ambitious to be quiet." Let this be your ambition, not to make a stir or tumult, but to be quiet.

This quietness, then, is not a thing which comes naturally to us. On the contrary, we see here that it may require as much study and ambition as winning a kingdom. And, indeed, it is a kingdom; for it is the rule of love. Other things are natural to us—activity to some, sloth to others; but geometry comes naturally to no one; Greek and Hebrew come naturally to no one; if ever we are to know them we must study. So must we study and learn to be quiet. Paul says, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, to be content." He had learned to be quiet.

And God has given us great helps in studying this. He has given us a perfect Pattern in Christ, and a perfect Teacher in the Holy Ghost, and many are the exhortations He addresses to us to practise conformity to the Pattern, for only by practice are we made perfect.

2. But the text goes on to give us several particular directions, showing us the means we should specially use in "studying to be quiet." And this is important, for our success in any matter depends very much on our using the right means. If we go the right way to work, a thing is much easier done.

Two means are specially referred to here—first, "doing our own business," and then, "working with our own hands." The first directs us not to go beyond our line or measure; the second bids us not to yield to idleness.

(1.) "Do your own business." This is just like the advice given to the Corinthians, to "abide in the calling" in which God had called them. The surest way "to be quiet," is to abide in our calling; "not to stretch beyond our line," as Paul says to those same Corinthians. If we stretch beyond this, we may become "busy-bodies in other men's matters," and this is not God's will. A person who has no "business" to do is in peril of many things; his ear in peril of hearing, his tongue of saying, his hand of doing, his feet of going, wrong.

Therefore see the exhortations in the Epistles to do our proper work. If called to ministry, wait on that ministry; if called to teaching, wait on that; if called to rule, then rule; if to give, then give; if to humbler work and service, then do that humbler work meekly. Every man has his own gift. Each member's work is special; and this in the church as much as in the world. "Are all apostles?" Certainly not. Some therefore teach; some hear, and say, Amen. Some plough; some rule. One is the husband, another the wife. "Having therefore gifts differing according to the grace given," let each "do his own business" in his own calling.

This rule is clearly both fitting and profitable. Fitting, for what place can we expect to fill suitably if we cannot do what God has called us to? And profitable; for surely our own business must serve us better than another man's. What coat will fit us so well as our own? Think of a painter with an awl, or a carpenter with a paint brush; or a ruler fiddling, like Nero, or a fiddler ruling.

And yet the temptation is ever to do another's work. So in politics, we see men who cannot rule their own house prescribing confidently for the ruling of an empire; and so in the church we have souls, "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," who would teach their teachers, and show their spiritual fathers how to live and serve Christ.

The Bible gives us many warnings as to this going beyond our calling. Can we forget Uzzah, who not being a priest, yet put forth his hand to uphold the ark, which was only to be touched by Aaron's sons; and Uzziah, who went into the holy place, and burnt incense, though not of the priestly family; both of whom brought judgment upon themselves by doing what was not their business? And the Epistle of Jude shows that this will be one of the special evils of the last days of the Christian Church, when men will "perish in the gainsaying of Korah." But further,

(2.) We are to "work with our own hands," for idleness is the certain cause of restlessness. The mind unoccupied is never at rest, as we see in dreams and sleep. Work keeps it quiet. As soon as the fall came, therefore, God in mercy laid work, and heavy work, on Adam. Only think of the sins we should all fall into if we had not to work. See the follies those are guilty of who have nothing to do.

As to the special work of each, we see it is not limited to one trade or one calling. "Let our brethren," says Paul to Titus, "maintain honest trades for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful." And again, "Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." And again, to the Thessalonians, "For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies. Now them which are such we command and exhort by the Lord Jesus, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread." Here we come back to the same word, "quietness"—that "with quietness they work, and eat their own bread."

Surely some are in danger of unquietness from not doing their own work. I have seen Christian brothers and sisters neglecting plain duties of their calling for things which they call spiritual: brothers neglecting their business, and so getting into difficulties; sisters neglecting their homes and children, which is their peculiar sphere of service. Can we hear the truth too often, "Study to be quiet, and to do your own business?" Alas, yes! We hear it too often, if we hear it not to practise it.

The apostle ends this exhortation by saying it is a command—"Work with your own hands, as I commanded you." Work, therefore, is as much laid on us as prayer. And, indeed, if prayer is a sacrifice, work may be no less so, if in our calling, whatsoever we do, we do all to God's glory. The Lord give us grace thus to do His will, and in it to find that quietness of heart which the world can neither give nor take away!

FRANCE AND ROME.

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

PARIS, March 22, 1870.

THERE is still a good deal of doubt and hesitation as to the course of action likely to be pursued by the imperial government toward Rome. The French Ambassador is on his road hither on leave of absence, on dit, for three weeks. It seems odd that he should come away at this moment; especially when it still seems by no means certain whether he will be replaced by a special representative, or whether the latter would even be received if he went there. I cannot help thinking that the government is watching the tide of public opinion, to see in which direction it will run, in order perhaps to proportion the energy of their policy to the feelings of the nation. A good deal may perhaps depend, both in Rome and Paris, on what that manifestation may be; though I do not think that its character and tendency can long escape the observation even of the most blind.

Blow follows blow upon the Roman Council, and the ribs of that venerable assembly must be sound indeed if they can stand all the thumping they receive. A memorial from Dœllinger, Montalembert's protest, a third letter from the Pere Gratry, a second letter from the Bishop of Orleans to the Archbishop of Mechlin, and, coupled with the interest excited by the action of the government, seem to be rousing public opinion, even in this country, to an earnestness and attention on the subject of the great religious question of the day, such as have not for long been displayed. The complete state of calm into which politics have temporarily fallen is greatly in favor of a due consideration being given to other matters. The newspapers seem all to be suddenly transformed into religious organs, and are filled with extracts from the above named writings. The publications themselves sell, in consequence, in a way altogether unusual with such subjects, and the result can hardly be other than to create a very widely spread movement among a class who have hitherto stood almost aloof from and wholly indifferent to such discussions. The first letter of the Bishop of Orleans, especially, is most skilfully framed to touch a chord in the public feeling of this country. The Bishop, though I cannot call him a Gallican, is a thorough Frenchman, and knows well how to stir the minds of his countrymen both by style and matter. There is much that will vibrate through the nation in his last utterance, as, most assuredly, there is such a tone of warning in it to those he is contending with as might well make them yet pause in carrying out their designs. In the following passage, for instance, he says he will "tell the true state of things," and he does so pretty plainly:

"In the ninth century we had the misfortune," he writes, "to lose about one-half of the church. In the sixteenth century we lost at least a third of the remaining half. At the present moment the half probably of what is left to us is seriously attacked. What we have above all, therefore to do, is to think how to win all this back again. The courageous bishops of America, Germany and England are struggling to do this: our heroic missionaries are spending their life's blood in it. And you, you would multiply their difficulties and furnish new weapons, a new battlefield to the antagonists they meet everywhere on their road! You would, as many American bishops said to me only yesterday, suddenly change the entire ground of religious controversy for the whole of the Catholic clergy who live among a Protestant population! And even among Catholic nations, how many men in France and Belgium, you well know, Monseigneur—how many in Germany, Spain, Italy, everywhere, God knows, either believe not at all, or are among those 'meek in faith,' on whom St. Paul tells us to have compassion."

And then, as to France, the "truth" is told again as follows:

"Yes, Monseigneur, we must look at things as they are. I can appreciate, as well as you, all that is touching in Catholic manifestation. But I say that in the case of France especially it would be a strange delusion, something really too puerile, to imagine that those lists of subscriptions (the Bishop alludes, I presume, to the Peter's Pence), put forward with such noisy ostentation, express the true state of feeling in our country."

"The true state in France," he goes on, "and even elsewhere, is this. All the great bodies of the state—parliaments, senates, corps legislatifs, councils of state, public administrations, the magistracy, the bar, the youth of the schools, the army, the navy, commerce, finance, the arts, all the liberal professions, the workmen of our towns, the electors of our country districts, the great mass of those who among us and elsewhere decide upon the direction of affairs—in one word the nation—it, assuredly, is not there where you think it is."

What a catalogue! what a confession! A bishop compelled to avow that both "in his own country" and "elsewhere" his church is estranging "all this" away from her; and that, not by faithfully fighting for the truth, but by insisting on the promulgation of what he regards as errors. Surely so sweeping a condemnation was hardly ever before pronounced by an episcopal mouth.

And after the "nations" come the "governments." "You know," he writes, "they all have a tendency to separate—to isolate themselves from the Church. All, without an exception, have taken up an expectant and defensive attitude in face of the Council. Manifestly there also there is great peril. Is it intended, I ask, to make the separation of church and state the order of the day, to urge on the prompt abolition of concordats, or the creation of organic articles where they do not exist already? You will say no; that my fears are exaggerated, and that the Church has the 'promise of immortality.' The Church may have such a promise, but I know that nations have none such. I know that Spain has it not, nor Portugal, nor Germany. I know that Brazil is sick, and so is Mexico; that the old Spanish colonies go on from revolution to revolution. And my mournful conviction, Monseigneur, is that what you are preparing to do will give a new and fearful shock to the Church throughout all those countries."

To such fears as the above, the Bishop knows, he says, that there are those who reply only by the expression of unlimited confidence.

"They say: 'The great evil of the day is the subversion of the principle of authority. Let us only elevate that anew in the church, we shall save society as well.' My reply is simply this: As to the church never, perhaps, at any period did there exist greater obedience or veneration toward the Holy Father. It is not in that quarter that the principle of authority is compromised; nor is there any need to lift up in the church that which is not thrown down. As to society, Monseigneur, I am far from founding such high hopes on your definitions. To believe that by proclaiming the infallibility of the Pope you will drive back revolution is, to my mind, to indulge in one of those chimeras with which, in human societies, parties in desperate circumstances delude themselves when on the very verge of a final crisis. My conviction, on the contrary, Monseigneur, is that the ablest and deepest thinkers among revolutionists feel any thing but apprehensive of what you are about to do."

With respect to the proceedings in the Council itself, the Bishop says that signatures have been sought in order, as it were, to "force on" the question. He does not assert that there has been actual "moral pressure" put upon any individuals; but he has a right to be astonished that "Judges of the Faith" have been called on to decide without hearing the cause. The consequence of this has been a counter petition, and hence a profound division laid bare to the eyes of the whole world! Was it for that they had come together, and was that the work of peace they had to accomplish? For three months all sorts of questions had been agitated, but nothing done. Was everything to be neglected for the sake of an irrelevant subject? Or, after passing a few decrees just to appear to have done something, was the infallibility question to be put and carried all of a sudden? But such a mode of proceeding would astound the whole world, when it learnt that what was no part of the Council had proved to be the whole Council.

On the "unanimity" of the Council the Bishop expresses himself thus:

"Above all you cannot speak of unanimity, nor allege the 'general sentiments of the episcopacy and the faithful in Germany and France,' when nearly the whole German episcopacy is against you; when its gravest bishops after having, from Fulda downwards, expressed their fears, have just reiterated them with so much force; when so many French bishops and so many American bishops, not to speak of others, have associated themselves with that act, and will stand by them in the discussion, if, peradventure, you insist in forcing it upon us."

The above extracts will suffice perhaps, at this advanced stage of the question, as a specimen of the tone of the Bishop's remonstrances.

The Revue Chretienne (of M. le Pasteur de Prepense) publishes a translation of the article written in America by Mr. Bigelow, lately United States Minister here, and host of the Pere Hyacinthe at New York. The journals have reproduced long extracts from the above publication, which are read with great interest.

There has also appeared here, in connection with the above subject, a very remarkable letter in French, signed "Bjerring, American citizen of Baltimore." It is published in the Union Chretienne, a monthly review, edited by the learned Dr. Guette, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, but now a member of the Orthodox Russian church and a Doctor in Divinity of the University of Moscow. The letter is addressed directly to the Pope by the writer, who professes until that day to have been a "fervent and sincere Roman Catholic." He has labored, he says, in the cause of his church, both as a theologian and historian, and public writer, in almost all parts of the world, and latterly as a professor in the Catholic Seminary of Baltimore. After having long shut his eyes obstinately to the vices of the Roman system, and attributed them to individuals, and not to the church, the publication of the Syllabus first roused serious doubts in his mind. It was impossible, he felt, that "in order to be a good Christian one must cease to be a good citizen, shut one's eyes to all enlightenment, and walk backwards into the darkness of the middle ages." But even still, he says, he held on to his faith, until the sight of a council assembled at Rome to "make the doctrine of the Syllabus and the Infallibility of the Pope dogmatical," put an end to all his hesitation. He protests with great force against doctrines "opposed to all laws human and divine;" against the "deplorable conflict raised up between the church and society;" against the "sacrilegious condemnation of all progress and science."

For himself, he takes refuge in the Orthodox Eastern church, "which has no King-Pope, which does not confound the temporal with the spiritual, which does not impose celibacy on its ministers, nor sell indulgences to build temples, nor exhibit such a monstrous contradiction as a Supreme Pontiff who at one moment celebrates the eucharist and the next signs a death warrant." There is much more in the letter very powerfully written. But I abstain from quoting further because its contents may, perhaps, be already known in America. I notice it here because its appearance and language have attracted much attention and surprise.

SECTARIANISM.

I LEARNED long ago that it is not with men we are at war, but with doctrines and sentiments. I do not therefore, see any reason why we should act like the sons of Ishmael toward each other. A man embraces a false sentiment—what then? Is he therefore a hypocrite, a scoundrel, or a liar? Who of all of us do not hold some sentiments which may be wrong? Shall we therefore fall on each other with words and acts of cruelty? What little Pope among us will start up and say, "I am right—you are all wrong?" Is not every man entitled to respect, love, kindness, and consideration? Will it reform any man to look at him with a countenance fraught with wrath and thunder, and call him hard names? But the man is in a fatal error—what then? Will it make him see his error and our truth by appearing toward him unkind, vinegar-faced and cloudy? Will turning him out of doors, by treating him with such cold contempt that he cannot remain in our company, draw him any nearer to the truth and to Christ? This is not the policy of the Galilean. The enemies of Christ said before him, "Behold he receiveth sinners and eateth with them." Hear the reply of the Son of God to such charges: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

One of the primary laws of reformation, both in doctrine and in practice, is association. Jesus came down from heaven that he might associate with men and reform them. It does not make us sinners to talk with, walk with, eat with, worship with sinners, of necessity. It does not make them saints to let them all see us shun them, and treat them with contempt. When will men learn that bigotry, sectarianism, coldness, contempt, stiffness and reserve, are not attractive elements? When will men learn that they cannot scold, drive, frighten or repulse human beings into truth? When shall we learn that if men are brought into truth at all, it will be done by association, love, plainness, frankness, kindness and argument?

Select a family of eight or ten members—one of the members embraces a fatal sentiment—fatal to the interests of the whole—what is to be done? When the hour of worship arrives, shall we with cold contempt, show him he is unwelcome in the worshipping circle? Will that make him love our truth and our spirit more? Shall we refuse to walk with him to the place of worship on Sunday because he sometimes goes to a place of false worship? Will that make him love true or false worship more? Shall we treat him with haughty and scornful reserve when he wishes to take part in the worship? Will that incline him to go with us? Shall we not rather help him in all he does attempt right? Shall we not say amen when he does say the truth? And when we do say nay, nay, say it like Christians, and not like savages. But I know well the sentiments of community on these points. Here is the creed of the sectarian community; "Go with us or we go against you." "Help build up my church, or I want nothing to do with you." "Be somebody or nobody." This creed is not universal—there are many honorable exceptions to it. May we not hope the exceptions will multiply?—Selected by W. H. S.

PRAYER is a retirement from earth to attend on God, and hold correspondence with him that dwells in heaven. The things of this world therefore, must be commanded to stand by for a season, and to abide at the foot of the mount while we walk up higher to offer up our sacrifices as Abraham did, and to meet our God.

EMELINE WOOD, Albany, N. Y., writes: Dear brothers and sisters, I am so sick I want you to pray for me, and all alone, only my precious Saviour, Bible, and HERALD, which is such a source of comfort. What could I do without it; it brings the dear ones so near when I read their productions; and I bless God for it. I am too sick to write, but your prayers will be answered. Do write me too; you that are in the habit of it, or any of the dear ones; it will make me so happy, and cheer me up much. Precious Br. Wolcott, writes me and cares for me. May our Father and his dear Son reward him greatly. I know that you all love me, but no more than I do you; may you all be much blest is my prayer for you. May you all be precious in the sight of the Lord.

JOHN SMOCK, Toms River, N. J., writes; I feel thankful for the continued visits of the HERALD OF LIFE. It is too good a counselor for me to be without. To it, and the Bible, I look for counsel and instruction. The one tells of good things to come, when Christ shall return in his glory, the other investigates and encourages. Well, praise the Lord, for his goodness and mercy endureth forever. I would love to see you and converse together. Yours in hope of eternal life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 20, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE ANNIVERSARY MEMORIAL.

The Passover Feast, as a memorial of our "Lord's death till he come," was kept in this city last Friday evening by a large number of the brethren and sisters to their joy and comfort. It was a deeply interesting season, and pleasure was seen on every countenance while we called to mind our redemption by the blood of Christ and His coming again in glory to deliver the purchase of that blood from the bondage of death and corruption, to die no more.

We judge that all present were encouraged to press forward till our Lord's return. Some were with us who had come many miles for the purpose, and we judge they felt well paid for their labor in coming. We trust to meet ere long at our Lord's table in his kingdom, to see him as He is, and be like him.

FUTURE LIFE: CAN IT BE DESERVED?

"Justification of life" is necessarily gratuitous. Sinful man can no more deserve immortality, or work himself up to it either in soul or body, than a dying animal can work itself up into an archangel. It is the "gift of God." The whole humanity is saved by the gift of Christ. The soul enters into life, and the redemption of the body follows at the resurrection. (Read carefully Romans viii. 1-14). Thus this doctrine is fatal to Unitarianism in all its forms."—Rev. Edward White, on "Life in Christ Only."

THAT justification of life is gratuitous, is a truth. But has not Br. White pressed his following remarks too far? If a poor man is promised an inheritance on certain conditions, to be complied with on his part, and he fulfills those conditions, does he not "deserve" to receive the thing promised? The promise might have been wholly gratuitous and be made to one who had no claim for it; yea, he might be wholly unworthy of it; but after the promise is made, and the conditions are fully complied with, shall it be said he does not "deserve" it any more "than a dying animal" does to be "an archangel?" Can our worthy brother tell us the difference between deserving a thing and being worthy of it? Would not a distinction be a sort of theological "hair-splitting?"

Jesus tells us, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . neither can they die any more," etc.—Luke xx. 35, 36. Now, to be worthy of a thing is to be deserving of it: and to deserve a thing is to be worthy of it. Our Lord being the Judge, then, "sinful man can" pursue such a course, under God's government of grace, as to "deserve immortality," and to have it granted him, through "the resurrection from the dead:" and God "is faithful and just too" to bestow it upon him, as well as "to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John i. 9.

That it is a gift, nevertheless, is true; but it is a gift upon conditions required; and those complied with, who shall say the reconciled sinner does not "deserve" it? If he does not "deserve" it, it is because he has refused or neglected the terms on which it was promised, viz., "The obedience of faith."

Br. White thinks the "doctrine," as he has stated it, "is fatal to Unitarianism in all its forms." As to Unitarianism we have nothing to say now: but the doctrine as he has presented it is very far from being "fatal" to Universalism; so far from it, it is the very basis of that doctrine. A Universalist may admit our friend's position, that no sinner can possibly "deserve" the "justification of life," and maintain it is wholly a gift or gratuity, from first to last, or to its full and final consummation; and then he might say, "God is no respecter of persons," therefore He will bestow the gift upon all sinners alike, for none can by any means possibly "deserve" it; hence all men will have the gift of eternal life, or immortality.

How can our English friend meet such a conclusion, unless he recedes from his sweeping position and maintains that a sinner, under God's present government of grace, can "deserve" to receive the gift promised on condition of faith, etc.

We have been led to make these remarks from a firm persuasion that if our English friends do not modify, or advance from their present position, they will find Universalism will overrun them, as it already seems to be advancing upon them. They evidently have minds among them who are taking advantage of such points as Br. White and other Life believers are holding, in England, to push on to a universal, or nearly a universal salvation. We implore them to review their stand-point, and see if life future and eternal are not both conditional, depending on the reception of terms which are clearly set forth in this dispensation of grace, under which all men are born; and that to be born again from the dead is the gift of God to those, and to those only, who are "accounted worthy," or who "deserve" it by having accepted God's plan of deliverance through the one who is "The Resurrection and the Life."

"THE RAINBOW."

THIS English Magazine, like our Bible Examiner which we commenced alone in 1842, has thus far had a hard struggle to continue its existence. It was commenced between six and seven years since, by WILLIAM LEASK, D. D. It is only one year since we saw it for the first time. Dr. Leask, it would seem has felt several times as if he should be compelled to discontinue or suspend it, for want of support pecuniarily. It seems, however, there are some who are striving to encourage him to hold on. In the number for April, which has just reached us, under the head of "The Great Theological Reformation," he gives us extracts from a number of letters expressive of the joy and satisfaction which his labors have given them, and encouraging him to continue therein.

We cannot but hope that he may be sustained, and that the "Rainbow," may more and more clearly mark the Divine glory in the exhibitions it shall give of the Divine attributes and the character of the Divine administration over the creatures God has made, so that all may see that "GOD IS LOVE."

The feelings of Dr. Leask on the reception of letters of encouragement, we have experienced years ago, when struggling onward with the Bible Examiner in this country from 1842 up to 1863, with two suspensions; one of two years and one of six months. During those years we struggled with the same or similar trials as he has now to encounter, and were occasionally encouraged by such letters as he is receiving. But in 1863 the day seemed to dawn. God raised up men and opened their hearts to help onward the work, by starting on its course the HERALD OF LIFE, which has lived as long already as the "Rainbow;" started it seems about the same time.
